That they have a tendency to banish gold and silver from the country.

There is great reason to believe, that, on a close and candid survey, it will be discovered that these charges are either destitute of foundation, or that, as far as the evils they suggest have been found to exist, they have proceeded from other, or partial, or temporary causes, are not inherent in the nature and permanent tendency of such institutions, or are more than counterbalanced by opposite advantages. This survey shall be had in the order in which the charges have been stated. The first of them, is—

That banks serve to increase usury. It is a truth, which ought not to be denied, that the method of conducting business, which is essential to bank operations, has, among us in particular instances, given occasion to usurious transactions. The punctuality in payments, which they necessarily exact, has sometimes obliged those who have adventured beyond both their capital and their credit, to procure money at any price, and, consequently, to resort to usurers for aid.

But experience and practice gradually bring a cure for this evil. A general habit of punctuality among traders is the natural consequence of the necessity of observing it with the bank; a circumstance which itself more than compensates for the evil.

1st Con.—65

sates for any occasional ill which may have sprung from that necessity in the particular under consideration. As far, therefore, as traders depend on each other for pecuniary supplies they can calculate their expectations with greater certainty; and are in proportionably less danger of disappointments, which might compel them to have recourse to so pernicious an expedient as that of borrowing at usury; the mischiefs of which, after a few examples, naturally inspire great care in all but men of desperate circumstances, to avoid the possibility of being subjected to them. One, and not the least of these evils, incident to the use of that expedient, if the fact be known, or even strongly suspected, is loss of credit with the bank itself.

The directors of a bank, too, though in order to extend its business and its popularity in the infancy of an institution, they may be tempted to go further in accommodation than the strict rules of prudence will warrant, grow more circumspect, and as its affairs become better established, and as evils of too great facility are experimentally demonstrated. They become more attentive to the situation and conduct of those with whom they deal; they observe more narrowly their operations and pursuits; they economize the credit they give to those of suspicious solidity; they refuse it to those whose career is more manifestly hazardous. In a word, in the course of practice, from the very nature of things, the interest will make it the policy of a bank to succor the wary and industrious; to discredit the rash and unthrifty; to discountenance both usurious lenders and usurious borrowers.

There is a leading view in which the tendency of banks will be seen to be to abridge rather than to promote usury. This relates to their property of increasing the quantity and quickening the circulation of money. If it be evident that usury will prevail or diminish according to the proportion which the demand for borrowing bears to the quantity of money at market to be lent; what ever has the property just mentioned, whether it be in the shape of paper or coin, by contributing to render the supply more equal to the demand, must tend to counteract the progress of usury.

But bank lending, it is pretended, is an impediment to other kinds of lending; which, by confining the resource of borrowing to a particular class, leaves the rest of the community more destitute, and, therefore, more exposed to the extortions of usurers. As the profits of bank stock exceed the legal rate of interest, the possessors of money, it is urged, prefer investing it in that article to lending it at this rate; to which there are the additional motives of a more prompt command of the capital, and of more frequent and exact returns, without trouble or perplexity in the collection. This constitutes the second charge which has been enumerated.

The fact on which this charge rests is not to be admitted without several qualifications; particularly in reference to the state of things in this country.

First. The great bulk of the stock of a bank will consist of the funds of men in trade among ourselves, and moneyed foreigners; the former of whom could not spare their capitals out of their reach, to be invested on loans for long periods on mortgages or personal security; and the latter of whom would not be willing to be subjected to the casualties, delays, and embarrassments of such a disposition of their money in a distant country.

Report on a National Bank.

Secondly. There will always be a considerable proportion of those who are properly the money lenders of a country, who, from that spirit of caution which usually characterizes this description of men, will incline rather to vest their funds in mortgages on real estate than in the stock of a bank, which they are apt to consider as a more precarious security.

These considerations serve, in a material degree, to narrow the foundation of the objection as to the point of fact. But there is a more satisfactory answer to it. The effect supposed, as far as it has existence, is temporary. The reverse of it takes place in the general and permanent operation of the thing.

The capital of every public bank will, of course, be restricted within a certain defined limit. It is the province of legislative prudence so to adjust this limit that, while it will not be too contracted for the demand which the course of business may create, and for the security which the public ought to have for the solidity of the paper which may be issued by the bank, it will still be within the compass of the pecuniary resources of the community; so that there may be an easy practicability of completing the subscriptions to it. When this is once done, the supposed effect of necessity ceases. There is then no longer room for the investment of any additional capital. Stock may, indeed, change hands by one person selling and another buying, but the money which the buyer takes out of the common mass to purchase the stock the seller redeems and restores to it. Hence, the future surpluses which may accumulate must take their natural course, and lending at interest must go on as if there were no such institution.

It must, indeed, flow in a more copious stream. The bank furnishes an extraordinary supply for borrowers within its immediate sphere. A larger supply consequently remains for borrowers elsewhere. In proportion as the circulation of the bank is extended, there is an augmentation of the aggregate mass of money for answering the aggregate mass of demand. Hence greater facility in obtaining it for every purpose.

It ought not to escape without a remark, that, as far as the citizens of other countries become adventurers in the bank, there is a positive increase of the gold and silver of the country. It is true that from this a half-yearly rent is drawn back, accruing from the dividends upon the stock. But as this rent arises from the employment of the capital by our own citizens, it is probable that it is more than replaced by the profits of that employment. It is also likely that a part of it is, in the course of trade, converted into the products of our country; and it may even prove an incentive in some cases to emigration to a country in which the character of citizen is as easy to be acquired as it is estimable and important. This view of the subject furnishes an answer to an objection which has been deduced from the circumstance here taken notice of, namely, the income resulting to foreigners from the part of the stock owned by them, which has been represented as tending to drain the country of its specie. In this objection, the original investment of the capital, and the constant use of it afterwards, seem both to have been overlooked.

That banks furnish temptations to overtrading is the third of the enumerated objections. This must mean that, by affording additional aids to mercantile enterprise, they induce the merchant sometimes to adventure beyond the prudent or salutary point. But the very statement of the thing shows that the subject of the charge is an occasional ill incident to a general good. Credit of every kind (as a species of which, only, can bank-lending have the effect supposed) must be, in different degrees, chargeable with the same inconvenience. It is even applicable to gold and silver when they abound in circulation. But would it be wise, on this account, to decry the precious metals, to root out credit, or to proscribe the means of that enterprise which is the mainspring of trade, and a principal source of national wealth, because it now and then runs into excesses, of which overtrading is one?

If the abuses of a beneficial thing are to determine its condemnation, there is scarcely a source of public prosperity which will not speedily be closed. In every case the evil is to be compared with the good; and in the present case such a comparison would issue in this, that the new and increased energies derived to commercial enterprise from the aid of banks are a source of general profit and advantage, which greatly outweigh the partial ills of the overtrading of a few individuals at particular times, or of numbers in particular conjunctures.

The fourth and fifth charges may be considered together. These relate to the aid which is sometimes afforded by banks to unskilful adventurers and fraudulent traders. These charges, also, have some degree of foundation, though far less than has been pretended; and they add to the instances of partial ills, connected with more extensive and overbalancing benefits.

The practice of giving fictitious credit to improper persons is one of those evils which experience, guided by interest, speedily corrects. The bank itself is in so much jeopardy of being a sufferer by it, that it has the strongest of all inducements to be on its guard. It may not only be injured immediately by the delinquencies of the persons to whom such credit is given, but eventually by the incapacities of others whom their impositions or failures may have ruined.

Nor is there much danger of a bank's being betrayed into this error from want of information. The directors themselves being, for the most part, selected from the class of traders, are to be expected to possess individually an accurate knowledge of the character and situation of those who come within that description. And they have, in addition to this, the course of dealing of the persons themselves with the bank to assist their judgment, which is, in most cases, a good index of the state in which those persons are. The artifices and shifts, which those in desperate or declining circumstances are obliged to employ to keep up the countenance which the rules of the bank require, and the train of their connexions, are so many prognostics, not difficult to be interpreted, of the fate which awaits them. Hence, it not unfrequently happens that banks are the first to discover the unsoundness of such characters, and by withholding credit to announce to the public that they are not entitled to it.

Report on a National Bank.

If banks, in spite of every precaution, are sometimes betrayed into giving a false credit to the persons described, they more frequently enable honest and industrious men of small, or, perhaps, of no capital, to undertake and prosecute business with advantage to themselves and to the community; and to assist merchants, of both capital and credit, who meet with fortuitous and unforeseen shocks, which might, without such helps, prove fatal to them and to others, to make head against their misfortunes, and, finally, to retrieve their affairs—circumstances which form no inconsiderable encomium on the utility of banks.

But, the last and heaviest charge is still to be examined: that is, that banks tend to banish the gold and silver of the country.

The force of this objection rests on their being an engine of paper credit, which, by furnishing a substitute for the metals, is supposed to promote their exportation. It is an objection which, if it has any foundation, lies not against banks peculiarly, but against every species of paper credit.

The most common answer given to it is, that the thing supposed is of little or no consequence; that it is immaterial what serves the purpose of money, whether paper, or gold and silver; that the effect of both upon industry is the same; and that the intrinsic wealth of a nation is to be measured, not by the abundance of the precious metals contained in it, but by the quantity of the productions of its labor and industry.

This answer is not destitute of solidity, though not entirely satisfactory. It is certain that the vivification of industry, by a full circulation, with the aid of a proper and well regulated paper credit, may more than compensate for the loss of a part of the gold and silver of a nation, if the consequence of avoiding that loss should be a scanty or defective circulation.

But the positive and permanent increase or decrease of the precious metals in a country can hardly ever be a matter of indifference. As the commodity taken in lieu of every other, it is a species of the most effective wealth; and as the money of the world, it is of great concern to the State that it possess a sufficiency of it to face any demands which the protection of its external interests may create.

The objection seems to admit of another and a more conclusive answer, which controverts the fact itself. A nation that has no mines of its own must derive the precious metals from others; generally speaking, in exchange for the products of its labor and industry. The quantity it will possess will, therefore, in the ordinary course of things, be regulated by the favorable or unfavorable balance of its trade; that is, by the proportion between its abilities to supply foreigners and its wants of them; between the amount of its exportations and that of its importations. Hence, the state of its agriculture and manufactures, the quantity and quality of its labor and industry, must, in the main, influence and determine the increase or decrease of its gold and silver.

If this be true, the inference seems to be that well constituted banks favor the increase of the precious metals. It has been shown that they augment, in different ways, the active capital of a country. This it is which generates employment; which animates and expands labor and industry. Every addition which is made to it, by contributing to put in motion a greater quantity of both, tends to create a greater quantity of the products of both; and by furnishing more materials for exportation, conduces to a favorable balance of trade, and, consequently, to the introduction and increase of gold and silver.

This conclusion appears to be drawn from solid premises. There are, however, objections to be made to it.

It may be said, that as bank paper affords a substitute for specie, it serves to counteract that rigorous necessity for the metals as a medium of circulation, which, in the case of a wrong balance, might restrain in some degree their exportation; and it may be added that, from the same cause, in the same case it would retard those economical and parsimonious reforms in the manner of living which the scarcity of money is calculated to produce, and which might be necessary to rectify such wrong balance.

There is, perhaps, some truth in both these observations; but they appear to be of a nature rather to form exceptions to the generality of the conclusion than to overthrow it. The state of things in which the absolute exigencies of circulation can be supposed to resist, with any effect, the urgent demands for specie which a wrong balance of trade may occasion, presents an extreme case. And a situation in which a too expensive manner of living of a community, compared with its means, can stand in need of a corrective from distress or necessity, is one which, perhaps, rarely results but from extraordinary and adventitious causes; such, for example, as a national revolution, which unsettles all the established habits of the people, and inflames the appetite for extravagance, by the illusions of an ideal wealth, engendered by the continual multiplication of a depreciating currency, or some similar cause. There is good reason to believe that where the laws are wise and well executed, and the inviolability of property and contracts maintained, the economy of a people will, in the general course of things, correspond with its means.

The support of industry is, probably, in every case, of more consequence towards correcting a wrong balance of trade than any practicable re-trenchments in the expenses of families or individuals; and the stagnation of it would be likely to have more effect in prolonging than any such savings in shortening its continuance. That stagnation is a natural consequence of an inadequate medium, which, without the aid of bank circulation, would, in the cases supposed, be severely felt.

It also deserves notice, that as the circulation is always in a compound ratio to the fund upon which it depends, and to the demand for it, and as that fund is itself affected by the exportation of the metals, there is no danger of its being overstocked, as in the case of paper issued at the pleasure of the Government, or of its preventing the consequences of any unfavorable balance from being sufficiently felt to produce the reforms alluded to, as far as circumstances may require and admit.

Nothing can be more fallible than the comparisons which have been made between different countries, to illustrate the truth of the position under consideration. The comparative quantity of gold and silver in different countries depends upon an infinite variety of facts and combinations, all of which ought to be known, in order to judge whether the existence or non-existence of paper currencies has any share in the relative proportions they contain. The mass and value of the productions of the labor and industry of each compared with its wants; the nature of its establishments abroad; the relation it bears to the countries which are the original possessors of those metals; the privileges it enjoys in their trade; these, and a number of other circumstances, are all to be taken into the account, and render the investigation too complex to justify any reliance on the vague and general surmises which have been hitherto hazarded on the point.

In the foregoing discussion the objection has been considered as applying to the permanent expulsion and diminution of the metals. Their temporary exportation for particular purposes has not been contemplated. This, it must be confessed, is facilitated by banks, from the facility they possess of supplying their place. But their utility is in nothing more conspicuous than in these very cases. They enable the Government to pay its foreign debts, and to answer any exigencies which the external concerns of the community may have produced. They enable the merchant to support his credit, (on which the prosperity of trade depends,) when special circumstances prevent remittances in other modes. They enable him also to prosecute enterprises which ultimately tend to an augmentation of the species of wealth in question.

It is evident that gold and silver may often be employed in procuring commodities abroad, which, in a circuitous commerce, replace the original fund with considerable addition. But it is not to be inferred from this facility given to temporary exportation, that banks, which are so friendly to trade and industry, are, in their general tendency, inimical to the increase of the precious metals.

These several views of the subject appear sufficient to impress a full conviction of the utility of banks, and to demonstrate that they are of great importance, not only in relation to the administration of the finances, but in the general system of political economy.

The judgment of many concerning them has, no doubt, been perplexed by the misinterpretation of appearances which were to be ascribed to other causes. The general devastation of personal property, occasioned by the late war, naturally produced, on the one hand, a great demand for money, and, on the other, a great deficiency of it which grew out of the public distresses, by impairing confidence, and causing a part of the inadequate sum in the country to be locked up, aggravated the evil.

The dissipated habits contracted by many individuals during the war, which, after the peace, plunged them into expenses beyond their incomes; the number of adventurers without capital, and, in many instances, without information, who at that epoch rushed into trade, and were obliged to make any sacrifices to support a transient credit; the employment of considerable sums in speculations upon the public debt, which, from its unsettled state, was incapable of becoming itself a substitute; all these circumstances concurring, necessarily led to usurious borrowing, produced most of the inconveniences, and were the true causes of most of the appearances which, where banks were established, have been by some erroneously placed to their account—a mistake which they might easily have avoided by turning their eyes towards places where there were none, and where, nevertheless, the same evils would have been perceived to exist, even in a greater degree than where those institutions had obtained.

These evils have either ceased, or been greatly mitigated. Their more complete extinction may be looked for from that additional security to property which the Constitution of the United States happily gives; (a circumstance of prodigious moment in the scale, both of public and private prosperity,) from the attraction of foreign capital, under the auspices of that security, to be employed upon objects and in enterprises for which the state of this country opens a wide and inviting field; from the consistency and stability which the public debt is fast acquiring, as well in the public opinion at home and abroad, as, in fact, from the augmentation of capital which that circumstance and the quarter-yearly payment of interest will afford; and from the more copious circulation which will be likely to be created by a well constituted National Bank.

The establishment of banks in this country seems to be recommended by reasons of a peculiar nature. Previously to the Revolution, circulation was in a great measure carried on by paper emitted by the several local Governments. In Pennasylvania alone, the quantity of it was near a million and a half of dollars.

This auxiliary may be said to be now at an end. And it is generally supposed that there has been, for some time past, a deficiency of circulating medium. How far that deficiency is to be considered as real or imaginary, is not susceptible of demonstration; but there are circumstances and appearances which, in relation to the country at large, countenance the supposition of its reality.

The circumstances are, besides the fact just mentioned respecting paper emissions, the vast tracts of waste land, and the little advanced state of manufactures. The progressive settlement of the former, while it promises ample retribution, in the generation of future resources, diminishes or obstructs, in the mean time, the active wealth of the country. It not only draws off a part of the circulating money, and places it in a more passive state, but it diverts into its own channels a portion of that species of labor and industry which would otherwise be employed in furnishing materials for foreign trade, and which, by contributing to a favorable balance, would assist the introduction of specie.

In the early periods of new settlements, the settlers not only furnish no surplus for exportation, but they consume a part of that which is produced by the labor of others. The same thing is a cause that manufactures do not advance, or advance slowly. And notwithstanding some hypotheses to the contrary, there are many things to induce a suspicion that the precious metals will not abound in any country which has not mines, or variety of manufactures. They have been sometimes acquired by the sword; but the modern system of war has expelled this resource, and it is one upon which it is to be hoped the United States will never be inclined to rely.

The appearances alluded to are, greater prevalence of direct barter, in the more interior districts of the country, which, however, has been for some time past gradually lessening; and greater difficulty, generally, in the advantageous alienation of improved real estate; which, also, has of late diminished, but is still seriously felt in different parts of the Union. The difficulty of getting money, which has been a general complaint, is not added to the number; because it is the complaint of all times, and one in which imagination must ever have too great scope to permit an appeal to it.

If the supposition of such a deficiency be in any degree founded, and some aid to circulation be desirable, it remains to inquire what ought to be the nature of that aid.

The emitting of paper money by the authority of Government, is wisely prohibited to the individual States by the national Constitution, and the spirit of that prohibition ought not to be disregarded by the Government of the United States. Though paper emissions, under a general authority, might have some advantage not applicable, and be free from some disadvantages which are applicable to the like emissions by the States, separately, yet they are of a nature so liable to abuse—and, it may even be affirmed, so certain of being abused, that the wisdom of the Government will be shown in never trusting itself with the use of so seducing and dangerous an expedient. In times of tranquillity, it might have no ill consequence; it might even perhaps be managed in a way to be productive of good; but, in great and trying emergencies, there is almost a moral certainty of its becoming mischievous. The stamping of paper is an operation so much easier than the laying of taxes, that a Government, in the practice of paper emissions, would rarely fail, in any such emergency, to indulge itself too far in the employment of that resource, to avoid, as much as possible, one less auspicious to present popularity. If it should not even be carried so far as to be rendered an absolute bubble, it would at least be likely to be extended to a degree which would occasion an inflated and artificial state of things, incompatible with the regular and prosperous course of political economy.

Among other material differences between a paper currency issued by the mere authority of Government, and one issued by a bank, payable in coin, is this: That, in the first case, there is no standard to which an appeal can be made, as to the quantity which will only satisfy, or which will surcharge the circulation: in the last, that standard results from the demand. If more should be issued than is necessary, it will return upon the bank. Its emissions, as elsewhere intimated, must always be in a compound ratio to the fund and the demand: whence it is evident, that there is a limitation in the nature of the thing; while the discretion of the Government is the only measure of the extent of the emissions, by its own authority.

This consideration further illustrates the danger of emissions of that sort, and the preference which is due to bank paper.

The payment of the interest of the public debt, at thirteen different places, is a weighty reason, peculiar to our immediate situation, for desiring a bank circulation. Without a paper, in general currency, equivalent to gold and silver, a considerable proportion of the specie of the country must always be suspended from circulation, and left to accumulate, preparatory to each day of payment; and as often as one approaches, there must in several cases be an actual transportation of the metals, at both expense and risk, from their natural and proper reservoirs to distant places. This necessity will be felt very injuriously to the trade of some of the States; and will embarrass, not a little, the operations of the treasury in those States. It will also obstruct those negotiations between different parts of the Union, by the instrumentality of treasury bills, which have already afforded valuable accommodations to trade in general.

Assuming it, then, as a consequence, from what has been said, that a National Bank is a desirable institution, two inquiries emerge: Is there no such institution, already in being, which has a claim to that character, and which supersedes the propriety or necessity of another? If there be none, what are the principles upon which one ought to be established?

Report on a National Bank.

There are at present three banks in the United States: that of North America, established in the city of Philadelphia; that of New York, established in the city of New York; that of Massachusetts, established in the town of Boston. Of these three, the first is the only one which has at any time had a direct relation to the Government of the United States.

The Bank of North America originated in a resolution of Congress of the 26th of May, 1781, founded upon a proposition of the Superintendent of Finance, which was afterwards carried into execution by an ordinance of the 31st of December following, entitled "An ordinance to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of North America."

The aid afforded to the United States by this institution, during the remaining period of the war, was of essential consequence; and its conduct towards them since the peace, has not weakened its title to their patronage and favor. So far, its pretensions to the character in question are respectable; but there are circumstances which militate against them, and considerations which indicate the propriety of an establishment on different principles.

The directors of this bank, on behalf of their constituents, have since accepted, and acted under a new charter, from the State of Pennsylvania, materially variant from their original one, and which so narrows the foundation of the institution, as to render it an incompetent basis for the extensive purposes of a National Bank.

The limit assigned by the ordinance of Congress to the stock of the bank, is ten millions of dollars. The last charter of Pennsylvania confines it to two millions. Questions naturally arise, whether there be a not a direct repugnancy between two charters so differently circumstanced? and whether the acceptance of the one is not to be deemed a virtual surrender of the other? But, perhaps, it is neither advisable nor necessary to attempt a solution of them.

There is nothing in the acts of Congress which imply an exclusive right in the institution to which they relate, except during the term of the war. There is, therefore, nothing, if the public good require it, which prevents the establishment of another. It may, however, be incidentally remarked, that, in the general opinion of the citizens of the United States, the Bank of North America has taken the station of a bank of Pennsylvania only. This is a strong argument for a new institution, or for a renovation of the old, to restore it to the situation in which it originally stood in the view of the United States.

But, though the ordinance of Congress contains no grant of exclusive privileges, there may be room to allege, that the Government of the United States ought not, in point of candor and equity, to establish any rival or interfering institution, in prejudice of the one already established; especially as this has, from services rendered, well founded claims to protection and regard.

The justice of such an observation ought, without proper bounds, to be admitted. A new establishment of the sort ought not to be made without cogent and sincere reasons of public good. And, in the manner of doing it, every facility should be given to a consolidation of the old with the new, upon terms not injurious to the parties concerned. But there is no ground to maintain that, in a case in which the Government has made no condition restricting its authority, it ought voluntarily to restrict it, through regard to the interests of a particular institution, when those of the State dictate a different course; especially, too, after such circumstances have intervened, as characterize the actual situation of the Bank of North America.

The inducements to a new disposition of the thing are now to be considered. The first of them which occurs is, the, at least, ambiguous situation in which the Bank of North America has placed itself, by the acceptance of its last charter. If this has rendered it the mere bank of a particular State, liable to dissolution at the expiration of fourteen years, to which term the act of that State has restricted its duration, it would be neither fit nor expedient to accept it as an equivalent for a Bank of the United States.

The restriction of its capital, also, which, according to the same supposition, cannot be extended beyond two millions of dollars, is a conclusive reason for a different establishment. So small a capital promises neither the requisite aid to Government, nor the requisite security to the community. It may answer very well the purposes of local accommodation, but is an inadequate foundation for a circulation co-extensive with the United States, embracing the whole of their revenues, and affecting every individual into whose hands the paper may come.

And, inadequate as such a capital would be to the essential ends of a National Bank, it is liable to being rendered still more so, by that principle of the constitution of the Bank of North America, contained equally in its old and in its new charter, which leaves the increase of the actual capital at any time (now far short of the allowed extent) to the discretion of the directors or stockholders. It is naturally to be expected, that the allurements of an advanced price of stock, and of large dividends, may disincite those who are interested to an extension of capital, from which they will be apt to fear a diminution of profits. And for this circumstance, the interest and accommodation of the public (as well individually as collectively) are made more subordinate to the interest, real or imagined, of the stockholders, than they ought to be. It is true, that, unless the latter be consulted, there can be no bank, in the sense at least in which institutions of this kind, worthy of confidence, can be established in this country. But it does not follow that this is alone to be consulted, or that it even ought to be paramount. Public utility is more truly the object of public banks than private profit. And it is the business of Government to constitute them on such principles, that, while the latter will result in a sufficient degree to afford competent motives to engage in them, the former be not made subservient to it. To effect this, a principal object of attention ought to be to give free scope to the creation of an ample capital, and with this view, fixing the bounds which are deemed safe and convenient, to leave no discretion either to stop short of them, or to overpass them. The want of this precaution in the establishment of the Bank of North America is a further and important reason for dearing one differently constituted.

Report on a National Bank.

There may be room at first sight for supposition, that, as the profits of a bank will bear a proportion to the extent of its operations, and as for this reason the interest of the stockholders will not be disadvantageously affected by any necessary augmentations of capital, there is no cause to apprehend that they will be indisposed to such augmentations. But most men, in matters of this nature, prefer the certainties they enjoy, to probabilities depending on untried experiments, especially, when these promise rather that they will not be injured, than that they will be benefited.

From the influence of this principle, and a desire of enhancing its profits, the directors of a bank will be more apt to overstrain its facilities, in an attempt to face the additional demands which the course of business may create, than to set on foot new subscriptions, which may hazard a diminution of the profits, and even a temporary reduction of the price of stock.

Banks are among the best expedients for lowering the rate of interest in a country; but, to have this effect, their capitals must be completely equal to all the demands of business, and such as will tend to remove the idea, that the accommodations they afford are in any degree favors—an idea very apt to accompany the parsimonious dispensation of contracted funds. In this, as in every other case, the plenty of the commodity ought to beget a moderation of the price.

The want of a principle of rotation in the constitution of the Bank of North America is another argument for a variation of the establishment. Scarcely one of the reasons which militate against this principle in the Constitution of a country, is applicable to that of a bank; while there are strong reasons in favor of it, in relation to the one, which do not apply to the other. The knowledge to be derived from experience is the only circumstance common to both, which pleads against rotation in the directing officers of a bank.

But the objects of the Government of a nation, and those of the government of a bank, are so widely different, as greatly to weaken the force of that consideration in reference to the latter. Almost every important case of legislation requires, towards a right decision, a general and accurate acquaintance with the affairs of the State, and habits of thinking seldom acquired but from a familiarity with public concerns. The administration of a bank, on the contrary, is regulated by a few simple fixed maxims, the application of which is not difficult to any man of judgment, especially if instructed in the principles of trade. It is, in general, a constant succession of the same details.

But, though this be the case, the idea of the advantages of experience is not to be slighted. Room ought to be left for the regular transmission of official information; and, for this purpose, the head of the direction ought to be excepted from the principle of rotation. With this exception, and with the aid of the information of the subordinate officers, there can be no danger of any ill effects from want of experience or knowledge; especially as the periodical exclusion ought not to reach the whole of the directors at one time.

The argument in favor of the principle of rotation is this: that, by lessening the danger of combination among the directors, to make the institution subservient to party views, or to the accommodation, preferably, of any particular set of men, it will render the public confidence more firm, stable, and unqualified.

When it is considered that the directors of a bank are not elected by the great body of the community, in which a diversity of views will naturally prevail at different conjunctures, but by a small and select class of men, among whom it is far more easy to cultivate a steady adherence to the same persons and objects, and that those directors have it in their power so immediately to conciliate, by obliging the most influential of this class, it is easy to perceive that, without the principle of rotation, changes in that body can rarely happen, but as a concession which they may themselves think it expedient to make to public opinion.

The continual administration of an institution of this kind, by the same persons, will never fail, with or without abuse, from their conduct, to excite distrust and discontent. The necessary secrecy of their transactions gives unlimited scope to imagination to infer that something is or may be wrong. And this inevitable mystery is a solid reason for inserting in the constitution of a bank the necessity of a change of men. As neither the mass of the parties interested, nor the public in general, can be permitted to be witnesses of the interior management of the directors, it is reasonable that both should have that check upon their conduct, and that security against the prevalence of a partial or pernicious system, which will be produced by the certainty of periodical changes. Such, too, is the delicacy of the credit of a bank, that every thing which can fortify confidence and repel suspicion, without injuring its operations, ought carefully to be sought after in its formation.

A further consideration in favor of a change is the improper rule by which the right of voting for directors is regulated in the plan upon which the Bank of North America was originally constituted, namely, a vote for each share, and the want of a rule in the last charter; unless the silence of it, on that point, may signify that every stockholder is to have an equal and a single vote; which would be a rule in a different extreme, not less eraneous. It is of importance that a rule should be established on this head, as it is one of those things which ought not to be left to discretion; and it is consequently, of equal importance that the rule should be a proper one.

A vote from each share renders a combination between a few principal stockholders, to monopolize the power and benefits of the bank, too easy. An equal vote to each stockholder, however great or small his interest in the institution, allows not that degree of weight to large stockholders which it is reasonable they should have, and which, perhaps, their security and that of a bank require. A prudent mean is to be preferred. A conviction of this has produced a by-law of the corporation of the Bank of North America, which evidently aims at such a mean. But a reflection arises here, that a like majority with that which enacted this law may, at any moment, repeal it.

The last inducement which shall be mentioned, is the want of precautions to guard against a foreign influence insinuating itself into the direction of the bank. It seems scarcely reconcilable with a due caution, to permit that any but citizens should be eligible, as directors of a National Bank, or that non-resident foreigners should be able to influence the appointment of directors by the votes of their proxies. In the event, however, of an incorporation on the plan of the Bank of North America, it may be necessary to qualify this principle, so as to leave the right of foreigners, who now hold shares of its stock, unimpaired; but without the power of transmitting the privilege in question to foreign alliances.

It is to be considered that such a bank is not a mere matter of private property, but a political machine, of the greatest importance to the State. There are other variations from the constitution of the Bank of North America, not of inconsiderable moment, which appear desirable, but which are not of magnitude enough to claim a preliminary discussion. These will be seen in the plan which will be submitted in the sequel.

If the objections which have been stated to the constitution of the Bank of North America are admitted to be well founded, they will, nevertheless, not derogate from the merit of the main design, or of the services which that bank has rendered, or of the benefits which it has produced. The creation of such an institution, at the time it took place, was a measure dictated by wisdom. Its utility has been amply evinced by its fruits; American independence owes much to it. And it is very conceivable, that reasons of the moment may have rendered those features in it inexpedient, which a revision, with a permanent view, suggests as desirable.

The order of the subject leads next to an inquiry into the principles upon which a National Bank ought to be organized.

The situation of the United States naturally inspires a wish that the form of the institution could admit of a plurality of branches. But various considerations discourage from pursuing this idea. The complexity of such a plan would be apt to inspire doubts, which might deter from adventuring in it. And the practicability of a safe and orderly administration, though not to be abandoned as desperate, cannot be made so manifest in perspective, as to promise the removal of those doubts, or to justify the Government in adopting the idea as an original experiment. The most that would seem advisable, on this point, is to insert a provision which may lead to it hereafter, if experience shall more clearly demonstrate its utility, and satisfy those who may have the direction, that it may be adopted with safety. It is certain, that it would have some advantages, both peculiar and important. Besides more general accommodation, it would lessen the danger of a run upon the bank.

The argument against it is, that each branch must be under a distinct, though subordinate direction, to which a considerable latitude of discretion must, of necessity, be intrusted. And, as the property of the whole institution would be liable for the engagements of each part, that and its credit would be at stake, upon the prudence of the directors of every part. The mismanagement of either branch might hazard serious disorder in the whole.

Another wish, dictated by the particular situation of the country is, that the bank could be so constituted as to be made an immediate instrument of loans to the proprietors of land; but this wish also yields to the difficulty of accomplishing it. Land is, alone, an unfit fund for bank circulation. If the notes issued upon it were not to be payable in coin, on demand, or at a short date, this would amount to nothing more than a repetition of the paper emissions, which are now exploded by the general voice. If the notes are to be payable in coin, the land must first be converted into it by sale or mortgage. The difficulty of effecting the latter is the very thing which begets the desire of finding another resource; and the former would not be practicable on a sudden emergency, but with sacrifices which would make the cure worse than the disease. Neither is the idea of constituting the fund partly of coin and partly of land, free from impediments. These two species of property do not, for the most part, unite in the same hands. Will the moneyed man consent to enter into partnership with the landholder, by which the latter will share in the profits which will be made by the money of the former? The money, it is evident, will be the agent or efficient cause of the profits—the land can only be regarded as an additional security. It is not difficult to foresee, that a union, on such terms, will not readily be formed. If the landholders are to procure the money by sale or mortgage of a part of their lands, this they can as well do when the stock consists wholly of money, as if it were to be compounded of money and land.

To procure for the landholders the assistance of loans, is the great desideratum. Supposing other difficulties surmounted, and a fund created, composed partly of coin and partly of land, yet the benefit contemplated could only then be obtained by the bank's advancing them its notes for the whole, or part, of the value of the lands they had subscribed to the stock. If this advance was small, the relief aimed at would not be given; if it was large, the quantity of notes issued would be a cause of distrust; and, if received at all, they would be likely to return speedily upon the bank for payment; which, after exhausting its coin, might be under a necessity of turning its lands into money, at any price that could be obtained for them, to the irreparable prejudice of the proprietors.

Considerations of public advantage suggest a further wish, which is—that the bank could be established upon principles, that would cause the profits of it to redound to the immediate benefit of the State. This is contemplated by many who speak of a National Bank, but the idea seems liable to insuperable objections. To attach full confidence to an institution of this nature, it appears to be an essential ingredient in its structure, that it shall be under a private not a public direction, under the guidance of individual interest, not of public policy; which would be supposed to be, and, in certain emergencies under a feeble or too sanguine administration, would really be liable to being too much influenced by public necessity. The suspicion of this would, most probably, be a canker that would continually corrode the vitals of the credit of the bank, and would be most likely to prove fatal in those situations in which the public good would require that they should be most sound and vigorous. It would, indeed, be little less than a miracle, should the credit of the bank be at the disposal of the Government, if, in a long series of time, there was not experienced a calamitous abuse of it. It is true, that it would be the real interest of the Government not to abuse it: its genuine policy to husband and cherish it with the most guarded circumspection as an inestimable treasure. But what Government ever uniformly consulted its true interests in opposition to the temptations of momentary exigencies? What nation was ever blessed with a constant succession of upright and wise administrators? The keen, steady, and, as it were, magnetic sense of their own interest as proprietors in the direction of a bank, pointing invariably to its true pole—the prosperity of the institution—is the only security that can always be relied upon for a careful and prudent administration. It is, therefore, the only basis on which an enlightened, unqualified, and permanent confidence can be expected to be erected and maintained.

The precedents of the banks established in several cities of Europe, Amsterdam, Hamburg, and others, may seem to militate against this position. Without a precise knowledge of all the peculiarities of their respective constitutions it is difficult to pronounce how far this may be the case. That of Amsterdam, however, which we best know, is rather under a municipal than a governmental direction. Particular magistrates of the city, not officers of the republic, have the management of it. It is also a bank of deposit, not of loan, or circulation; consequently, less liable to abuse, as well as less useful. Its general business consists in receiving money for safe-keeping, which, if not called for within a certain time, becomes a part of its stock, and irreclaimable. But a credit is given for it on the books of the bank, which, being transferable, answers all the purposes of money.

The directors being magistrates of the city, and the stockholders in general its most influential citizens, it is evident that the principle of private interest must be prevalent in the management of the bank. And it is equally evident that, from the nature of its operations, that principle is less essential to it than to an institution constituted with a view to the accommodation of the public and individuals by direct loans and a paper circulation.

As far as may concern the aid of the bank within the proper limits, a good government has nothing more to wish for than it will always possess, though the management be in the hands of private individuals. As the institution, if rightly constituted, must depend for its renovation, from time to time, on the pleasure of the Government, it will not be likely to feel a disposition to render itself, by its conduct, unworthy of public patronage. The Government, too, in the administration of its finances, has it in its power to reciprocate benefits to the bank of not less importance than those which the bank affords to the Government, and which, besides, are never unattended with an immediate and adequate compensation. Independent of these more particular considerations, the natural weight and influence of a good Government will always go far towards procuring a compliance with its desires; and, as the directors will usually be composed of some of the most discreet, respectable, and well informed citizens, it can hardly ever be difficult to make them sensible of the force of the inducements which ought to stimulate their exertions.

It will not follow, from what has been said, that the State may not be the holder of a part of the stock of a bank, and consequently a sharer in the profits of it. It will only follow that it ought not to desire any participation in the direction of it, and, therefore, ought not to own the whole or a principal part of the stock; for, if the mass of the property should belong to the public, and if the direction of it should be in private hands, this would be to commit the interests of the State to persons not interested, or not enough interested in their proper management.

There is one thing, however, which the Government owes to itself and to the community, at least to all that part of it who are not stockholders; which is, to reserve to itself a right of ascertaining, as often as may be necessary, the state of the bank; excluding, however, all pretension to control. This right forms an article in the primitive constitution of the Bank of North America, and its propriety stands upon the clearest reasons. If the paper of a bank is to be permitted to insinuate itself into all the revenues and receipts of a country; if it is even to be tolerated as the substitute for gold and silver in all the transactions of business, it becomes, in either view, a national concern of the first magnitude.

Report on a National Bank.

As such, the ordinary rules of prudence require that the Government should possess the means of ascertaining, whenever it thinks fit, that so delicate a trust is executed with fidelity and care. A right of this nature is not only desirable, as it respects the Government, but it ought to be equally so to all those concerned in the institution, as an additional title to public and private confidence, and as a thing that can only be formidable to practices that imply mismanagement. The presumption must always be that the characters who would be entrusted with the principle of this right, on behalf of the Government, will not be deficient in the discretion which it may require; at least, the admitting of this presumption cannot be deemed too great a return of confidence for that very large portion of it which the Government is required to place in the bank.

Abandoning, therefore, ideas which, however agreeable or desirable, are neither practicable nor safe, the following plan for the constitution of a National Bank is respectfully submitted to the consideration of the House:

1. The capital stock of the bank shall not exceed ten millions of dollars, divided into twenty-five thousand shares, each share being four hundred dollars, to raise which sum subscriptions shall be opened on the first Monday of April next, and shall continue open until the whole shall be subscribed. Bodies politic as well as individuals may subscribe.

2. The amount of each share shall be payable one-fourth in gold and silver coin, and three-fourths in that part of the public debt, which, according to the loan proposed by the act making provision for the debt of the United States, shall bear an accruing interest, at the time of payment, of six per centum per annum.

3. The respective sums subscribed shall be payable in four equal parts, as well specie as debt, in succession, and at the distance of six calendar months from each other; the first payment to be made at the time of subscription. If there shall be a failure in any subsequent payment, the party failing shall lose the benefit of any dividend which may have accrued prior to the time for making such payment, and during the delay of the same.

4. The subscribers to the bank, and their successors, shall be incorporated, and shall so continue until the final redemption of that part of its stock which shall consist of the public debt.

5. The capacity of the corporation to hold real and personal estate shall be limited to fifteen millions of dollars, including the amount of its capital or original stock. The lands and tenements which it shall be permitted to hold shall be only such as shall be requisite for the immediate accommodation of the institution, and such as shall have been bona fide mortgaged to it by way of security, or conveyed to it in satisfaction of debts previously contracted, in the usual course of its dealings, or purchased at sales upon judgments which shall have been obtained for such debts.

6. The totality of the debts of the company, whether by bond, bill, note, or other contract, (credits for deposits excepted) shall never exceed the amount of its capital stock. In case of excess, directors, under whose administration it shall happen, shall be liable for it in their private or separate capacities. Those who may have dissembled may excuse themselves from this responsibility by immediately giving notice of the fact, and their dissent, to the President of the United States, and to the stockholders, at a general meeting to be called by the President of the bank at their request.

7. The company may sell or demise its lands and tenements, or may sell the whole, or any part of the public debt, whereof its stock shall consist; but shall trade in nothing except bills of exchange, gold and silver bullion, or in the sale of goods pledged for money lent; nor shall they take more than at the rate of six per cent. per annum upon its loans or discounts.

8. No loan shall be made by the bank for the use or on account of the Government of the United States, or of either of them, to an amount exceeding fifty thousand dollars, or of any foreign Prince or State, unless previously authorized by a law of the United States.

9. The stock of the bank shall be transferable according to such rules as shall be instituted by the company in that behalf.

10. The affairs of the bank shall be under the management of twenty-five directors, one of whom shall be the President; and there shall be on the first Monday of January, in each year, a choice of directors, by a plurality of suffrages of the stockholders, to serve for a year. The directors, at their first meeting after each election, shall choose one of their number as President.

11. The number of votes to which each stockholder shall be entitled shall be according to the number of shares he shall hold, in the proportions following, that is to say: for one share, and not more than two shares, one vote; for every two shares above two, and not exceeding ten, one vote; for every four shares above ten, and not exceeding thirty, one vote; for every six shares above thirty, and not exceeding sixty, one vote; for every eight shares above sixty, and not exceeding one hundred, one vote; and for every ten shares above one hundred, one vote; but no person, copartnership, or body politic, shall be entitled to a greater number than thirty votes. And, after the first election, no share or shares shall confer a right of suffrage which shall not have been held in three calendar months previous to the day of election. Stockholders actually resident within the United States, and none other, may vote in the elections by proxy.

12. Not more than three-fourths of the directors in office, exclusive of the President, shall be eligible for the next succeeding year. But the director who shall be President at the time of an election may always be re-elected.

13. None but a stockholder, being a citizen of the United States, shall be eligible as a director.

14. Any number of stockholders, not less than sixty, who together shall be proprietors of two hundred shares or upwards, shall have power at any time to call a general meeting of the stockholders for purposes relative to the institution, giving at least six weeks notice, in two public gazettes of the place where the bank is kept, and specifying, in such notice, the object of the meeting.

Report on a National Bank.

15. In case of the death, resignation, absence from the United States, or removal, of a director by the stockholders, his place may be filled by a new choice for the remainder of the year.

16. No director shall be entitled to any emolument, unless the same shall have been allowed by the stockholders at a general meeting. The stockholders shall make such compensation to the President for his extraordinary attendance at the bank as shall appear to them reasonable.

17. Not less than seven directors shall constitute a board for the transaction of business.

18. Every cashier or treasurer, before he enters on the duties of his office, shall be required to give bond, with two or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the directors, in a sum not less than twenty thousand dollars, with condition for his good behaviour.

19. Half-yearly dividends shall be made of so much of the profits of the bank as shall appear to the directors advisable. And, once in every three years, the directors shall lay before the stockholders at a general meeting, for their information, an exact and particular statement of the debts which shall have remained unpaid after the expiration of the original credit, for a period of treble the term of that credit, and of the surplus of profit, if any, after deducting losses and dividends.

20. The bills and notes of the bank, originally made payable, or which shall have become payable on demand in gold and silver coin, shall be receivable in all payments to the United States.

21. The officer at the head of the Treasury Department of the United States shall be furnished, from time to time, as often as he may require, not exceeding once a week, with statements of the amount of the capital stock of the bank, and of the debts due to the same; of the moneys deposited therein, of the notes in circulation, and of the cash in hand; and shall have a right to inspect such general accounts in the books of the bank as shall relate to the said statements, provided that this shall not be construed to imply a right of inspecting the account of any private individual or individuals with the bank.

22. No similar institution shall be established by any future act of the United States during the continuance of the one hereby proposed to be established.

23. It shall be lawful for the directors of the bank to establish offices wheresoever they shall think fit within the United States, for the purposes of discount and deposit, only and upon the same terms, and in the same manner, as shall be practised at the bank, and to commit the management of the said offices and the making of the said discounts, either to agents specially appointed by them, or to such persons as may be chosen by the stockholders residing at the place where any such office shall be, under such agreements, and subject to such regulations, as they shall deem proper, not being contrary to law or to the constitution of the bank.

24. And lastly, the President of the United States shall be authorized to cause a subscription to be made to the stock of the said company, on behalf of the United States, to an amount not exceeding two millions of dollars, to be paid out of the moneys which shall be borrowed by virtue of either of the acts, the one, entitled "An act making provision for the debt of the United States," and the other, entitled "An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt," borrowing of the bank an equal sum, to be applied to the purposes for which the said moneys shall have been procured, reimbursable in ten years, by equal annual instalments; or at any time sooner, or in any greater proportions than the Government may think fit.

The reasons for the several provisions contained in the foregoing plan have been so far anticipated, and will, for the most part, be so readily suggested by the nature of those provisions, that any comments which need further be made will be both few and concise.

The combination of a portion of the public debt, in the formation of the capital, is the principal thing of which an explanation is requisite. The chief object of this is to enable the creation of a capital sufficiently large to be the basis of an extensive circulation, and an adequate security for it. As has been elsewhere remarked, the original plan of the Bank of North America contemplated a capital of ten millions of dollars, which is certainly not too broad a foundation for the extensive operations to which a National Bank is destined. But to collect such a sum in this country in gold and silver into one depository may, without hesitation, be pronounced impracticable. Hence the necessity of an auxiliary, which the public debt at once presents.

This part of the fund will be always ready to come in aid of the specie; it will more and more command a ready sale; and can, therefore, expectantly be turned into coin, if an exigency of the bank should at any time require it. This quality of prompt convertibility into coin renders it an equivalent for that necessary agent of bank circulation, and distinguishes it from a fund in land, of which the sale would generally be far less expeditious, and at greater disadvantage. The quarter-yearly receipts of interest will also be an actual addition to the specie fund, during the intervals between them and the half-yearly dividends of profits. The objection to combining land with specie, resulting from their not being generally in possession of the same persons, does not apply to the debt, which will always be found in considerable quantities among the moneyed and trading people.

The debt composing part of the capital, besides its collateral effect in enabling the bank to extend its operations, and consequently to enlarge its profits, will produce a direct annual revenue of six per centum from the Government, which will enter into the half-yearly dividends received by the stockholders.

When the present price of the public debt is considered, and the effect which its conversion into bank stock, incorporated with a specie fund, would, in all probability, have to accelerate its rise to the proper point, it will easily be discovered that the operation presents in its outset a very considerable advantage to those who may become subscribers; and from the influence which that rise would have on the general mass of the debt, a proportional benefit to all the public creditors, and, in the sense which has been more than once adverted to, to the community at large.

There is an important fact, which exemplifies the fitness of the public debt for a bank fund, and which may serve to remove doubts in some minds on this point; it is this, that the Bank of England, in its first erection, rested wholly on that foundation. The subscribers to a loan to Government of one million two hundred thousand pounds sterling were incorporated as a bank, of which the debt created by the loan and the interest upon it were the sole fund. The subsequent augmentations of its capital, which now amounts to between eleven and twelve millions of pounds sterling, have been of the same nature.

The confining of the rights of the bank to contract debts to the amount of its capital is an important precaution, which is not to be found in the constitution of the Bank of North America, and which, while the fund consists wholly of coin, would be a restriction attended with inconveniences, but would be free from any if the composition of it should be such as is now proposed.

The restriction exists in the establishment of the Bank of England, and as a source of security is worthy of imitation. The consequence of exceeding the limit there is, that each stockholder is liable for the excess, in proportion to his interest in the bank. When it is considered that the directors owe their appointments to the choice of the stockholders, a responsibility of this kind, on the part of the latter, does not appear unreasonable; but, on the other hand, it may be deemed a hardship upon those who may have dissented from the choice. And there are many among us whom it might perhaps discourage from becoming concerned in the institution. These reasons have induced the placing of a responsibility upon the directors by whom the limit prescribed should be transgressed.

The interdiction of loans on account of the United States, or any particular State, beyond the moderate sum specified, or of any foreign Power, will serve as a barrier to Executive encroachments, and to combinations inauspicious to the safety or contrary to the policy of the Union.

The limitation of the rate of interest is dictated by the consideration that different rates prevail in different parts of the Union; and as the operations of the bank may extend through the whole, some rule seems to be necessary. There is room for a question whether the limitation ought not rather to be to five than to six per cent., as proposed. It may, with safety, be taken for granted, that the former rate would yield an ample dividend, perhaps as much as the latter, by the extension it would give to business. The natural effect of low interest is to increase trade and industry; because undertakings of every kind can be prosecuted with greater advantage. This is a truth generally admitted; but it is requisite to have analyzed the subject in all its relations, to be able to form a just conception of the extent of that effect. Such an analysis cannot but satisfy an intelligent mind that the difference of one per cent. in the rate at which money may be had, is often capable of making an essential change for the better in the situation of any country or place.

Every thing, therefore, which tends to lower the rate of interest, is peculiarly worthy of the care of legislators. And though laws which violently sink the legal rate of interest greatly below the market level are not to be commended, because they are not calculated to answer their aim, yet whatever has a tendency to effect a reduction, without violence to the natural course of things, ought to be attended to and pursued. Banks are among the means most proper to accomplish this end; and the moderation of the rate at which their discounts are made, is a material ingredient towards it; with which and permanent interest, viewed on an enlarged and permanent scale, does not appear to clash.

But, as the most obvious ideas are apt to have greater force than those which depend on complex and remote combinations, there would be danger that the persons whose funds must constitute the stock of the bank, would be diffident of the sufficiency of the profits to be expected, if the rate of loans and discounts were to be placed below the point to which they have been accustomed, and might, on this account, be indisposed to embark in the plan. There is, it is true, one reflection, which, in regard to men actively engaged in trade, ought to be a security against this danger; it is this: that the accommodations which they might derive in the way of their business, at a low rate, would more than indemnify them for any difference in the dividend, supposing even that some diminution of it were to be the consequence. But, upon the whole, the hazard of contrary reasoning among the mass of moneyed men is a powerful argument against the experiment. The institutions of the kind already existing add to the difficulty of making it. Mature reflection and a large capital may, of themselves, lead to the desired end.

The last thing which requires any explanatory remark is, the authority proposed to be given to the President, to subscribe the amount of two millions of dollars on account of the public. The main design of this is to enlarge the specie fund of the bank, and to enable it to give a more early extension to its operations. Though it is proposed to borrow with one hand what is lent with the other, yet the disbursement of what is borrowed will be progressive, and bank notes may be thrown into circulation instead of the gold and silver. Besides, there is to be an annual reimbursement of a part of the sum borrowed, which will finally operate as an actual investment of so much specie. In addition to the inducements to this measure, which results from the general interest of the Government to enlarge the sphere of the utility of the bank, there is this more particular consideration, to wit: that as far as the dividend on the stock shall exceed the interest paid on the loan, there is positive profit.

The Secretary begs leave to conclude with this general observation: that if the Bank of North America shall come forward with any propositions which have for their objects the engrafting upon that institution the characteristics which shall appear to the Legislature necessary to the due extent and safety of a National Bank, there are in his judgment weighty inducements to give every reasonable facility to the measure. Not only the pretensions of that institution, from its original relation to the Government of the United States, and from the services it has rendered, are such as to claim a disposition favorable to it, if those who are interested in it are willing, on their part, to place it on a footing satisfactory to the Government, and equal to the purposes of the bank of the United States, but its co-operation will materially accelerate the accomplishment of the great object, and the collision which might otherwise arise, might, in a variety of ways, prove equally disagreeable and injurious. The incorporation or union here contemplated may be effected in different modes, under the auspices of an act of the United States, if it shall be desired by the Bank of North America, upon terms which shall appear expedient to the Government.

All which is humbly submitted.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

REPORT ON THE SUBJECT OF A MINT.

The Secretary of the Treasury having attentively considered the subject referred to him by the order of the House of Representatives of the fifteenth of April last, relative to the establishment of a Mint, most respectfully submits the result of his inquiries and reflections.

A plan for an establishment of this nature involves a great variety of considerations—intricate, nice, and important. The general state of debtor and creditor; all the relations and consequences of price; the essential interests of trade and industry; the value of all property; the whole income both of the State and of individuals, are liable to be sensibly influenced, beneficially or otherwise, by the judicious or injudicious regulation of this interesting object.

It is one, likewise, not more necessary than difficult to be rightly adjusted; one which has frequently occupied the reflections and researches of politicians, without having harmonized their opinions on some of the most important of the principles which enter into its discussion. Accordingly, different systems continue to be advocated, and the systems of different nations, after much investigation, continue to differ from each other.

But if a right adjustment of the matter be truly of such nicety and difficulty, a question naturally arises, whether it may not be most advisable to leave things, in this respect, in the state in which they are? Why, might it be asked, since they have so long proceeded in a train which has caused no general sensation of inconvenience, should alterations be attempted, the precise effect of which cannot with certainty be calculated?

The answer to this question is not perplexing. The immense disorder which actually reigns in so delicate and important a concern, and the still greater disorder which is every moment possible, call loudly for a reform. The dollar originally contemplated in the money transactions of this country, by successive diminutions of its weight and fineness, has sustained a depreciation of five per cent., and yet the new dollar has a currency in all payments in place of the old, with scarcely any attention to the difference between them. The operation of this in depreciating the value of property depending upon past contracts, and (as far as inattention to the alteration in the coin may be supposed to leave prices stationary) of all other property, is apparent. Nor can it require argument to prove that a nation ought not to suffer the value of the property of its citizens to fluctuate with the fluctuations of a foreign mint, and to change with the changes in the regulations of a foreign sovereign. This, nevertheless, is the condition of one which, having no coins of its own, adopts with implicit confidence those of other countries.

The unequal values allowed in different parts of the Union to coins of the same intrinsic worth, the defective species of them which embarrass the circulation of some of the States, and the dissimilarity in their several moneys of account, are inconveniences, which if not to be ascribed to the want of a national coinage, will at least be most effectually remedied by the establishment of one; a measure that will, at the same time, give additional security against impositions by counterfeit as well as by base currencies.

It was with great reason, therefore, that the attention of Congress, under the late Confederation, was repeatedly drawn to the establishment of a mint; and it is with equal reason that the subject has been resumed, now that the favorable change which has taken place in the situation of public affairs admits of its being carried into execution.

But though the difficulty of devising a proper establishment ought not to deter from undertaking so necessary a work, yet it cannot but inspire diffidence in one whose duty it is made to propose a plan for the purpose, and may perhaps be permitted to be relied upon as some excuse for any errors which may be chargeable upon it, or for any deviations from sounder principles which may have been suggested by others, or even in part acted upon by the former Government of the United States.

part of the sum borrowed, which will finally operate as an actual investment of so much specie. In addition to the inducements to this measure, which results from the general interest of the Government to enlarge the sphere of the utility of the bank, there is this more particular consideration, to wit: that as far as the dividend on the stock shall exceed the interest paid on the loan, there is positive profit.

The Secretary begs leave to conclude with this general observation: that if the Bank of North America shall come forward with any propositions which have for their objects the engrafting upon that institution the characteristics which shall appear to the Legislature necessary to the due extent and safety of a National Bank, there are in his judgment weighty inducements to give every reasonable facility to the measure. Not only the pretensions of that institution, from its original relation to the Government of the United States, and from the services it has rendered, are such as to claim a disposition favorable to it, if those who are interested in it are willing, on their part, to place it on a footing satisfactory to the Government, and equal to the purposes of the bank of the United States, but its co-operation will materially accelerate the accomplishment of the great object, and the collision which might otherwise arise, might, in a variety of ways, prove equally disagreeable and injurious. The incorporation or union here contemplated may be effected in different modes, under the auspices of an act of the United States, if it shall be desired by the Bank of North America, upon terms which shall appear expedient to the Government.

All which is humbly submitted.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

REPORT ON THE SUBJECT OF A MINT.

The Secretary of the Treasury having attentively considered the subject referred to him by the order of the House of Representatives of the fifteenth of April last, relative to the establishment of a Mint, most respectfully submits the result of his inquiries and reflections.

A plan for an establishment of this nature involves a great variety of considerations—intricate, nice, and important. The general state of debtor and creditor; all the relations and consequences of price; the essential interests of trade and industry; the value of all property; the whole income both of the State and of individuals, are liable to be sensibly influenced, beneficially or otherwise, by the judicious or injudicious regulation of this interesting object.

It is one, likewise, not more necessary than difficult to be rightly adjusted; one which has frequently occupied the reflections and researches of politicians, without having harmonized their opinions on some of the most important of the principles which enter into its discussion. Accordingly, different systems continue to be advoc-

In order to a right judgment of what ought to be done, the following particulars require to be discussed:

1st. What ought to be the nature of the money unit of the United States?

2d. What the proportion between gold and silver, if coins of both metals are to be established?

3d. What the proportion and composition of alloy in each kind?

4th. Whether the expense of coinage shall be defrayed by the Government, or out of the material itself?

5th. What shall be the number, denominations, sizes, and devices of the coins?

6th. Whether foreign coin shall be permitted to be current or not; if the former, at what rate, and for what period?

A pre-requisite to determining with propriety what ought to be the money unit of the United States is, to endeavor to form as accurate an idea as the nature of the case will admit, of what it actually is. The pound, though of various value, is the unit in the money of account of all the States. But it is not equally easy to pronounce what is to be considered as the unit in the coins. There being no formal regulation on the point, (the resolutions of Congress of the 6th of July, 1785, and 8th of August, 1786, having never yet been carried into operation,) it can only be inferred from usage or practice. The manner of adjusting foreign exchanges would seem to indicate the dollar as best entitled to that character. In these, the old piaster of Spain, or old Seville piece of eight reals, of the value of four shillings and sixpence sterling, is evidently contemplated. The computed par between Great Britain and Pennsylvania will serve as an example. According to that one hundred pounds sterling is equal to one hundred and sixty-six pounds and two-thirds of a pound, Pennsylvania currency; which corresponds with the proportion between 4s. 6d. sterling and 7s. 6d. the current value of the dollar in that State, by invariable usage. And, as far as the information of the Secretary goes, the same comparison holds in the other States.

But this circumstance in favor of a dollar loses much of its weight from two considerations. That species of coin has never had any settled or standard value according to weight or fineness, but has been permitted to circulate by tale, without regard to either, very much as a mere money of convenience, while gold has had a fixed price by weight and with an eye to its fineness. This greater stability of value of the gold coins is an argument of force for regarding the money unit as having been hitherto virtually attached to gold rather than to silver.

Twenty-four grains and six-eighths of a grain of fine gold have corresponded with the nominal value of the dollar in the several States, without regard to the successive diminutions of its intrinsic worth.

But if the dollar should, notwithstanding, be supposed to have the best title to be considered as the present unit in the coins, it would remain to determine what kind of dollar ought to be understood; or, in other words, what precise quantity of fine silver.

The old piaster of Spain, which appears to have regulated our foreign exchanges, weighed 17 dwts. 12 grains, and contained 386 grains and 15 mites of fine silver. But this piece has been long since out of circulation. The dollars now in common currency are of recent date, and much inferior to that both in weight and fineness. The average weight of them, upon different trials, in large masses, has been found to be 17 dwts. 8 grains. Their fineness is less precisely ascertained; the results of various assays, made by different persons, under the direction of the late Secretary, being as various as the assays themselves. The difference between their extremes is not less than 24 grains in a dollar of the same weight and age; which is too much for any probable difference in the pieces. It is rather to be presumed that a degree of inaccuracy has been occasioned by the want of proper apparatus, and, in general, of practice. The experiment which appears to have the best pretensions to exactness would make the new dollar to contain 370 grains and 933 thousandths parts of a grain of pure silver.

According to an authority on which the Secretary places reliance, the standard of Spain, for its silver coin, in the year 1761, was 261 fine and 27 parts alloy; at which proportion, a dollar of 17 dwts. 8 grains would consist of 377 grains of fine silver and 39 grains of alloy. But there is no question that this standard has been since altered considerably for the worse; to what precise point is not as well ascertained as could be wished; but from a computation of the value of dollars in the markets both of Amsterdam and London, (a criterion which cannot materially mislead,) the new dollar appears to contain about 368 grains of fine silver, and that which immediately preceded it about 374 grains.

In this state of things there is some difficulty in defining the dollar which is to be understood as constituting the present money unit, on the supposition of its being most applicable to that species of coin. The old Seville piece, of 386 grains and 15 mites fine, compares best with the computations of foreign exchanges, and with the more ancient contracts respecting landed property; but far the greater number of contracts still in operation concerning that kind of property, and all those of a merely personal nature now in force must be referred to a dollar of a different kind. The actual dollar, at the time of contracting, is the only one which can be supposed to have been intended; and it has been seen that as long ago as the year 1761 there had been a material degradation of the standard. And even in regard to the more ancient contracts, no person has ever had any idea of a scruple about receiving the dollar of the day as a full equivalent for the nominal sum which the dollar originally imported.

A recurrence, therefore, to the ancient dollar would be, in the greatest number of cases, an innovation in fact, and in all an innovation in respect to opinion. The actual dollar in common circulation has evidently a much better claim to be regarded as the actual money unit.

The mean intrinsic value of the different kinds of known dollars has been intimated as affording the proper criterion. But when it is recollected that the more ancient and more valuable ones are not now to be met with at all in circulation, and that the mass of those generally current is composed of the newest and most inferior kinds, it will be perceived that even an equation of that nature would be a considerable innovation upon the real present state of things; which it will certainly be prudent to approach, as far as may be consistent with the permanent order designed to be introduced.

An additional reason for considering the prevailing dollar standard of the present money unit rather than the ancient one, is, that it will not only be conformable to the true existing proportion between the two metals in this country, but will be more conformable to that which obtains in the commercial world generally.

The difference established by custom in the United States between coined gold and coined silver has been stated upon another occasion to be nearly as 1 to 15.6. This, if truly the case, would imply that gold was extremely overvalued in the United States; for the highest actual proportion in any part of Europe, very little, if at all, exceeds 1 to 15; and the average proportion throughout Europe is probably not more than about one to fourteen and four-fifths. But that statement has proceeded upon the idea of an ancient dollar. One pennyworth of gold of twenty-two carats fine, at 6s. 8d., and the old Seville piece of 386 grains and 15 mites of pure silver at 7s. 6d., furnish the exact ratio of 1 to 15.6262. But this does not coincide with the real difference between the metals in our market, or, which is with us the same thing, of fine silver. To determine this, the quantity of fine silver in the general mass of the dollars now in circulation must afford the rule. Taking the rate of the late dollar of 374 grains, the proportion would be as 1 to 15.11. Taking the rate of the newest dollar, the proportion would then be as 1 to 14.87. The mean of the two would give the proportion of 1 to 15 very nearly; less than the legal proportion in the coins of Great Britain, which is as 1 to 15.2; but somewhat more than the actual or market proportion, which is not quite 1 to 15.

The preceding view of the subject does not indeed afford a precise or certain definition of the present unit in the coins, but it furnishes data which will serve as guides in the progress of the investigation. It ascertains, at least, that the sum in the money account of each State, corresponding with the nominal value of the dollar in such State, corresponds also with 24 grains and six-eighths of a grain of fine gold; and with something between 368 and 374 grains of fine silver.

The next inquiry towards a right determination of what ought to be the future money unit of the United States turns on these questions: whether it ought to be peculiarly attached to either of the metals in preference to the other or not; and, if to either, to which of them?

The suggestions and proceedings hitherto have had for object the annexing of it emphatically to the silver dollar. A resolution of Congress, of the 6th of July, 1785, declares that the money unit of the United States shall be a dollar, and another resolution of the 8th of August, 1786, fixes that dollar at 375 grains and sixty-four hundredths of a grain of fine silver. The same resolution, however, determines that there shall also be two gold coins, one of 246 grains and 268 parts of a grain of pure gold, equal to ten dollars, and the other of half that quantity of pure gold, equal to five dollars; and it is not explained whether either of the two species of coins, of gold or silver, shall have any greater legality in payments than the other. Yet it would seem that a preference in this particular is necessary to execute the idea of attaching the unit exclusively to one kind. If each of them be as valid as the other in payments to any amount, it is not obvious in what effectual sense either of them can be deemed the money unit rather than the other.

If the general declaration that the dollar shall be the money unit of the United States could be understood to give it a superior legality in payments, the institution of coins of gold, and the declaration that each of them shall be equal to a certain number of dollars would appear to destroy that inference; and the circumstance of making the dollar the unit in the money of account seems to be rather matter of form than of substance.

Contrary to the ideas which have heretofore prevailed in the suggestions concerning a coinage for the United States, though not without much hesitation, arising from a deference for those ideas, the Secretary is, upon the whole, strongly inclined to the opinion that a preference ought to be given to neither of the metals for the money unit. Perhaps, if either were to be preferred, it ought to be gold rather than silver.

The reasons are these:

The inducement to such a preference is to render the unit as little variable as possible; because on this depends the steady value of all contracts, and, in a certain sense, of all other property. And, it is truly observed, that if the unit belong indiscriminately to both metals it is subject to all the fluctuations that happen in the relative value which they bear to each other. But the same reason would lead to annexing it to that particular one which is itself the least liable to variation, if there be in this respect any discernible difference between the two.

Gold may, perhaps, in certain cases, be said to have greater stability than silver; as being of superior value less liberties have been taken with it in the regulations of different countries. Its standard has remained more uniform, and it has, in other respects, undergone fewer changes; as being not so much an article of merchandise, owing to the use made of silver in the trade with the East Indies and China, it is less liable to be influenced by circumstances of commercial demand. And if, reasoning by analogy, it could be affirmed that there is a physical probability of greater proportional increase in the quantity of silver than in that of gold, it would afford an additional reason for calculating on greater steadiness in the value of the latter.

As long as gold, either from its intrinsic superiority as a metal, from its greater rarity, or from the prejudices of mankind, retains so considerable a pre-eminence in value over silver as it has hitherto had, a natural consequence of this seems to be that its condition will be more stationary. The revolutions, therefore, that may take place in the comparative value of gold and silver will be changes in the state of the latter rather than in that of the former.

If there should be an appearance of too much abstraction in any of these ideas, it may be remarked that the most simple impressions do not naturally incline to giving a preference to the inferior or least valuable of the two metals.

It is sometimes observed that silver ought to be encouraged rather than gold, as being more conducive to the extension of bank circulation, which the greater difficulty and inconvenience which its greater bulk, compared with its value, occasions in the transportation of it. But bank circulation is desirable rather as an auxiliary to than as a substitute for that of the precious metals, and ought to be left to its natural course. Artificial expedients to extend it by opposing obstacles to the other are, at least, not recommended by any very obvious advantages. And in general it is the safest rule to regulate every particular institution or object according to the principles which, in relation to itself, appear the most sound. In addition to this, it may be observed that the inconvenience of transporting either of the metals is sufficiently great to induce a preference of bank paper, whenever it can be made to answer the purpose equally well.

But, upon the whole, it seems to be most advisable, as has been observed, not to attach the unit exclusively to either of the metals; because this cannot be done effectually, without destroying the office and character of one of them as money, and reducing it to the situation of a mere merchandise; which, accordingly, at different times, has been proposed from different and very respectable quarters; but which would probably be a greater evil than occasional variations in the unit, from the fluctuations in the relative value of the metals; especially if care be taken to regulate the proportion between them with an eye to their average commercial value.

To annul the use of either of the metals as money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full with the evils of a scanty circulation. It is not a satisfactory answer to say that none but the favored metal would, in this case, find its way into the country, as in that all balances must be paid. The practicability of this would, in some measure, depend on the abundance or scarcity of it in the country paying. Where there was but little, it either would not be procurable at all, or it would cost a premium to obtain it; which in every case of a competition with others, in a branch of trade, would constitute a deduction from the profits of the party receiving. Perhaps, too, the embarrassments which such a circumstance might sometimes create, in the pecuniary liquidation of balances, might lead to additional efforts to find a substitute in commodities, and might so far impede the introduction of metals. Neither could the exclusion of either of them be deemed, in other respects, favorable to commerce. It is often in the course of trade as desirable to possess the kind of money as the kind of commodity best adapted to a foreign market.

It seems, however, most probable that the chief, if not the sole effect of such a regulation would be to diminish the utility of one of the metals. It could hardly prove an obstacle to the introduction of that which was excluded in the natural course of trade; because it would always command a ready sale for the purpose of exportation to foreign markets. But such an effect, if the only one, is not to be regarded as a trivial inconvenience.

If, then, the unit ought not to be attached exclusively to either of the metals, the proportion which ought to subsist between them in the coins becomes a preliminary inquiry, in order to its proper adjustment. This proportion appears to be, in several views, of no inconsiderable moment.

One consequence of overvaluing either metal in respect to the other is the banishment of that which is undervalued. If two countries are supposed, in one of which the proportion of gold to silver is as 1 to 16, in the other as 1 to 15, gold being worth more, silver less in one than in the other, it is manifest that in their reciprocal payments, each will select that species which it values least, to pay to the other where it is valued most. Besides this, the dealers in money will, from the same cause, often find a profitable traffic in an exchange of the metals between the two countries. And hence it would come to pass, if other things were equal, that the greatest part of the gold would be collected in one, and the greatest part of the silver in the other.

The course of trade might, in some degree, counteract the tendency of the difference in the legal proportions, by the market value; but this is so far and so often influenced by the legal rates, that it does not prevent their producing the effect which is inferred.

Facts, too, verify the inference. In Spain and England, where gold is rated higher than in other parts of Europe, there is a scarcity of silver; while it is found to abound in France and Holland, where it is rated higher, in proportion to gold, than in the neighboring nations. And it is continually flowing from Europe to China and the East Indies, owing to the comparative cheapness of it in the former, and dearth of it in the latter.

This consequence is deemed by some not very material; and there are even persons, who, from a fanciful predilection to gold, are willing to invite it even by a higher price. But general utility will best be promoted by a due proportion of both metals. If gold be most convenient in large payments, silver is best adapted to the more minute and ordinary circulation.

But it is to be suspected that there is another consequence more serious than the one which has been mentioned. This is the diminution of the total quantity of specie which a country would naturally possess.

It is evident that as often as a country which overrates either of the metals receives a payment in that metal, it gets a less actual quantity than it ought to do, or than it would do, if the rate was a just one.

It is also equally evident that there will be a continual effort to make payment to it in that species to which it has annexed an exaggerated estimation, whether it is current at a less proportional value. And it would seem to be a very natural effect of these two causes, not only that the mass of the precious metals in the country in question would consist chiefly of that kind to which it had given an extraordinary value, but that it would be absolutely less than if they had been duly proportioned to each other.

A conclusion of this sort, however, is to be drawn with great caution. In such matters there are always some local and many other particular circumstances which qualify and vary the operation of general principles, even where they are just; and there are endless combinations, very difficult to be analyzed, which often render principles that have the most plausible pretensions unsound and delusive.

There ought for instance, according to those which have been stated, to have formerly been a greater quantity of gold in proportion to silver in the United States, than there has been; because the actual value of gold in this country, compared with silver, was perhaps higher than in any other. But our situation with regard to the West India islands, into some of which there is a large influx of silver directly from the mines of South America, occasions an extraordinary supply of that metal, and consequently a greater proportion of it in our circulation than might have been expected from its relative value.

What influence the proportion under consideration may have on the state of prices, and how far this may counteract the tendency to increase or lessen the quantity of the metals are points not easy to be developed; and yet they are very necessary to an accurate judgment of the true operation of the thing.

But, however impossible it may be to pronounce with certainty that the possession of a less quantity of specie is a consequence of overvaluing either of the metals, there is enough of probability in the considerations which seem to indicate it, to form an argument of weight against such overvaluation.

A third ill consequence resulting from it is, a greater and more frequent disturbance between the legal and market proportions of the metals. This has not hitherto been experienced in the United States, but it has been experienced elsewhere; and from its not having been felt by us hitherto, it does not follow that this will not be the case hereafter; when our commerce shall have attained a maturity which will place it under the influence of more fixed principles.

In establishing a proportion between the metals there seems to be an option of one of two things:

To approach as nearly as can be ascertained, the mean or average proportion in what may be called the commercial world; or

To retain that which now exists in the United States. As far as these happen to coincide, they will render the course to be pursued more plain and more certain.

To ascertain the first with precision would require better materials than are possessed, or than could be obtained without an inconvenient delay.

Sir Isaac Newton, in a representation to the Treasury of Great Britain, in the year 1717, after stating the particular proportions in the different countries of Europe, concludes thus: "By the course of trade and exchange between nation and nation in all Europe, fine gold is to fine silver as 14 and four-fifths or 15 to 1."

But however accurate and decisive this authority may be deemed, in relation to the period to which it applies, it cannot be taken, at the distance of more than seventy years, as a rule for determining the existing proportion. Alterations have since been made in the regulations of their coins by several nations; which, as well as the course of trade, have an influence upon the market values. Nevertheless, there is reason to believe that the state of the matter, as represented by Sir Isaac Newton, is not very remote from its actual state.

In Holland, the greatest money market of Europe, gold was to silver, in December, 1789, as 1 to 14.88; and in that of London it has been for some time past, but little different, approaching, perhaps, something nearer 1 to 15.

It has been seen that the existing proportion between the two metals in this country is about as 1 to 15.

It is fortunate, in this respect, that the innovations of the Spanish mint have imperceptibly introduced a proportion so analogous as this is, to that which prevails among the principal commercial nations, as it greatly facilitates a proper regulation of the matter.

This proportion of 1 to 15 is recommended by the particular situation of our trade, as being very nearly that which obtains in the market of Great Britain, to which nation our specie is principally exported. A lower rate for either of the metals in our market than in hers might not only afford a motive the more, in certain cases, to remit in specie rather than in commodities, but it might, in some others, cause us to pay a greater quantity of it for a given sum than we should otherwise do. If the effect should rather be to occasion a premium to be given for the metal which was underrated, this would obviate those disadvantages ges, but it would involve another— a customary difference between the market and legal proportions, which would amount to a species of disorder in the national coinage.

Looking forward to the payment of interest hereafter to be made to Holland, the same proportion does not appear ineligible. The present legal proportion in the coins of Holland is stated to be 1 to 14.9. That of the market varies somewhat at different times, but seldom very widely from this point.

There can hardly be a better rule in any country for the legal than the market proportion, if this can be supposed to have been produced by the free and steady course of commercial principles. The presumption in such a case is that each metal finds its true level, according to its intrinsic utility, in the general system of money operations.

But it must be admitted, that this argument in favor of continuing the existing proportion is not applicable to the state of the coins with us. There have been too many artificial and heterogeneous ingredients, too much want of order in the pecuniary transactions of this country, to authorize the attributing the effects which have appeared to the regular operations of commerce. A proof of this is to be drawn from the alterations which have happened in the proportion between the metals merely by the successive degradations of the dollar, in consequence of the mutability of a foreign mint. The value of gold to silver appears to have declined wholly from this cause from 15.6 to about 15 to 1. Yet as this last proportion, however produced, coincides so nearly with what may be deemed the commercial average, it may be supposed to furnish as good a rule as can be pursued.

The only question seems to be, whether the value of gold ought not to be a little lowered, to bring it to a more exact level with the two markets which have been mentioned. But as the ratio of one to fifteen is so nearly conformable to the state of those markets, and best agrees with that of our own, it will probably be found the most eligible. If the market of Spain continues to give a higher value to gold (as it has done in time past) than that which is recommended, there may be some advantage in a middle station.

A further preliminary to the adjustment of the future money unit is, to determine what shall be the proportion and composition of alloy in each species of the coins.

The first, by the resolution of the 8th of August, 1786, before referred to, is regulated at one-twelfth, or, in other words, at one part alloy to eleven parts fine, whether gold or silver, which appears to be a convenient rule; unless there should be some collateral consideration which may dictate a departure from it. Its correspondence, in regard to both metals, is a recommendation of it, because a difference could answer no purpose of pecuniary or commercial utility, and uniformity is favorable to order.

This ratio, as it regards gold, coincides with the proportion, real or professed, in the coins of Portugal, England, France, and Spain. In those of the two former it is real, in those of the two latter there is a deduction for what is called "remedy of weight and alloy," which is in the nature of an allowance to the master of the mint for errors and imperfections in the process, rendering the coin either lighter or baser than it ought to be. The same thing is known in the theory of the English mint, where one-sixth of a carat is allowed. But the difference seems to be that there it is merely an occasional indemnity within a certain limit for real and unavoidable errors and imperfections; whereas, in the practice of the mints of France and Spain, it appears to amount to a stated and regular deviation from the nominal standard. Accordingly, the real standards of France and Spain are something worse than 22 carats, or 11 parts in 12 fine.

The principal gold coins in Germany, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, Poland, and Italy, are finer than those of England and Portugal, in different degrees, from 1 carat and a quarter to 1 carat and seven-eighths, which last is within one-eighth of a carat of pure gold.

There are similar diversities in the standards of the silver coins of the different countries of Europe. That of Great Britain is 222 parts fine to 18 alloy; those of the other European nations vary from that of Great Britain as widely as from about 17 of the same parts better to 75 worse.

The principal reasons assigned for the use of alloy are the saving of expense in the refining of the metals, (which in their natural state are usually mixed with a portion of the coarser kinds,) and the rendering them harder as a security against too great waste by friction or wearing.

The first reason, drawn from the original composition of the metals, is strengthened at present by the practice of alloying their coins, which has obtained among so many nations. The reality of the effect to which the last reason is applicable has been denied, and experience has been appealed to, as proving that the more alloyed coins wear faster than the purer. The true state of this matter may be worthy of future investigation, though first appearances are in favor of alloy. In the mean time the saving of trouble and expense are sufficient inducements to following those examples which suppose its expediency. And the same considerations lead to taking as our models those nations with whom we have most intercourse, and whose coins are most prevalent in our circulation. These are Spain, Portugal, England, and France. The relation which the proposed proportion bears to their gold coins has been explained. In respect to their silver coins, it will not be very remote from the mean of their several standards.

The component ingredients of the alloy in each metal will also require to be regulated. In silver, copper is the only kind in use, and it is doubtless the only proper one. In gold, there is a mixture of silver and copper; in the English coins, consisting of equal parts; in the coins of some other countries, varying from one-third to two-thirds silver.

The reason of this union of silver with copper is this: the silver counteracts the tendency of the copper to injure the color or beauty of the coin, by giving it too much redness, or rather a coppery hue, which a small quantity will produce; and the copper prevents the too great whiteness which silver alone would confer. It is apprehended that there are considerations which may render it prudent to establish by law that the proportion of silver to copper, in the gold coins of the United States, shall not be more than one-half nor less than one-third; vesting a discretion in some proper place to regulate the matter within those limits, as experience in the execution may recommend.

A third point remains to be discussed, as a prerequisite to the determination of the money unit, which is, whether the expense of coining shall be defrayed by the public, or out of the material itself; or, as it is sometimes stated, whether the coinage shall be free, or shall be subject to a duty or imposition? This forms, perhaps, one of the nicest questions in the doctrine of money.

The practice of different nations is dissimilar in this particular. In England coinage is said to be entirely free: the mint price of the metals in bullion being the same with the value of them in coin. In France there is a duty, which has been, is a difference between the mint price and the value of coins, which has been computed at 96, or something less than one per cent. upon gold; at 1.48, or something less than one-and-a-half per cent. upon silver. The resolution of the 8th of August, 1786, proceeds upon the idea of a deduction of half per cent. from gold, and of two per cent. from silver, as an indemnification for the expense of coining. This is inferred from a report of the late Board of Treasury, upon which that resolution appears to have been founded.

Upon the supposition that the expense of coining ought to be defrayed out of the metals, there are two ways in which it may be effected: one by a reduction of the quantity of fine gold and silver in the coins, the other by establishing a difference between the value of those metals in the coins and the mint price of them in bullion.

The first method appears to the Secretary inadmissible. He is unable to distinguish an operation of this sort from that of raising the denomination of the coin—a measure which has been disapproved by the wisest men of the nations in which it has been practised, and condemned by the rest of the world. To declare that a less weight of gold or silver shall pass for the same sum, which before represented a greater weight, or to ordain that the same weight shall pass for a greater sum, are things substantially of one nature. The consequence of either of them, if the change can be realized, is to degrade the money unit; obliging creditors to receive less than their just dues, and depreciating property of every kind. For it is manifest that every thing would, in this case, be represented by a less quantity of gold and silver than before.

It is sometimes observed on this head, that, though any article of property might, in fact, be represented by a less actual quantity of pure metal, it would, nevertheless, be represented by something of the same intrinsic value. Every fabric, it is remarked, is worth intrinsically the price of the raw material and the expense of fabrication; a truth not less applicable to a piece of coin than to a yard of cloth.

This position, well founded in itself, is here misapplied. It supposes that the coins now in circulation are to be considered as bullion, or, in other words, as raw material. But the fact is, that the adoption of them as money, has caused them to become the fabric; it has invested them with the character and office of coins, and has given them a sanction and efficacy equivalent to that of the stamp of the Sovereign. The prices of all our commodities, at home and abroad, and of all foreign commodities in our markets, have found their level in conformity to this principle. The foreign coins may be divested of the privilege they have hitherto been permitted to enjoy, and may of course be left to find their value in the market as a raw material. But the quantity of gold and silver in the national coins, corresponding with a given sum, cannot be made less than heretofore without disturbing the balance of intrinsic value, and making every acre of land, as well as every bushel of wheat, of less actual worth than in time past. If the United States were isolated, and cut off from all intercourse with the rest of mankind, this reasoning would not be equally conclusive. But it appears decisive, when considered with a view to the relations which commerce has created between us and other countries.

It is, however, not improbable that the effect meditated would be defeated by a rise of prices proportioned to the diminution of the intrinsic value of the coins. This might be looked for in every enlightened commercial country; but, perhaps, in none with greater certainty than in this; because in none are men less liable to be the dupes of sounds; in none has authority so little resource for substituting names for things.

A general revolution in prices, though only nominally and in appearance, could not fail to distract the ideas of the community, and would be apt to breed discontents as well among all those who live on the income of their money as among the poorer classes of the people, to whom the necessities of life would seem to have become dearer. In the confusion of such a state of things, ideas of value would not improbably adhere to the old coins, which, from that circumstance, instead of feeling the effect of the loss of their privilege as money, would, perhaps, bear a price in the market, relatively to the new ones, in exact proportion to weight. The frequency of the demand for the metals to pay foreign balances would contribute to this effect.

Among the evils attendant on such an operation are these: creditors, both of individuals would lose a part of their property; public and private revenues of the Government would be diminished. There is scarcely any point, in the economy of national affairs, of greater moment than the uniform preservation of the intrinsic value of the money unit. On this the security and steady value of property essentially depend.

The second method, therefore, of defraying the expense of the coinage out of the metals is greatly to be preferred to the other. This is to let the same sum of money continue to represent in the new coins exactly the same quantity of gold and silver as it does in those now current; to allow at the mint such a price only for those metals as will admit of profit just sufficient to satisfy the expense of coinage; to abolish the legal currency of the foreign coins, both in public and private payments; and, of course, to leave the superior utility of the national coins for domestic purposes to operate the difference of market value, which is necessary to induce the bringing of bullion to the mint. In this case, all property and labor will still be represented by the same quantity of gold and silver as formerly; and the only change which will be wrought will consist in annexing the office of money exclusively to the national coins; consequently, withdrawing it from those of foreign countries, and suffering them to become, as they ought to be, mere articles of merchandise.

The arguments in favor of a regulation of this kind are, first, that the want of it is a cause of individual interest to distinguish between the national coins and bullion, they are, it is alleged, indiscriminately melted down for domestic manufactures, and exported for the purposes of foreign trade; and it is added, that when the coins become light by wearing, the same quantity of fine gold or silver bears a higher price in bullion than in the coins; in which state of things the melting down of the coins to be sold as bullion is attended with profit; and from both causes, the expense of the mint, or, in other words, the expense of maintaining the specie capital of the nation, is materially augmented.

Secondly. That the existence of such a regulation promotes a favorable course of exchange, and benefits trade, not only by that circumstance but by obliging foreigners, in certain cases, to pay dearer for domestic commodities, and to sell their own cheaper.

As far as relates to the tendency of a free coinage to produce an increase of expense in the different ways that have been stated, the argument must be allowed to have foundation, both in reason and experience. It describes what has been exemplified in Great Britain.

The effect of giving an artificial value to bullion is not, at first sight, obvious; but it actually happened at the period immediately preceding the late reformation in the gold coin of the country just named. A pound troy in gold bullion, of standard fineness, was then from 19s. 6d. to 25s. sterling dearer than an equal weight of guineas, as delivered at the mint. The phenomenon is thus accounted for: the old guineas were more than two per cent. lighter than their standard weight. This weight, therefore, in bullion was truly worth two per cent. more than those guineas. It constantly had, in respect to them, a correspondent rise in the market.

And as guineas were then current by tale, the new ones as they issued from the mint were founded in circulation with the old ones, and by the association were depreciated below the intrinsic value in comparison with bullion. It became of course a profitable traffic to sell bullion for coin, to select the light pieces, and re-issue them in currency, and to melt down the heavy ones, and sell them again as bullion. This practice, besides other inconveniences, cost the Government large sums in the renewal of the coins. But the remainder of the argument stands upon ground far more questionable. It depends upon very numerous and very complex combinations, in which there is infinite latitude for fallacy and error.

The most plausible part of it is that which relates to the course of exchange. Experience in France has shown that the market price of bullion has been influenced by the mint difference between that and coin; sometimes to the full extent of the difference; and it would seem to be a clear inference that, whenever that difference materially exceeded the charges of remitting bullion from the country where it existed to another in which coinage was free, exchange would be in favor of the former.

If, for instance, the balance of trade between France and England were at any time equal, their merchants would naturally have reciprocal payments to make to an equal amount, which, as usual, would be liquidated by means of bills of exchange. If in this situation the difference between coin and bullion should be, in the market, as at the mint of France, eight per cent.; if, also, the charges of transporting money from France to England should not be above two per cent.; and if exchange should be at par, it is evident that a profit of six per cent. might be made by sending bullion from France to England, and drawing bills for the amount. One hundred louis d'ors in coin would purchase the weight of one hundred and eight in bullion: one hundred of which, remitted to England, would suffice to pay a debt of an equal amount, and two being paid for the charges of insurance and transportation, there would remain six for the benefit of the person who should manage the negotiation. But as so large a profit could not fail to produce competition, the bills, in consequence of this, would decrease in price, till the profit was reduced to the minimum of an adequate recompense for the trouble and risk. And, as the amount of one hundred louis d'ors in England might be afforded for ninety-six in France, with a profit of more than one and a half per cent., bills upon England might fall in France to four per cent. below par;

one per cent. being a sufficient profit to the exchanger or broker for the management of the business.

But it is admitted that this advantage is lost when the balance of trade is against the nation which imposes the duty in question; because by increasing the demand for bullion, it brings this to a par with the coins; and it is to be suspected that where commercial principles have their free scope, and are well understood, the market difference between the metals in coin and bullion will seldom approximate to that of the mint, if the latter be considerable. It must be not a little difficult to keep the money of the world, which can be employed to an equal purpose in the commerce of the world, in a state of degradation in comparison with the money of a particular country.

This alone would seem sufficient to prevent it: whenever the price of coin to bullion in the market materially exceeded the par of the metals it would become an object to send the bullion abroad, if not to pay a foreign balance, to be invested in some other way in foreign countries where it bore a superior value; an operation by which immense fortunes might be amassed, if it were not that the exportation of the bullion would of itself restore the intrinsic par. But as it would naturally have this effect, the advantage supposed would contain in itself the principle of its own destruction. As long, however, as the exportation of bullion could be made with profit, which is as long as exchange could remain below par, there would be a drain of the gold and silver of the country.

If any thing can maintain for a length of time a material difference between the value of the metals in coin and in bullion, it must be a constant and considerable balance of trade in favor of the country in which it is maintained. In one situated like the United States, it would in all probability be a hopeless attempt. The frequent demand for gold and silver to pay balances to foreigners would tend powerfully to preserve the equilibrium of intrinsic value.

The prospect is that it would occasion foreign coins to circulate by common consent nearly at par with the national.

To say that, as far as the effect of lowering exchange is produced, though it is only occasional and momentary, there is a benefit the more thrown into the scale of public prosperity is not satisfactory. It has been seen that it may be productive of one evil, the investment of a part of the national capital in foreign countries, which can hardly be beneficial but in a situation like that of the United Netherlands, where an immense capital, and a decrease of internal demand, render it necessary to find employment for money in the wants of other nations; and, perhaps, on a closer examination, other evils may be described.

One alluded to that which has been mentioned is this, taking France, for the sake of more concise illustration, as the scene. Whenever it happens that French louis d'ors are sent abroad, for whatever cause, if there be a considerable difference between coin and bullion, in the market of France, it will constitute an advantageous traffic to send back these louis d'ors, and bring away bullion in lieu of them; upon all which exchanges France must sustain an actual loss of a part of its gold and silver.

Again, such a difference between coin and bullion may tend to counteract a favorable balance of trade. Whenever a foreign merchant is the carrier of his own commodities to France for sale, he has a strong inducement to bring back specie instead of French commodities; because a return in the latter may afford no profit, may even be attended with a loss; in the former it will afford a certain profit. The same principle must be supposed to operate in the general course of remittances from France to other countries. The principal question with a merchant naturally is, in what manner can I realize a given sum, with most advantage, where I wish to place it? And in cases in which other commodities are not likely to produce equal profit with bullion, it may be expected that this will be preferred; to which the greater certainty attending the operation must be an additional excitement. There can hardly be imagined a circumstance less friendly to trade than the existence of an extra inducement arising from the possibility of a profitable speculation upon the articles themselves, to export from a country its gold and silver rather than the product of its land and labor.

The other advantages supposed, of obliging foreigners to pay dearer for domestic commodities, and to sell their own cheaper, are applied to a situation which includes a favorable balance of trade. It is understood in this sense—the prices of commodities (such, at least, as are peculiar to the country) remain attached to the denominations of the coins. When a favorable balance of trade realizes in the market the mint difference between coin and bullion, foreigners, who must pay in the latter, are obliged to give more of it for such commodities than they otherwise would do. Again, the bullion, which is now obtained at a cheaper rate in the home market, will procure the same quantity of goods in the foreign market as before; which is said to render foreign commodities cheaper. In this reasoning much fallacy is to be suspected. If it be true that foreigners pay more for domestic commodities, it must be equally true that they get more for their own when they bring them themselves to market. If peculiar or other domestic commodities adhere to the denominations of the coins, no reason occurs why foreign commodities of a like character should not do the same thing; and, in this case, the foreigner, though he receives only the same value in coin for his merchandise as formerly, can convert it into a greater quantity of bullion. Whence the nation is liable to lose more of its gold and silver than their intrinsic value in relation to the coins were preserved. And whether the gain or the loss will, on the whole, preponderate, would appear to depend on the comparative proportion of active commerce of the one country with the other.

It is evident, also, that the nation must pay as much gold and silver as before for the commodities which it procures abroad; and whether it obtains this gold and silver cheaper or not turns upon the solution of the question just intimated, respecting the relative proportion of active commerce between the two countries.

Besides these considerations, it is admitted in the reasoning that the advantages supposed, which depend on a favorable balance of trade, have a tendency to affect that balance disadvantageously. Foreigners, it is allowed, will, in this case, seek some other vent for their commodities, and some other market where they can supply their wants at an easier rate. A tendency of this kind, if real, will be a sufficient objection to the regulation. Nothing which contributes to change a beneficial current of trade can well compensate, by particular advantages, for so injurious an effect. It is far more easy to transfer trade from a less to a more favorable channel, than, when once transferred, to bring it back to its old one. Every source of artificial interruption to an advantageous current is, therefore, cautiously to be avoided.

It merits attention that the able minister who so lately and so long presided over the finances of France, does not attribute to the duty of coinage in that country any particular advantages in relation to exchange and trade. Though he rather appears an advocate for it, it is on the sole ground of the revenue it affords, which he represents as in the nature of a very moderate duty on the general mass of exportation.

And it is not improbable that to the singular felicity of situation of that kingdom is to be attributed its not having been sensible of the evils which seem incident to the regulation. There is, perhaps, no part of Europe which has so little need of other countries as France. Comprehending a variety of soils and climates, an immense population, its agriculture in a state of mature improvement, it possesses within its own bosom most, if not all, the productions of the earth which any of its most favored neighbors can boast. The variety, abundance, and excellence of its wines constitute a peculiar advantage in its favor. Arts and manufactures are there also in a very advanced state; some of them, of considerable importance, in higher perfection than elsewhere. Its contiguity to Spain; the intimate nature of its connexion with that country—a country with few fabrics of its own, consequently numerous wants, and the principal receptacle of the treasures of the New World; these circumstances concur in securing to France so uniform and so considerable a balance of trade, as in a great measure to counteract the natural tendency of any errors which may exist in the system of her mint, and to render inferences from the operation of that system there, in reference to this country, more liable to mislead than to instruct. Nor ought it to pass unnoticed, that, with all these advantages, the Government of France has found it necessary, on some occasions, to employ very violent methods to compel the bringing of bullion to the mint; a circumstance which affords a strong presumption of the inexpediency of the regulation.

and of the impracticability of executing it in the United States.

This point has been the longer dwelt upon, not only because there is a diversity of opinion among speculative men concerning it, and a diversity in the practice of the most considerable commercial nations, but because the acts of our own Government, under the Confederation, have not only admitted the expediency of defraying the expense of coinage out of the metals themselves, but upon this idea have both made a deduction from the weight of the coins, and established a difference between their regulated value and the mint price of bullion, greater than would result from that deduction. This double operation in favor of a principle so questionable in itself has made a more particular investigation of it a duty.

The intention, however, of the preceding remarks is rather to show that the expectation of commercial advantages ought not to decide in favor of a duty on coinage, and that if it should be adopted, it ought not to be in the form of a deduction from the intrinsic value of the coins than absolutely to exclude the idea of any difference whatever between the value of the metals in coin and in bullion. It is not clearly discerned that a small difference between the mint price of bullion and the regulated value of the coins would be pernicious, or that it might not even be advisable, in the first instance, by way of experiment, merely as a preventive to the melting down and exportation of the coins. This will now be somewhat more particularly considered.

The arguments for a coinage entirely free are, that it preserves the intrinsic value of the metals, that it makes the expense of fabrication a general instead of partial tax; and that it tends to promote the abundance of gold and silver, which, it is alleged, will flow to that place where they find the best price, and from that place where they are in any degree undervalued.

The first consideration has not much weight, as an objection to a plan which, without diminishing the quantity of metals in the coins, merely allows a less price for them in bullion at the national factory or mint. No rule of intrinsic value is violated by considering the raw material as worth less than the fabric in proportion to the expense of fabrication. And by divesting foreign coins of the privilege of circulating as money, they become the raw material.

The second consideration has perhaps greater weight. But it may not amount to an objection, if it be the best method of preventing disorders in the coins, which it is in a particular manner the interest of those on whom the tax would fall to prevent. The practice of taking gold by weight, which has of late years obtained in Great Britain, has been found in some degree a remedy; but this is inconvenient and may, on that account, fall into disuse. Another circumstance has had a remedial operation. This is the delay of the mint. It appears to be the practice there not to make payment for the bullion which is brought to be exchanged for coin, till it either has in fact, or is pretended to have undergone the process of recoining.

The necessity of filling prior engagements is a cause or pretext for postponing the delivery of the coin in lieu of the bullion. And this delay creates a difference in the market price of the two things. Accordingly, for some years past, an ounce of standard gold, which is worth in coin £3 17s. 10 1-2d. sterling, has been in the market of London, in bullion, only £3 17s. 6d., which is within a small fraction of one-half per cent. less. Whether this be management in the mint to accommodate the bank in the purchase of bullion, or to effect indirectly something equivalent to a formal difference of price, or whether it be the natural course of the business, is open to conjecture.

It at the same time indicates that if the mint were to make prompt payment at about half per cent. less than it does at present, the state of bullion in respect to coin would be precisely the same as it now is; and it would be then certain that the Government would save expense in the coinage of gold; since it is not probable that the time actually lost in the course of the year in converting bullion into coin can be an equivalent to half per cent. on the advance, and there will generally be at the command of the Treasury a considerable sum of money waiting for some periodical disbursement, which without hazard might be applied to that advance.

In what sense a free coinage can be said to promote the abundance of gold and silver may be inferred from the instances which have been given of the tendency of a contrary system to promote their exportation. It is, however, not probable that a very small difference of value between coin and bullion can have any effect which ought to enter into calculation. There can be no inducement of positive profit to export the bullion as long as the difference of price is exceeded by the expense of transportation. And the prospect of smaller loss upon the metals than upon commodities, when the difference is very minute, will be frequently overbalanced by the possibility of doing better with the latter from a rise of markets. It is, at any rate, certain that it can be of no consequence in this view, whether the superiority of coin to bullion in the market be produced, as in England, by the delay of the mint, or by a formal discrimination in the regulated values.

Under an impression that a small difference between the value of the coin and the mint price of bullion is the least exceptionable expedient for restraining the melting down or exportation of the former, and not perceiving that, if it be a very moderate one, it can be hurtful in other respects, the Secretary is inclined to an experiment of one-half per cent. on each of the metals. The fact which has been mentioned with regard to the price of gold bullion in the English market, seems to demonstrate that such a difference may safely be made. In this case, there must be immediate payment for the gold and silver offered to the mint. How far one-half per cent. will go towards defraying the expense of the coinage cannot be determined beforehand with accuracy. It is presumed that, on an economical plan, it will suffice in relation to gold; but it is not expected that the same rate on silver will be sufficient to defray the expense attending that metal. Some additional provision may, therefore, be found necessary, if this limit be adopted.

It does not seem to be advisable to make any greater difference in regard to silver than to gold; because it is desirable that the proportion between the two metals in the market should correspond with that in the coins, which would not be the case if the mint price of one was comparatively lower than that of the other; and because, also, silver being proposed to be rated in respect to gold somewhat below its general commercial value, if there should be a disparity to its disadvantage in the mint prices of the two metals, it would obstruct too much the bringing of it to be coined, and would add an inducement to export it. Nor does it appear to the Secretary safe to make a greater difference between the value of coin and bullion than has been mentioned. It will be better to have to increase it hereafter, if this shall be found expedient, than to have to recede from too considerable a difference in consequence of evils which shall have been experienced.

It is sometimes mentioned as an expedient which, consistently with a free coinage, may serve to prevent the evils desired to be avoided, to incorporate in the coins a greater proportion of alloy than is usual; regulating their value, nevertheless, according to the quantity of pure metal they contain. This, it is supposed, by adding to the difficulty of refining them, would cause bullion to be preferred, both for manufacture and exportation.

But strong objections lie against this scheme—an augmentation of expense; an actual depreciation of the coin; a danger of still greater depreciation in the public opinion; the facilitating of counterfeits; while it is questionable whether it would have the effect expected from it.

The alloy being esteemed of no value, an increase of it is evidently an increase of expense. This, in relation to the gold coins particularly, is a matter of moment. It has been noted that the alloy in them consists partly of silver. If to avoid expense, the addition should be of copper only, this would spoil the appearance of the coin, and give it a base countenance. Its beauty would indeed be injured, though in a less degree, even if the usual proportions of silver and copper should be maintained in the increased quantity of alloy. And however inconsiderable an additional expenditure of copper in the coinage of a year may be deemed, in a series of years, it would become of consequence. In regulations which contemplate the lapse and operation of ages, a very small item of expense acquires importance.

The actual depreciation of the coin by an increase of alloy results from the very circumstance which is the motive to it—the greater difficulty of refining. In England it is customary for those concerned in manufactures of gold to make a deduction in the price of fourpence sterling per ounce of fine gold for every carat which the mass containing it is below the legal standard. Taking this as a rule, an inferiority of a single carat, or one twenty-fourth part in the gold coins of the United States, compared with the English standard, would cause the same quantity of pure gold in them to be worth nearly four-tenths per cent. less than in the coins of Great Britain. This circumstance would be likely, in process of time, to be felt in the market of the United States.

Report on the Subject of a Mint.

A still greater depreciation, in the public opinion, would be to be apprehended from the apparent debasement of the coin. The effects of imagination and prejudice cannot safely be disregarded in any thing that relates to money. If the beauty of the coin be impaired, it may be found difficult to satisfy the generality of the community, that what appears worst is not really less valuable; and it is not altogether certain that an impression of its being so may not occasion an unnatural augmentation of prices.

Greater danger of imposition by counterfeiters is also to be apprehended from the injury which will be done to the appearance of the coin. It is a just observation that "the perfection of the coins is a great safeguard against counterfeiters." And it is evident that the color, as well as the excellence of the workmanship, is an ingredient in that perfection. The intermixture of too much alloy, particularly of copper, in the gold coins at least, must materially lessen the facility of distinguishing by the eye the purer from the baser kind—the genuine from the counterfeit.

The inefficacy of the arrangement to the purpose intended to be answered by it is rendered probable by different considerations. If the standard of plate in the United States should be regulated according to that of the national coins, it is to be expected that the goldsmith would prefer these to the foreign coins, because he would find them prepared to his hand in the state which he desires; whereas he would have to expend an additional quantity of alloy to bring the foreign coins to that state. If the standard of plate, by law and usage, should be superior to that of the national coins, there would be a possibility of the foreign coins bearing a higher price in the market; and this would not only obstruct their being brought to the mint, but might occasion the exportation of the national coin in preference. It is not understood that the practice of making an abatement of price for the inferiority of standard is applicable to the English mint, and if it be not, this would also contribute to frustrating the expected effect from the increase of alloy. For, in this case, a given quantity of pure metal, in our standard, would be worth as much there as in bullion of the English, or any other standard.

Considering, therefore, the uncertainty of the success of the expedient, and the inconveniences which seem incident to it, it would appear preferable to submit to those of a free coinage. It is observable that additional expense, which is one of the principal of these, is also applicable to the proposed remedy.

It is now proper to resume and finish the answer to the first question, in order to which the three succeeding ones have necessarily been anticipated. The conclusion to be drawn from the observations which have been made on the subject is this: that the unit in the coins of the United States ought to correspond with 24 grains and three-fourths of a grain of pure gold, and with 371 grains and one-fourth of a grain of pure silver, each answering to a dollar in the money of account. The former is exactly agreeable to the present value of gold, and the latter is within a small fraction of the mean of the two last emissions of dollars; the only ones which are now found in common circulation, and of which the newest is in the greatest abundance. The alloy in each case to be one-twelfth of the total weight, which will make the unit 27 grains of standard gold, and 405 grains of standard silver.

Each of these, it has been remarked, will answer to a dollar in the money of account. It is conceived that nothing better can be done in relation to this than to pursue the track marked out by the resolution of the 8th of August, 1786. This has been approved abroad as well as at home, and it is certain that nothing can be more simple and convenient than the decimal subdivisions. There is every reason to expect that the method will speedily grow into general use, when it shall be seconded by corresponding coins. On this plan the unit in the money of account will continue to be, as established by that resolution, a dollar, and its multiples, dimes, cents, and mills, or tenths, hundredths, and thousandths.

With regard to the number of different pieces which shall compose the coins of the United States, two things are to be consulted—convenience of circulation, and cheapness of the coinage. The first ought not to be sacrificed to the last; but as far as they can be reconciled to each other, it is desirable to do it. Numerous and small (if not too minute) subdivisions assist calculation; but the multiplication of the smaller kinds increases expense; the same process being necessary to a small as to a large piece.

As it is easy to add, it will be most advisable to begin with a small number till experience shall decide whether any other kinds are necessary. The following, it is conceived, will be sufficient in the commencement:

One gold piece, equal in weight and value to ten units or dollars.

One gold piece, equal to a tenth part of the former, and which shall be a unit or dollar.

One silver piece, which shall also be a unit or dollar.

One silver piece, which shall be, in weight and value, one tenth part of a silver unit or dollar.

One copper piece, which shall be of the value of a hundredth part of a dollar.

One other copper piece, which shall be half the value of the former.

It is not proposed that the lightest piece of the two gold coins should be numerous, as in large payments the larger the pieces the shorter the process of counting, the less risk of mistake, and consequently, the greater the safety and the convenience; and in small payments it is not perceived that any inconvenience can accrue from an entire dependence on the silver and copper coins. The chief inducement to the establishment of the small gold piece is to have a sensible object in that metal, as well as in silver, to express the unit. Fifty thousand at a time in circulation may suffice for this purpose.

Report on the Subject of a Mint.

The tenth part of a dollar is but a small piece, and with the aid of the copper coins will probably suffice for all the more minute uses of circulation. It is less than the least of the silver coins now in general currency in England.

The largest copper piece will nearly answer to the half penny sterling, and the smallest, of course, to the farthing. Pieces of very small value are a great accommodation, and the means of a beneficial economy to the poor, by enabling them to purchase, in small portions, and at a more reasonable rate, the necessities of which they stand in need. If there are only cents, the lowest price for any portion of a vendible commodity, however inconsiderable in quantity, will be a cent; if there are half cents, it will be a half cent, and in a great number of cases, exactly the same things will be sold for a half cent, which, if there were none, would cost a cent. But a half cent is low enough for the minimum of price. Excessive minuteness would defeat its object. To enable the poorer classes to procure necessities cheap, is to enable them, with more comfort to themselves, to labor for less; the advantages of which need no comment.

The denominations of the silver coins contained in the resolution of the 8th of August, 1786, are conceived to be significant and proper. The dollar is recommended by its correspondence with the present coin of that name for which it is designed to be a substitute, which will facilitate its ready adoption as such in the minds of the citizens. The dime or tenth, the cent or hundredth, the mill or thousandth, are proper, because they express the proportions which they are intended to designate. It is only to be regretted that the meaning of these terms will not be familiar to those who are not acquainted with the language from which they are borrowed. It were to be wished that the length, and, in some degree, the clumsiness of some of the corresponding terms in English did not discourage from preferring them. It is useful to have names which signify the things to which they belong; and in respect to objects of general use, in a manner intelligible to all. Perhaps it might be an improvement to let the dollar have the appellation either of dollar or unit, (which last will be the most significant,) and to substitute "tenths" for "dime." In time the unit may succeed to the dollar. The word cent, being in use in various transactions and instruments, will, without much difficulty, be understood as the hundredth, and the half cent, of course, as the two-hundredth part.

The eagle is not a very expressive or apt appellation for the largest gold piece, but nothing better occurs. The smallest of the two gold coins may be called the dollar or unit, in common with the silver piece with which it coincides.

The volume or size of each piece is a matter of more consequence than its denomination. It is evident that the more superficial, or surface, the more the piece will be liable to be injured by friction, or, in other words, the faster it will wear. For this reason it is desirable to render the thickness as great, in proportion to the breadth, as may consist with neatness and good appearance. Hence the form of the double guinea, or double louis d'or, is preferable to that of the half johannes for the large gold piece. The small one cannot well be of any other size than the Portuguese piece of eight of the same metal.

As it is of consequence to fortify the idea of the identity of the dollar, it may be best to let the form and size of the new one, as far as the quantity of matter (the alloy being less) permits, agree with the form and size of the present. The diameter may be the same.

The tenths may be in a mean between the Spanish one-eighth and one-sixteenth of a dollar. The copper coins may be formed merely with a view to good appearance, as any difference in the wearing that can result from difference of form, can be of little consequence in reference to that metal.

It is conceived that the weight of the cent may be 11 dwts., which will about correspond with the value of the copper and the expense of coinage. This will be to conform to the rule of intrinsic value, as far as regard to the convenient size of the coins will permit; and the deduction of the expense of coinage in this case will be the more proper, as the copper coins which have been current hitherto have passed till lately for much more than their intrinsic value. Taking the weight, as has been suggested, the size of the cent may be nearly that of the piece herewith transmitted, which weighs 10 dwts. 11 grs. 10 m. Two-thirds of the diameter of the cent will suffice for the diameter of the half cent.

It may, perhaps, be thought expedient, according to the general practice, to make the copper coinage an object of profit, but where this is done to any considerable extent, it is hardly possible to have effectual security against counterfeiters. This consideration, concurring with the soundness of the principle of preserving the intrinsic value of the money of a country, seems to outweigh the consideration of profit.

The foregoing suggestions respecting the sizes of the several coins are made on the supposition that the Legislature may think fit to regulate this matter. Perhaps, however, it may be judged not unadvisable to leave it to Executive discretion.

With regard to the proposed size of a cent, it is to be confessed that it is rather greater than might be wished, if it could, with propriety and safety, be made less; and should the value of copper continue to decline, as it has done for some time past, it is very questionable whether it will long remain alone a fit metal for money. This has led to a consideration of the expediency of uni-

Report on the Subject of a Mint.

ing a small proportion of silver with the copper, in order to be able to lessen the bulk of the inferior coins. For this there are precedents in several parts of Europe. In France, the composition which is called billon, has consisted of one part silver and four parts copper; according to which proportion, a cent might contain seventeen grains, defraying out of the material the expense of coinage. The convenience of size is a recommendation of such a species of coin, but the Secretary is deterred from proposing it by the apprehension of counterfeits. The effect of so small a quantity of silver in comparatively so large a quantity of copper, could easily be imitated by a mixture of other metals of little value, and the temptation to doing it would not be inconsiderable. The devices of the coins are far from being matters of indifference, as they may be made the vehicles of useful impressions. They ought therefore to be emblematical, but without losing sight of simplicity. The fewer sharp points and angles there are, the less will be the loss by wearing. The Secretary thinks it best, on this head, to confine himself to these concise and general remarks.

The last point to be discussed respects the currency of foreign coins. The abolition of this in proper season is a necessary part of the system contemplated for the national coinage. But this it will be expedient to defer till some considerable progress has been made in preparing substitutes for them. A gradation may therefore be found most convenient.

The foreign coins may be suffered to circulate precisely upon their present footing for one year after the mint shall have commenced its operations. The privilege may then be continued for another year to the gold coins of Portugal, England, and France, and to the silver coins of Spain. And these may still be permitted to be current for one year more at the rates allowed to be given for them at the mint; after the expiration of which the circulation of all foreign coins to cease.

The moneys which will be paid into the Treasury during the first year being recoined before they are issued anew will afford a partial substitute before any interruption is given to the pre-existing supplies of circulation. The revenues of the succeeding year, and the coins which will be brought to the mint in consequence of the discontinuance of their currency, will materially extend the substitute in the course of that year, and its extension will be so far increased during the third year, by the facility of procuring the remaining species to be recoined, which will arise from the diminution of their current values, as probably to enable the dispensing wholly with the circulation of foreign coins after that period. The progress which the currency of banks bills will be likely to have made during the same time will also afford a substitute of another kind.

This arrangement, besides avoiding a sudden stagnation of circulation, will cause a considerable proportion of whatever loss may be incident to the establishment, in the first instance, to fall, as it ought to do, upon the Government, and will probably tend to distribute the remainder of it more equally among the community.

It may, nevertheless, be advisable, in addition to the precautions here suggested, to repose a discretionary authority in the President of the United States, to continue the currency of the Spanish dollar at a value corresponding with the quantity of fine silver contained in it, beyond the period above mentioned for the cessation of the circulation of the foreign coins. It is possible that an exception in favor of this particular species of coin may be found expedient, and it may tend to obviate inconveniences, if there be a power to make the exception, in a capacity to be exerted when the period shall arrive.

The Secretary for the Department of State, in his report to the House of Representatives on the subject of establishing a uniformity in weights, measures, and coins of the United States, has proposed that the weight of the dollar should correspond with the unit of weight. This was done on the supposition that it would require but a very small addition to the quantity of metal which the dollar, independently of the object he had in view, ought to contain, in which he was guided by the resolution of the 8th of August, 1786, fixing the dollar at 375 grains and 64 hundredths of a grain.

Taking this as the proper standard of the dollar, a small alteration, for the sake of incorporating so systematic an idea, would appear desirable. But if the principles which have been reasoned from in this report are just, the execution of that idea becomes more difficult. It would certainly not be advisable to make on that account so considerable a change in the money unit, as would be produced by the addition of five grains of silver to the proper weight of the dollar, without a proportional augmentation of its relative value, and to make such an augmentation would be to abandon the advantage of preserving the identity of the dollar, or, to speak more accurately, of having the proposed one received and considered as a mere substitute for the present.

The end may, however, be obtained without either of those inconveniences by increasing the proportion of alloy in the silver coins. But this would destroy the uniformity in that respect between the gold and silver coins. It remains, therefore, to elect which of the two systematic ideas shall be pursued or relinquished; and it may be remarked that it will be more easy to convert the present silver coins into the proposed ones, if these last have the same or nearly the same proportion of alloy, than if they had less.

The organization of the mint yet remains to be considered.

This relates to the persons to be employed, and to the services which they are respectively to perform. It is conceived that there ought to be:

A director of the mint, to have the general superintendence of the business.

An assay master, or assayer, to receive the metals brought to the mint, ascertain their fineness, and deliver them to be coined.

A master coiner, to conduct the making of the coins.

Militia Plan.

A cashier, to receive and pay them out. An auditor, to keep and adjust the accounts of the mint.

Clerks, as many as the director of the mint shall deem necessary, to assist the different officers. Workmen, as many as may be found requisite. A porter.

In several of the European mints there are various other officers, but the foregoing are those only which appear to be indispensable. Persons in the capacity of clerks will suffice instead of the others, with the advantage of greater economy.

The number of workmen is left indefinite, because, at certain times, it is requisite to have more than at others. They will, however, never be numerous. The expense of the establishment in an ordinary year will probably be from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars.

The remedy for errors in the weight and alloy of the coins must necessarily form a part in the system of a mint; and the manner of applying it will require to be regulated. The following account is given of the practice in England, in this particular:

A certain number of pieces are taken promiscuously out of every fifteen pounds of gold coined at the mint, which are deposited for safe-keeping in a strong box, called the pix. This box, from time to time, is opened in the presence of the Lord Chancellor, the officers of the Treasury, and others, and portions are selected from the pieces of each coinage, which are melted together, and the mass assayed by a jury of the company of goldsmiths. If the imperfection and deficiency, both in fineness and weight, fall short of a sixth of a carat, or 40 grains of pure gold upon a pound of standard, the master of the mint is held excusable, because it is supposed that no workman can reasonably be answerable for greater exactness. The expediency of some similar regulation seems to be manifest.

All which is humbly submitted.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

GENERAL KNOX'S MILITIA PLAN.

WAR OFFICE, January 18, 1790.

SIR: Having submitted to your consideration a plan for the arrangement of the militia of the United States, which I had presented to the late Congress, and you having approved the general principles thereof, with certain exceptions, I now respectfully lay the same before you, modified according to the alterations you were pleased to suggest.

It has been my anxious desire to devise a national system of defence adequate to the probable exigencies of the United States, whether arising from internal or external causes; and, at the same time, to erect a standard of Republican magnanimity, independent of, and superior to, the powerful influences of wealth.

The convulsive events, generated by the indominate pursuit of riches or ambition, require that the Government should possess a strong corrective arm.

The idea is therefore submitted, whether an efficient military branch of Government can be invented, with safety to the great principles of liberty, unless the same shall be formed of the people themselves, and supported by their habits and manners.

I have the honor to be, sir,

With the most perfect respect,

Your most obedient servant,

H. KNOX,
Secretary for the Department of War.

THE INTRODUCTION.

That a well constituted Republic is more favorable to the liberties of society, and that its principles give a higher elevation to the human mind than any other form of Government, has generally been acknowledged by the unprejudiced and enlightened part of mankind.

But it is at the same time acknowledged, that, unless a Republic prepares itself by proper arrangements to meet those exigencies to which all States are in a degree liable, that its peace and existence are more precarious than the forms of Government in which the will of one directs the conduct of the whole, for the defence of the nation.

A Government, whose measures must be the result of multiplied deliberations, is seldom in a situation to produce instantly those exertions which the occasion may demand; therefore, it ought to possess such energetic establishments as should enable it, by the vigor of its own citizens, to control events as they arise, instead of being convulsed or subverted by them.

It is the misfortune of modern ages, that Governments have been formed by chance and events, instead of system; that, without fixed principles, they are braced or relaxed, from time to time, according to the predominating power of the rulers or the ruled; the rulers possessing separate interests from the people, except in some of the high-toned Monarchies, in which all opposition to the will of the Princes seems annihilated.

Hence, we look round Europe in vain for an extensive Government, rising on the power inherent in the people, and performing its operations entirely for their benefit. But we find artificial force governing every where, and the people generally made subservient to the elevation and caprice of the few; almost every nation appearing to be busily employed in conducting some external war; grappling with internal commotion; or endeavoring to extricate itself from impending debts, which threaten to overwhelm it with ruin. Princes and Ministers seem neither to have leisure nor inclination to bring forward institutions for diffusing general strength, knowledge, and happiness; but they seem to understand well the Machiavelian maxim of politics—divide and govern. May the United States avoid the errors and crimes of other Governments, and possess the wisdom to embrace the present invaluable opportunity of establishing such institutions as shall invigorate, exalt, and perpetuate, the great principles of freedom—an opportunity pregnant with the fate of millions, but rapidly borne on the wings of time, and which may never again return!

Militia Plan.

The public mind, unbiassed by superstition or prejudice, seems happily prepared to receive the impressions of wisdom. The latent springs of human action, ascertained by the standard of experience, may be regulated and made subservient to the noble purpose of forming a dignified national character.

The causes by which nations have ascended and declined, through the various ages of the world, may be calmly and accurately determined; and the United States may be placed in the singularly fortunate condition of commencing their career of empire with the accumulated knowledge of all the known societies and governments of the globe.

The strength of the Government, like the strength of any other vast and complicated machine, will depend on a due adjustment of its several parts: its agriculture, its commerce, its laws, its finance, its system of defence, and its manners and habits, all require consideration, and the highest exercise of political wisdom.

It is the intention of the present attempt to suggest the most efficient system of defence which may be compatible with the interests of a free people—a system which shall not only produce the expected effect, but which, in its operations, shall also produce those habits and manners which will impart strength and durability to the whole Government.

The modern practice of Europe, with respect to the employment of standing armies, has created such a mass of opinion in their favor, that even philosophers, and the advocates of liberty, have frequently confessed their use and necessity in certain cases.

But whoever seriously and candidly estimates the power of discipline, and the tendency of military habits, will be constrained to confess that, whatever may be the efficacy of a standing army in war, it cannot in peace be considered as friendly to the rights of human nature. The recent instance in France cannot with propriety be brought to overturn the general principle, built upon the uniform experience of mankind.

It may be found, on examining the causes that appear to have influenced the military of France, that while the springs of power were wound up in the nation to the highest pitch, that the discipline of the army was proportionably relaxed. But any argument on this head may be considered as unnecessary as to the enlightened citizens of the United States.

A small corps of well disciplined and well informed artillerymen and engineers, and a legion for the protection of the frontiers, and the magazines and arsenals, are all the military establishment which may be required for the present use of the United States. The privates of the corps to be enlisted for a certain period, and after the expiration of which, to return to the mass of the citizens. An energetic national militia is to be regarded as the capital security of a free Republic; and not a standing army, forming a distinct class in the community.

It is the introduction and diffusion of vice and corruption of manners into the mass of the people that render a standing army necessary. It is when public spirit is despised, and avarice, indolence, and effeminacy of manners predominate, and prevent the establishment of institutions which would elevate the minds of the youth in the paths of virtue and honor, that a standing army is formed and riveted forever.

While the human character remains unchangeable, and societies and governments of considerable extent are formed, a principle ever ready to execute the laws and defend the State must constantly exist. Without this vital principle, the Government would be invaded or overturned, and trampled upon by the bold and ambitious. No community can be long held together, unless its arrangements are adequate to its probable exigencies.

If it should be decided to reject a standing army for the military branch of the Government of the United States, as possessing too fierce an aspect, and being hostile to the principles of liberty, it will follow that a well constituted militia ought to be established.

A consideration of the subject will show the impracticability of disciplining at once the mass of the people. All discussions on the subject of a powerful militia will result in one or other of the following principles:

First. Either efficient institutions must be established for the military education of youth, and that the knowledge acquired therein shall be diffused throughout the community, by the mean of rotation; or,

Secondly. That the militia must be formed of substitutes, after the manner of the militia of Great Britain.

If the United States possess the vigor of mind to establish the first institution, it may reasonably be expected to produce the most unequivocal advantages. A glorious national spirit will be introduced, with its extensive train of political consequences. The youth will imbibe a love of their country; reverence and obedience to its laws; courage and elevation of mind; openness and liberality of character; accompanied by a just spirit of honor; in addition to which their bodies will acquire a robustness, greatly conducive to their personal happiness, as well as the defence of their country; while habit, with its silent but efficacious operations, will durably cement the system. Habit, that powerful and universal law, incessantly acting on the human race, well deserves the attention of legislators—formed at first in individuals, by separate and almost imperceptible impulses, until at length it acquires a force which controls with irresistible sway. The effects of salutary or pernicious habits, operating on a whole nation, are immense, and decides its rank and character in the world.

Militia Plan.

Hence the science of legislation teaches to scrutinize every national institution, as it may introduce proper or improper habits; to adopt with religious zeal the former, and reject with horror the latter.

A Republic, constructed on the principles herein stated, would be uninjured by events, sufficient to overturn a Government supported solely by the uncertain power of a standing army.

The well-informed members of the community, actuated by the highest motives of self-love, would form the real defence of the country. Rebellions would be prevented, or suppressed with ease. Invasions of such a Government would be undertaken only by madmen; and the virtues and knowledge of the people would effectually oppose the introduction of tyranny.

But the second principle, a militia of substitutes, is pregnant, in a degree, with the mischiefs of a standing army; as it is highly probable the substitutes, from time to time, will be nearly the same men, and the most idle and worthless part of the community. Wealthy families, proud of distinctions which riches may confer, will prevent their sons from serving in the militia of substitutes; the plan will generate into habitual contempt; a standing army will be introduced, and the liberties of the people subjected to all the contingencies of events.

The expense attending an energetic establishment of militia may be strongly urged as an objection to the institution. But it is to be remembered that this objection is levelled at both systems, whether by rotation or by substitutes; for, if the numbers are equal, the expense will also be equal. The estimate of the expense will show its unimportance, when compared with the magnitude and beneficial effects of the institution.

But the people of the United States will cheerfully consent to the expenses of a measure calculated to serve as a perpetual barrier to their liberties; especially as they well know that the disbursements will be made among the members of the same community, and therefore cannot be injurious.

Every intelligent mind would rejoice in the establishment of an institution, under whose auspices the youth and vigor of the constitution would be renewed with each successive generation, and which would appear to secure the great principles of freedom and happiness against the injuries of time and events.

The following plan is formed on these general principles:

First. That it is the indispensable duty of every nation to establish all necessary institutions for its own perfection and defence.

Secondly. That it is a capital security to a free State for the great body of the people to possess a competent knowledge of the military art.

Thirdly. That this knowledge cannot be attained in the present state of society, but by establishing adequate institutions for the military education of youth; and that the knowledge acquired therein should be diffused throughout the community by the principles of rotation.

Fourthly. That every man of the proper age and ability of body, is firmly bound by the social compact to perform, personally, his proportion of military duty for the defence of the State.

Fifthly. That all men of the legal military age should be armed, enrolled, and held responsible for different degrees of military service. And,

Sixthly. That, agreeably to the Constitution, the United States are to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia; and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States; reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

THE PLAN.

The period of life in which military service shall be required of the citizens of the United States, to commence at eighteen, and terminate at the age of sixty years.

The men comprehended by this description, exclusive of such exceptions as the Legislatures of the respective States may think proper to make, and all actual mariners, shall be enrolled for different degrees of military duty, and divided into three distinct classes.

The first class shall comprehend the youth of eighteen, nineteen, and twenty years of age; to be denominated the advanced corps.

The second class shall include the men from twenty-one to forty-five years of age; to be denominated the main corps.

The third class shall comprehend, inclusively, the men from forty-six to sixty years of age; to be denominated the reserved corps.

All the militia of the United States shall assume the form of the legion, which shall be the permanent establishment thereof.

A legion shall consist of one hundred and fifty-three commissioned officers, and two thousand eight hundred and eighty non-commissioned officers and privates, formed in the following manner:

First.—THE LEGIONARY STAFF.

- One Legionary, or Major General.
- Two Aids-de-Camps, of the rank of Major; one of whom to be Legionary Quartermaster.
- One Inspector and Deputy Adjutant General, of the rank of Lieutenant Colonel.
- One Chaplain.

Second.—THE BRIGADE STAFF.

- One Brigadier General.
- One Brigade Inspector, to serve as Aid-de-Camp.

Third.—THE REGIMENTAL STAFF.

- One Lieutenant Colonel Commandant.
- Two Majors.
- One Adjutant.
- One Paymaster, or Agent.
- One Quartermaster.

Militia Plan.

Fourth.—TWO BRIGADES OF INFANTRY.
Each brigade of two regiments; each regiment of eight companies, forming two battalions; each company of a captain, lieutenant, ensign, six sergeants, one drum, one fife, and sixty-four rank and file.

Fifth.—TWO COMPANIES OF RIFLEMEN.
Each company to have a captain, lieutenant, ensign, six sergeants, one bugle-horn, one drum, and sixty-four rank and file.

Sixth.—A BATTALION OF ARTILLERY.
Consisting of four companies; each to have a captain, captain lieutenant, one lieutenant, six sergeants, twelve artificers, and fifty-two rank and file.

Seventh.—A SQUADRON OF CAVALRY.
Consisting of two troops; each troop to have a captain, two lieutenants, a corpet, six sergeants, one farrier, one saddler, one trumpeter, and sixty-four dragoons.

In case the whole number of the advanced corps in any State should be insufficient to form a legion of this extent, yet the component parts must be preserved, and the reduction proportioned, as nearly as may be, to each part.

The companies of all the corps shall be divided into sections of twelve each. It is proposed, by this division, to establish one uniform vital principle, which, in peace and war, shall pervade the militia of the United States.

All requisitions for men to form an army, either for State or Federal purposes, shall be furnished by the advanced and main corps, by means of the sections.

The Executive Government or Commander-in-chief of the militia of each State, will assess the numbers required, on the respective legions of these corps.

The legionary general will direct the proportions to be furnished by each part of his command. Should the demand be so great as to require one man from each section, then the operation hereby directed shall be performed by single sections. But if a less number should be required, they will be furnished by an association of sections or companies, according to the demand.

In any case, it is probable that mutual convenience may dictate an agreement with an individual to perform the service required. If, however, no agreement can be made, one must be detached by an indiscriminate draught; and the others shall pay him a sum of money, equal to the average sum which shall be paid in the same legion for the voluntary performance of the service required.

In case any sections, or companies of a legion, after having furnished its own quota, should have more men, willing to engage for the service required, other companies of the same legion shall have permission to engage them. The same rule to extend to the different legions in the State.

The legionary general must be responsible to the commander-in-chief of the militia of the State, that the men furnished are according to the description, and that they are equipped in the manner, and marched to the rendezvous, conformably to the orders for that purpose.

The men who may be draughted, shall not serve more than three years at one time.

The reserved corps being destined for the domestic defence of the State, shall not be obliged to furnish men, excepting in cases of actual invasion or rebellion; and then the men required shall be furnished by means of the sections.

The actual commissioned officers of the respective corps shall not be included in the sections, nor in any of the operations thereof.

The respective States shall be divided into portions or districts; each of which to contain, as nearly as may be, some complete part of a legion.

Every citizen of the United States, who shall serve his country in the field, for the space of one year, either as an officer or soldier, shall, if under the age of twenty-one years, be exempted from the service required in the advanced corps. If he shall be above the age of twenty-one years, then every year he shall so serve in the field shall be estimated as equal to six years' service in the main or reserved corps, and shall accordingly exempt him from every service therein for the said term of six years, except in cases of actual invasion of, or rebellion within the State in which he resides. And it shall also be a permanent establishment, that six years' actual service in the field shall entirely free every citizen from any further demands of service, either in the militia, or in the field, unless in cases of invasion or rebellion.

All actual mariners or seamen, in the respective States, shall be registered in districts, and divided into two classes. The first class to consist of all the seamen from the age of sixteen to thirty years, inclusively. The second class to consist of all those of the age of thirty-one to forty-five inclusively.

The first class shall be responsible to serve three years on board of some public armed vessel or ship of war, as a commissioned officer, warrant officer, or private mariner, for which service they shall receive the customary wages and emoluments.

But should the State not demand the said three years' service during the above period, from the age of sixteen to thirty years, then the party to be exempted entirely therefrom.

The person so serving shall receive a certificate of his service on parchment, according to the form which shall be directed, which shall exempt him from any other than voluntary service, unless in such exigencies as may require the services of all the members of the community.

The second class shall be responsible for a proportion of service, in those cases to which the first class shall be unequal. The numbers required shall be furnished by sections in the same manner as is prescribed for the sections of the militia.

OF THE ADVANCED CORPS.

The advanced corps are designed not only as a school in which the youth of the United States are to be instructed in the art of war, but they are, in all cases of exigence, to serve as an actual defence to the community.

Militia Plan.

The whole of the armed corps shall be clothed according to the manner hereafter directed, armed and assisted at the expense of the United States; and all the youth of the said corps, in each State, shall be encamped together, if practicable, or by legions; which encampments shall be denominated the annual camps of discipline.

The youth of eighteen and nineteen years shall be disciplined for thirty days successively in each year; and those of twenty years shall be disciplined only for ten days in each year, which shall be the last ten days of the annual encampments.

The non-commissioned officers and privates are not to receive any pay during the said time. But the commissioned officers will receive the pay of their relative ranks, agreeably to the federal establishment for the time being.

In order that the plan shall effectually answer the end proposed, the first day of January shall be the fixed period for all who attain the age of eighteen years, in any part or during the course of each year, to be enrolled in the advanced corps, and to take the necessary oaths, to perform personally such legal military service as may be directed for the full and complete term of three years, to be estimated from the time of entrance into the said corps; and also to take an oath of allegiance to the State, and to the United States.

The commanding officer or general of the advanced legions of the district shall regulate the manner of the service of the youth respectively, whether it shall be in the infantry, artillery, or cavalry; but after having entered into either of them, no change should be allowed.

Each individual, at his first joining the annual camps of discipline, will receive complete arms and accoutrements, all of which, previously to his being discharged from the said camps, he must return to the regimental quartermaster, on the penalty of ——— dollars, or ——— months' imprisonment.

The said arms and accoutrements shall be marked in some conspicuous place with the letters M. U. S.; and all sales or purchases of any of the said arms or accoutrements shall be severely punished according to law.

And each individual will also, on his first entrance into the advanced corps, receive the following articles of uniform clothing, one hat, one uniform short coat, one waistcoat, and one pair of overalls; which he shall retain in his own possession, and for which he shall be held accountable, and be compelled to replace all deficiencies during his service in the annual camps of discipline.

Those who shall serve in the cavalry shall be at the expense of their own horses, and uniform helmets, and horse furniture; but they shall receive forage for their horses, swords, pistols, and clothing, equal in value to the infantry.

At the age of twenty-one years, every individual having served in the manner and for the time prescribed, shall receive an honorary certificate thereof, on parchment, and signed by the legionary general and inspector.

The names of all persons to whom such certificates shall be given shall be fairly registered in books to be provided for that purpose.

And the said certificate, or an attested copy of the register aforesaid, shall be required as an indispensable qualification for exercising any of the rights of a free citizen, until after the age of ——— years.

The advanced legions, in all cases of invasion or rebellion shall, on requisition of lawful authority, be obliged to march to any place within the United States, to remain embodied for such time as shall be directed, not to exceed one year, to be computed from the time of marching from the regimental parades; during the period of their being on such service, to be placed on the continental establishment of pay, subsistence, clothing, forage, tents, camp-equipage, and all such other allowances as are made to the federal troops at the same time, and under the same circumstances.

If the military service so required should be for such a short period as to render an actual issue of clothing unnecessary, then an allowance should be made, in proportion to the annual cost of clothing for the federal soldier, according to estimates to be furnished for that purpose from the war-office of the United States.

In case the legions of the advanced corps should march to any place, in consequence of a requisition of the General Government, all legal and proper expenses of such march shall be paid by the United States. But should they be embodied, and march in consequence of an order derived from the authority of the State to which they belong, and for State purposes, then the expenses will be borne by the State.

The advanced corps shall be constituted on such principles that, when completed, it will receive one-third part, and discharge one-third part of its numbers annually. By this arrangement, two-thirds of the corps will, at all times, be considerably disciplined; but as it will only receive those of eighteen years of age, it will not be completed until the third year after its institution. Those who have already attained the ages of nineteen and twenty years will, in the first instance, be enrolled in the main corps.

But one-half of the legionary officers to be appointed to the first, and the other the second year of the establishment.

The officers of each grade in the States respectively shall be divided into three classes, which shall by lot be numbered one, two, and three; and one of the said classes, according to their numbers, shall be changed every third year. In the first period of nine years, one-third part will have to serve three, one-third part six, and one-third part nine years. But, after the said first period, the several classes will serve nine years, which shall be the limitation of service by virtue of the same appointment; and in such cases, where there may not be three officers of the same grade, the limitation of nine years' service shall be observed. All vacancies occasioned by the aforesaid derangements, or any casualties, shall be immediately filled by new appointments.

Militia Plan.

The captains and subalterns of the advanced corps shall not be less than twenty-one, nor more than thirty-five, and the field officers shall not exceed forty-five years of age.

Each company, battalion, and regiment shall have a fixed parade, or place at which to assemble. The companies shall assemble at their own parade, and march to the regimental parade; and the battalions to the regimental parade; and when thus embodied, the regiment will march to the rendezvous of the legion. Every commanding officer of a company, battalion, and regiment, will be accountable to his superior officer, that his command is in the most perfect order.

The officers to receive subsistence money, in lieu of provisions, in proportion to their respective grades, and those whose duties require them to be on horseback will receive forage in the same proportion.

Every legion must have a chaplain, of respectable talents and character, who, besides his religious functions, should impress on the minds of the youth, at stated periods, in concise discourses, the eminent advantages of free Governments on the happiness of society, and that such Governments can only be supported by the knowledge, spirit, and virtuous conduct of the youth; to be illustrated by the most conspicuous examples of history.

No amusement should be admitted in camp, but those which correspond with war—the swimming of men and horses, running, wrestling, and such other exercises as shall render the body flexible and vigorous.

The camps should, if possible, be formed near a river, and remote from large cities. The first is necessary for the practice of the manoeuvres, the second to avoid the vices of populous places.

The time of the annual encampments shall be divided into six parts, or periods of five days each. The first of which shall be occupied in acquiring the air, attitudes, and first principles of a soldier; the second in learning the manual exercise, and to march individually and in small squads; the third and fourth in exercising and manoeuvring in detail, and by battalions and regiments. In the fifth, the youth of twenty, having been disciplined during the two preceding annual encampments, are to be included. This period is to be employed in the exercise and tactics of the legion; or, if more than one, in executing the grand manoeuvres of the whole body; marching, attacking, and defending, in various forms different grounds and positions; in fine, in representing all the real images of war, excepting the effusion of blood.

The guards, and every other circumstance of the camp, to be perfectly regulated.

Each State will determine on the season in which its respective annual encampments shall be formed, so as best to suit the health of the men, and the general interests of society.

The United States to make an adequate provision to supply the arms, clothing, rations, artillery, ammunition, forage, straw, tents, camp-equipage, including every requisite for the annual camps of discipline; and also for the pay and subsistence of the legionary officers, and for the following general staff:—one inspector-general, one adjutant-general, one quartermaster-general, with a deputy for each State.

These officers will be essential to the uniformity, economy, and efficacy of the system, to be appointed in the manner prescribed by the Constitution of the United States.

The quartermaster-general shall be responsible to the United States for the public property of every species, delivered to him for the annual camps of discipline; and his deputy in each State shall be responsible to him.

At the commencement of the annual camps of discipline, the deputy quartermaster will make regular issues to the legionary or regimental quartermasters, as the case may be, of all the articles of every species, provided by the United States.

The returns for the said articles, to be examined and certified by the highest legionary or regimental officer, as the case may be, who shall be responsible for the accuracy thereof.

At the expiration of the annual camps of discipline, all public property (clothing excepted) shall be returned to the deputy quartermaster of State, who shall hold the legionary quartermaster accountable for all his deficiencies. All the apparatus and property so returned shall be carefully examined, repaired, and deposited in a magazine, to be provided in each State for that purpose, under the charge of the said deputy quartermaster, until the ensuing annual encampment, or any occasion which may render a new issue necessary.

Corporal punishments shall never be inflicted in the annual camps of discipline; but a system of fines and imprisonment shall be formed for the regular government of said camps.

OF THE MAIN CORPS.

As the main and reserved corps are to be replenished by the principle of rotation from the advanced corps, and ultimately to consist of men who have received their military education therein, it is proper that one uniform arrangement should pervade the several classes.

It is for this reason the legion is established as the common form of all the corps of the militia.

The main legions, consisting of the great majority of the men of the military age, will form the principal defence of the country.

They are to be responsible for their proportion of men, to form an army whenever necessary shall dictate the measure; and on every sudden occasion to which the advanced corps shall be incompetent, an adequate number of non-commissioned officers and privates shall be added thereto from the main corps, by means of the sections.

Militia Plan.

The main corps will be perfectly armed in the first instance, and will practise the exercise and manoeuvres four days in each year, and will assemble in their respective districts, by companies, battalions, regiments, or legions, as shall be directed by the legionary general; but it must be a fixed rule, that in the populous parts of the States the regiments must assemble once annually, and the legions once in three years.

Although the main corps cannot acquire a great degree of military knowledge in the few days prescribed for its annual exercise, yet by the constant accession of the youth from the advanced corps it will soon command respect for its discipline as well as its numbers.

When the youth are transferred from the advanced corps, they shall invariably join the flank companies, the cavalry, or artillery of the main corps, according to the nature of their former services.

OF THE RESERVED CORPS.

The reserved corps will assemble only twice annually for the inspection of arms, by companies, battalions, or regiments, as shall be directed by each State. It will assemble by legions, whenever the defence of the State may render the measure necessary.

Such are the propositions of the plan: to which it may be necessary to add some explanations.

Although the substantial political maxim, which requires personal service of all the members of the community for the defence of the State, is obligatory under all forms of society, and is the main pillar of a free Government, yet the degrees thereof may vary at the different periods of life, consistently with the general welfare. The public convenience may also dictate a relaxation of the general obligation as it respects the principal magistrates, and the ministers of justice and religion, and perhaps some religious sects. But it ought to be remembered that measures of national importance never should be frustrated for the accommodation of individuals.

The military age has generally commenced at sixteen, and terminated at the age of sixty years; but the youth of sixteen do not commonly attain such a degree of robust strength as to enable them to sustain without injury the hardships incident to the field; therefore the commencement of military service is herein fixed at eighteen, and the termination, as usual, at sixty years of age.

As the plan proposes the militia shall be divided into three capital classes, and that each class shall be formed into legions, the reasons for which shall be given in succession.

The advanced corps and annual camps of discipline are instituted in order to introduce an operative military spirit in the community. To establish a course of honorable military service which will, at the same time, mould the minds of the young men to a due obedience of the laws, instruct them in the art of war, and by the manly exercises of the field form a race of hardy citizens, equal to the dignified task of defending their country.

An examination into the employments and obligations of the individuals composing the society will evince the impossibility of diffusing an adequate knowledge of the art of war by any other means than a course of discipline during the period of nonage. The time necessary to acquire this important knowledge cannot be afforded at any other period of life with so little injury to the public or private interests.

Without descending to minute distinctions, the body of the people of the United States may be divided into two parts; the yeomanry of the country, and the men of various employments, resident in towns and cities. In both parts it is usual for the male children, from the age of fourteen to twenty-one years, to learn some trade or employment under the direction of a parent or master. In general, the labor or service of the youth during this period, besides amply repaying the trouble of tuition, leaves a large profit to the tutor. This circumstance is stated to show that no great hardships will arise in the first operations of the proposed plan; a little practice will render the measure perfectly equal, and remove every difficulty.

Youth is the time for the State to avail itself of those services which it has a right to demand and by which it is to be invigorated and preserved; in this season the passions and affections are strongly influenced by the splendor of military parade. The impressions the mind receives will be retained through life. The young man will repair with pride and pleasure to the field of exercise; while the head of a family, anxious for its general welfare, and perhaps its immediate subsistence, will reluctantly quit his domestic duties for any length of time.

The habits of industry will be rather strengthened than relaxed by the establishment of the annual camps of discipline, as all the time will be occupied by the various military duties. Idleness and dissipation will be regarded as disgraceful, and punished accordingly. As soon as the youth attain the age of manhood, a natural solicitude to establish themselves in society will occur in its full force. The public claims for military service will be too inconsiderable to injure their industry. It will be sufficiently stimulated to proper exertions by the prospects of opulence attending on the cultivation of a fertile soil, or the pursuits of a productive commerce.

It is presumed that thirty days annually during the eighteenth and nineteenth, and ten days during the twentieth year, is the least time that ought to be appropriated by the youth to the acquisition of the military art. The same number of days might be added during the twentieth as during the two preceding years, were not the expense an objection.

Every means will be provided by the public to facilitate the military education of the youth, which it is proposed shall be an indispensable qualification of a free citizen, therefore they will not be entitled to any pay. But the officers being of the main corps are, in a different predicament; they are supposed to have passed through the course of discipline required by the laws, and to be competent to instruct others in the military art. As the public will have but small claims for personal services on them, and as they must incur considerable expenses to prepare themselves to execute properly their respective offices, they ought to be paid while on actual duty.

Militia Plan.

As soon as the service of the youth expires in the advanced corps they are to be enrolled in the main corps. On this occasion the Republic receives disciplined and free citizens, who understand their public rights, and are prepared to defend them.

The main corps is instituted to preserve and circulate throughout the community the military discipline acquired in the advanced corps; to arm the people, and fix firmly by practice and habit, those forms and maxims which are essential to the life and energy of a free Government.

The reserved corps is instituted to prevent men being sent to the field whose strength is unequal to sustain the severities of an active campaign. But by organizing and rendering them eligible for domestic service, a greater portion of the younger and robust part of the community may be enabled, in cases of necessity, to encounter the more urgent duties of war.

It would be difficult, previously to the actual formation of the annual camps of discipline, to ascertain the number in each State of which it would be composed. The frontier counties of several States are thinly inhabited, and require all their internal force for their immediate defence. There are other infant settlements from which it might be injurious to draw away their youth annually for the purpose of discipline.

No evil will result if the establishment of the advanced corps should be omitted in such districts for a few years. Besides, the forbearance in this respect would lessen the expense, and render the institution more compatible with the public finances.

The several State Legislatures, therefore, as best understanding their local interests, might be invested with a discretionary power to omit the enrolments for the advanced corps in such of their frontier and thinly inhabited counties as they may judge proper.

If the number of three millions may be assumed as the total number of the inhabitants of the United States, half a million may be deducted therefrom for blacks; and pursuant to the foregoing ideas, another half million may be deducted on account of the thinly settled parts of the country.

The proportion of men of the military age from eighteen to sixty years inclusively, of two millions of people of all ages and sexes, may be estimated at 400,000. There may be deducted from this number as actual mariners, about 50,000, and a further number of 25,000, to include exempted of religious sects, and of every other sort which the respective States may think proper to make.

Three hundred and twenty-five thousand, therefore, may be assumed as the number of operative.

fencible men, to compose the militia. The proportion of the several classes of which would be nearly as follows:

Firstly. The advanced corps, one-tenth composed of the youth of the ages of eighteen, nineteen, and twenty years, - 32,500

Secondly. The main corps, six-tenths and one-twentieth - 211,250

Thirdly. The reserved corps, two-tenths and one-twentieth - 81,250

Total, 325,000

The following estimate is formed for the purpose of exhibiting the annual expense of the institution of the advanced corps, stating the same at 30,000 men.

Estimate of the expense of the annual camps of discipline, as proposed in the foregoing plan, arising on each of the three first years, and after that period of the annual expense of the institution.

The First Year.

10,000 suits of uniform clothing, stated at eight dollars; each suit of which shall serve for three years' discipline - $80,000

10,000 rations per day for thirty days, each ration stated at ten cents - 30,000

The expense of four complete corps of legionary officers of all descriptions, for thirty days, including pay, subsistence, and forage - 27,870

Forage for the cavalry - 4,800

Straw, camp-kettles, bowls, axes, canteens, and fuel - 20,000

Annual proportion of the expense of tents for officers and soldiers, which may serve for eight annual encampments - 3,000

Four legionary standards - 2,000

Regimental colors - 1,000

Consumption of powder and ball, shot and shells, damage to arms and accoutrements, and artillery, and transportation of the same, stated at - 25,000

Hospital department - 5,000

Contingencies of the quartermaster's and other departments - 15,000

General staff, adjutant general, quartermaster general, inspector general, and their deputies, for general, and their deputies, - 12,000

Entire expense of the first year, 225,670

Additional expenses on the second year.

10,000 rations per day, for thirty days, are 300,000 rations, at ten cents, - $30,000

The expense of four complete corps of legionary officers of all descriptions, for thirty days, including pay, subsistence, and forage, - 27,870

Four legionary standards, - 2,000

Militia Plan.

Regimental colors, - 1,000

Forage for the cavalry, - 4,800

Tents, straw, camp-kettles, bowls, axes, canteens, and fuel, - 20,000

Hospital department, - 5,000

Contingencies in the quartermaster's and other departments, - 15,000

Ammunition, damage to arms and accoutrements, - 15,000

Combined expenses of the first and second year, 120,670

346,340

Additional expenses on the third year.

The expense of 10,000 rations for ten days, is 100,000 rations, at ten cents, - $10,000

Forage, - 1,600

For the camp equipage, - 10,000

Tents, - 1,500

Hospital stores, - 1,000

Ammunition, damage to arms and accoutrements, - 10,000

Contingencies in the quartermaster's and other departments, - 10,000

The total expense of the first three years, $390,440

It is to be observed that the officers for four legions will be adequate to command the youth of eighteen, who commence their discipline the first year, and that the same number of officers will be required for the second year. The youth of the third year may be incorporated by sections in the existing corps, so that no additional officers will be required on their account.

Hence it appears that the expense of 10,000 men, for one year, amounts to $225,670

20,000 for the second year, to 346,340

30,000 for the third year, to 390,440

If the youth of the three ages of eighteen, nineteen, and twenty, be disciplined at once, the last mentioned sum will be about the fixed annual expense of the camps of discipline, from which, however, is to be deducted $6,000, being the expense of the standards and colors, the former of which will be of a durable nature, and the latter will not require to be replaced oftener than once in twenty years, - 6,000

The annual expense of the advanced corps, $384,440

Thus, for a sum less than four hundred thousand dollars annually, which, apportioned on three millions of people, would be little more than one-eighth of a dollar each, an energetic republican militia may be durably established, the invaluable principles of liberty secured and perpetuated, and a dignified national fabric erected on the solid foundation of public virtue.

The main and reserved corps must be perfectly organized in the first instance; but the advanced corps will not be completed until the third year of its institution.

The combination of troops of various descriptions into one body, so as to invest it with the highest and greatest number of powers in every possible situation, has long been a subject of discussion, and difference of opinion; but no other form appears so well to have sustained the criterion of time and severe examination as the Roman legion. This formidable organization, accommodated to the purposes of modern war, still retains its original energy and superiority. Of the ancients, Polybius and Vegetius have described and given the highest encomiums of the legion. The former, particularly in his comparative view of the advantages and disadvantages of the Macedonian and Roman arms, and their respective orders of battles, has left to mankind an instructive and important legacy. Of the moderns, the illustrious Mareschal Saxe has modelled the legion for the use of fire-arms, and strenuously urges its adoption in preference to any other form. And the respectable and intelligent veteran, late inspector general of the armies of the United States, recommends the adoption of the legion.*

"Upon a review," says he, "of all the military of Europe, there does not appear to be a single form which could be safely adopted by the United States. They are unexceptionably different from each other; and like all other human institutions, seem to have started as much out of accident as design. The local situation of the country, the spirit of the Government, the character of the nation, and in many instances the character of the prince, have all had their influence in settling the foundation and discipline of their respective troops, and render it impossible that we should take either as a model. The legion, alone, has not been adopted by any; and yet I am confident in asserting, that whether it be examined as applicable to all countries, or as it may immediately apply to the existing or probable necessity of this, it will be found strikingly superior to any other.

"1st. Being a complete and little army of itself, it is ready to begin its operations on the shortest notice or slightest alarm. 2d. Having all the component parts of the largest army of any possible description, it is prepared to meet every species of war that may present itself; and, 3d, as in every case of detachment the first constitutional principle will be preserved, and the embarrassments of draughting and detail, which in armies differently framed too often distract the commanding officer, will be avoided.

"It may easily suggest itself from this sketch, that in forming a legion the most difficult task is to determine the necessary proportion of each species of soldiers which is to compose it. This must obviously depend upon what will be the theatre, and what the style of the war. On the plains of Poland, whole brigades of cavalry would be necessary against every enemy; but in the forest, and among the hills of America, a single regiment would be more than sufficient against any; and as there are but two kinds of war to which we are much exposed, viz: an attack from the sea-side by a European Power, aided by our sworn enemies, settled on our extreme left, and an invasion of our back settlements by an Indian enemy, it follows, of course, that musketeers and light infantry should make the greatest part of your army."

* Vide letter addressed to the inhabitants of the United States on the subject of the established militia.

Militia Plan.

The institution of the section is intended to interest the patriotism and pride of every individual in the militia; to support the legal measures of a free government; to render every man active in the public cause, by introducing the spirit of emulation, and a degree of personal responsibility.

The common mode of recruiting is attended with too great destruction of morals to be tolerated, and is too uncertain to be the principal resource of a wise nation in time of danger. "The public faith is frequently wounded by unworthy individuals, who hold out delusive promises, which can never be realized. By such means an unprincipled banditti are often collected for the purpose of defending every thing that should be dear to freemen. The consequences are natural; such men either desert in time of danger, or are ever ready, on the slightest disgust, to turn their arms against their country."

By the establishment of the sections, an ample and permanent source is opened, whence the State, in every exigence, may be supplied with men whose all depends upon the prosperity of their country.

In cases of necessity, an army may be formed of citizens, whose previous knowledge of discipline will enable it to proceed to an immediate accomplishment of the designs of the State, instead of exhausting the public resources by wasting whole years in preparing to face the enemy.

The previous arrangements, necessary to form and maintain the annual encampments, as well as the discipline acquired therein, will be an excellent preparation for war. The artillery and its numerous appendages, arms and accoutrements of every kind, and all species of ammunition, ought to be manufactured within the United States. It is of high importance that the present period should be embraced to establish adequate institutions to produce the necessary apparatus of war. It is unworthy the dignity of a rising and free empire to depend on foreign and fortuitous supplies of the essential means of defence.

The clothing for the troops could, with ease, be manufactured in the United States; and the establishment, in that respect, would tend to the encouragement of important manufactories.

The disbursements made in each State for the rations, forage, and other necessary articles for the annual camps of discipline, would most beneficially circulate the money arising from the public revenue.

The local circumstances of the United States, their numerous seaports, and the protection of their commerce, require a naval arrangement. Hence the necessity of the proposed plan, embracing the idea of the States obtaining men on republican principles, for the marine as well as the land service. But one may be accomplished with much greater facility than the other, as the preparation of a soldier for the field requires a degree of discipline which cannot be learned without much time and labor, whereas the common course of sea service on board of merchant vessels differs but little from the service required on board of armed ships; therefore the education for war, in this respect, will be obtained without any expense to the State. All that seems to be requisite on the head of marine service is, that an efficient regulation should be established in the respective States, to register all actual seamen, and to render those of a certain age amenable to the public for personal service, if demanded within a given period.

The constitutions of the respective States, and of the United States, having directed a mode in which the officers of the militia shall be appointed, no alteration can be made therein. Although it may be supposed that some modes of appointment are better calculated than others to inspire the highest propriety of conduct, yet there are none so defective to serve as a sufficient reason for rejecting an efficient system for the militia. It is certain that the choice of officers is the point on which the reputation and importance of a corps must depend. Therefore, every person who may be concerned in the appointment, should consider himself as responsible to his country for a proper choice.

The wisdom of the States will be manifested by inducing those citizens of whom the late American army was composed, to accept of appointments in the militia. The high degree of military knowledge which they possess was acquired at too great a price, and is too precious to be buried in oblivion; it ought to be cherished, and rendered permanently beneficial to the community.

The vigor and importance of the proposed plan will entirely depend on the laws relative thereto. Unless the laws shall be equal to the object, and rigidly enforced, no energetic national militia can be established.

If wealth be admitted as a principle of exemption the plan cannot be executed. It is the wisdom of political establishments to make the wealth of individuals subservient to the general good, and not to suffer it to corrupt or attain undue indulgence.

It is conceded, that people, solicitous to be ex-personal service from its members, but the right to regulate the service on principles of equality for the general defence. All being bound, none can complain of injustice on being obliged to perform his equal proportion. Therefore, it ought to be a permanent rule, that those who in youth decline, or refuse to subject themselves to the course of military education, established by the laws, should be considered as unworthy of public trust, or public honors, and be excluded therefrom accordingly.

If the majesty of the laws should be preserved inviolate in this respect, the operations of the proposed plan would foster a glorious public spirit, infuse the principles of energy and stability into the body politic, and give a high degree of political splendor to the national character.

POSTMASTER GENERAL'S REPORT.

The Secretary of the Treasury, agreeably to notice given in his report on the 14th current, laid before the House the following:

GENERAL POST OFFICE,
NEW YORK, Jan. 20, 1790.

SIR: In obedience to the orders of the Supreme Executive, I have the honor of laying before you such remarks and observations as have occurred to me in attending to the Department of the Post Office. Many of these observations will be found to be of a general nature, and founded in opinion: for there are not documents in the office on which to found estimates that would afford satisfaction.

The existing ordinance for regulating the Post Office, though very defective in many things, has not probably ever been put fully in execution; yet the smallness of the revenue arising under the same may have been the effect of various causes, some of which could not, and others might have been remedied, but not so fully as they may under the present government.

As to the revenue of the Post Office, it may be observed, first, that there may be so few letters written, that, under the best regulations, it would not amount to any thing considerable; and the dispersed manner of settling the count-tiveness of the Post Office.

2d. The franking of letters may have been extended too far.

3d. Ship letters may not have been properly attended to.

4th. The rate of postage may have been too high in some instances, and too low in others.

5th. Stage drivers and private post riders may have been the carriers of many letters which ought to have gone in the mail.

6th. The Postmasters may have consulted their own interest in preference to that of the public.

Remedies may be applied to all these cases except the first.

Postmaster General's Report.

With respect to that article, I have no documents on which to found an opinion that may be relied on.

The amount of revenue will undoubtedly be considerable if the Department is well regulated. If we should form an opinion from a comparative view of the wealth, numbers, and revenue of the post offices of other countries, it would be, that the Post Office of the United States ought to bring in annually nearly half a million of dollars, under similar regulations; whereas the gross receipts, in any one year, have not exceeded thirty-five thousand dollars, and for the two last years have been at about twenty-five thousand dollars a year.

The revenue of the Post Office, at present, arises principally from letters passing from one seaport to another; and this source will be constantly increasing.

As we average the postage paid on letters at five cents, five hundred thousand letters would produce the sum that now arises from the Post Office annually.

A revenue of five hundred thousand dollars would require ten millions at five cents; five millions, at ten cents; and three millions and one-third, at fifteen cents; which last rate is probably nearer the true average than either of the other sums.

If there be one hundred thousand persons that write in the course of a year, each of them thirty letters, it will nearly make that number, or twenty-five thousand that write severally one hundred and twenty letters.

Foreign letters should also be taken into the computation, which are very numerous, and in other countries are subjected to a heavy rate of postage.

If, however, we should place the net revenue at one hundred thousand dollars, even this sum must be an object of great importance to the Treasury of the United States. But it will require some time to get a system into operation so as to produce it.

Unless a more energetic system is established than the present one, there will be no surplus revenue that will be worth calculating upon.

The great extent of territory over which three millions of people are settled, occasions a great expense in transporting the mail; and it will be found impracticable to accommodate all that wish to be accommodated, unless a great proportion of the revenue be given up for this object.

The applications for new post offices, and new post roads, are numerous; cross roads must be established, and of very considerable extent, in order to open a communication with the Treasury and the revenue offices.

On franked letters, I have to observe that the accounts have not been so kept in the post offices as that we can ascertain what the amount would be, if they were charged with the usual rates of postage.

Newspapers, which have hitherto passed free of postage, circulate extensively through the post offices; one or two cents upon each would probably amount to as much as the expenses of transporting the mail.

Postmaster General's Report.

The third article, if properly regulated, would be a source of great revenue, if the postage could be collected—the present rates could not produce a revenue much short of fifty thousand dollars a year. But upon the construction that has heretofore been put upon the ordinance of Congress, ship letters have operated as a clear loss to the revenue.

The clause of the ordinance is as follows:

"For any distance not exceeding sixty miles, one pennyweight eight grains; upwards of sixty miles, and not exceeding one hundred miles, two pennyweights, and so on; and for all single letters to and from Europe, by the packet, or despatch vessel, four pennyweights; and to the foregoing rates shall be added a sum not exceeding four-ninetieths of a dollar upon any letter, packet, or despatch, which shall come into the Post Office from beyond sea by any other conveyance than by packet, or despatch vessel."

The meaning of this clause, as it relates to ship letters, appears to be plain. Packet or despatch vessels can intend none other than American. All letters coming into the Post Office from beyond sea, by other conveyance than American packets, should be charged with the four pennyweights, equal to twenty-ninetieths, and the additional sum of four-ninetieths, making twenty-four ninetieths; and if such letters are forwarded by land through the post offices, the usual rates for travelling letters should be charged over and above the twenty-four ninetieths.

The rates correspond nearly with the British rates for the like kind of letters. But whether so high a rate of postage ought to be put on letters that come by French or British packets, is a matter that is questioned by many.

The practice has been to charge two-ninetieths on ship letters delivered out at the same place where they were first received, and four-ninetieths in addition to the fixed rate of travelling letters, on those forwarded to other places, if they came from beyond sea by any other conveyance than French or British packets. The two-ninetieths have been considered as a perquisite to the Postmaster, the General Post Office has not been credited with it. And as the postmasters are authorized to pay one-ninetieth a letter to the captains or masters of vessels bringing the same, they take credit to themselves for the one-ninetieth in their account current with the General Post Office. In one of the post offices this one-ninetieth has amounted to one hundred and sixty dollars a year; and consequently the twenty-four ninetieths, if it had been charged, would have amounted to three thousand eight hundred and forty dollars a year.

The late postmaster at this place had, as perquisites, over and above his commission of twenty per cent., more than all the money that arose from ship letters, and one hundred and twenty pounds a year for his trouble with respect to French and British packets.

The foregoing rates of postage were reduced twenty-five per cent. by an act of Congress of the year 1787.

On the fourth article I will give my reasons for apprehending that the rates of postage are in some instances too high.

Wherever Congress may hold their sessions, it will be considered as the centre of the United States, and will necessarily occasion a great deal of letter-writing to that place. The extremes are, in my opinion, entitled to an easy and cheap access to that place through the Post Office. Their comparative advantages derived from the General Government are smaller than those of the more central, and ought not to be diminished by the heavy rates of postages that now exist.

The postage of a single letter from Georgia, or rather Savannah, to New York, is thirty-three ninetieths of a dollar, which amounts almost to a prohibition of communication through the Post Office. If it should be reduced to about sixteen cents, the revenue would not probably be injured by it.

So far as I have been able to collect the opinions of others relative to the fifth article, the injury the general revenue has sustained in this way is greater than I had expected; perhaps no complete remedy can be devised for this evil, yet it may undoubtedly be remedied in a great measure.

In the present manner of contracting to carry the mail, especially by stage carriages, the contractors labor under disadvantages on account of the shortness of the time. One of them has property to the amount of nearly twenty thousand dollars employed in the transportation of the mail. Whenever they undertake to carry it one or two hundred miles, it costs them several thousand dollars for horses and carriages. This property sinks considerably in his hands if he fails to contract the next year. Many of them urge this contingency as a reason for a higher charge.

The advertising for proposals for carrying the mail, places the Postmaster General in a disagreeable predicament; for many poor people make proposals at so low a rate, that it is obvious the business cannot be done as it ought to be, and consequently there cannot be a strict adherence to the lowest proposals. Discretion must be used, and the contract must be given to him who will most probably perform the duty with punctuality. A few failures in a year injure the General Post Office more than the public can be benefited by the recovery of the penalties in the contractor's bonds.

Whether it will not be proper to give the contractors, that carry the mail by stage carriages, the exclusive privilege of driving stages on the post roads, is submitted for consideration.

There are at this time about twenty different contracts for carrying the mail, which has a greater tendency to put the business into confusion than I apprehended. Every contractor consults his own interest as to the days and hours of arrival and departure of the mail, without having a due regard to the necessary connexion of the Post Office. A regular system of days and hours of departure has never been established further southward than Alexandria.

Postmaster General's Report.

The contracts for carrying the mail to the southward of New York the ensuing year, amount to - - - - - $14,973 75

And to the eastward of the same place, to - - - - - 6,003 15

$20,977 00

With the exclusive privilege of driving stages, and the contracts being for a greater length of time, this sum would probably be sufficient to induce men of property to come forward, when character and reputation would be the best kind of security for the Post Office. It is so necessary to establish regularity, in order to promote a well-founded confidence in the Post Office, which, I think, can hardly be effected upon the present mode of contracting, that if a different one should eventually cost something more, yet the Department would be benefited by it.

It is not difficult to ascertain what ought to be given for carrying the mail a mile. If the Legislature should fix the sum, it would then be the duty of the Postmaster General to find out such as he could place the most confidence in to execute the business well. This method has always been practised in England, so far as I understand the regulations of the post office there.

On the sixth article it may be observed, that very small advantages taken by those concerned in the receipt of postage will, in a year, amount to a great sum. In some instances these may be justifiable; for example, the postage of a single letter from New York to Philadelphia is one pennyweight eight grains, or sixpence two-thirds Pennsylvania currency. This cannot be made out in any pieces of coin current in the United States. The letter is charged with seven pence, which is right; for if there must be a fraction, it ought always to be taken in favor of the Post Office.

This, however, may be remedied in two ways; the one is to make the rates of postage to be received in each State conformable to the currency thereof; the other is for the United States to coin pieces that might correspond with the rate of postage.

The dead letters may afford an opportunity for defrauding the revenue; but if the deputies' accounts are properly examined in the General Post Office, many evils that might otherwise exist will naturally vanish.

With respect to the present ordinance regulating the Post Office, I beg leave to suggest the propriety of sundry alterations and additions.

If the views of the Legislature should be to raise a revenue from the Post Office, the defects of the present system are many, and may easily be pointed out. But if there should be no such views, yet, for the purpose of establishing more security in the Department, sundry alterations will be found essentially necessary.

The two following articles operate most powerfully against the productiveness of the Post Office at present.

Any person may receive, carry, and deliver, inland letters, and is subject to no penalty, if it be done without hire or reward.

The following alterations appear to me to be necessary for greater security in the Post Office, whether revenue be or be not an object.

A more accurate description of offences and frauds that may be committed by any person employed in any way or manner whatever in the Department; and the establishment of penalties proportioned to the injuries that may happen from the committing such offences, or being guilty of such frauds.

Those that will naturally present themselves first will be such as may be committed by the Postmaster General, and those employed in his office; and such as may be committed by the contractors for carrying the mail, and by their agents and servants.

Many offences may probably be pointed out that have never been committed in the United States; but the opportunity to commit them is great, and when committed, the injury may be irreparable, as property to a very great amount is frequently entrusted in the mail.

It therefore appears to me, that it will be only exercising a due degree of caution to guard against them by defining the crimes and affixing to the commission of them, such penalties as will be most likely to deter from and prevent the actual commission of them.

The duties of the Postmaster General are at present to keep an office in the place where Congress may hold their sessions; to obey such orders and instructions as he may from time to time receive from the President of the United States; to appoint deputy postmasters, and instruct them in their duty, in conformity to the acts of Congress; to receive and examine their accounts and vouchers, and draw out of their hands quarterly the balances due to the United States; to render to the Treasury, annually, an account of the receipts and expenditures, for examination and allowance, and to pay over the surplus moneys; to provide by contract and otherwise for carrying the mail, and to pay the necessary expenses thereof; to establish and open new post offices and new post roads, whenever and wherever they may be found necessary, within certain limits marked out by the acts of Congress; and, in general, to superintend the Department, and to be accountable for it, in the various duties assigned to it, except the carrying of the mail.

On any breach of oath, on due conviction, he forfeits one thousand dollars.

With respect to the accountability of the Postmaster General, I beg leave to observe that no man can, however sagacious and cautious he may be in his appointments, without subjecting himself to certain loss, be responsible for the conduct of his deputies. The calculation of loss being certain in case of responsibility, if he has not a salary sufficient to compensate such loss, he must, to save himself, transact the business, and keep the accounts in a manner that the Treasury shall not be able to charge him with any more money than he chooses to be charged with; or he may endeavor to transact the business fairly, and hold the office until he finds he cannot preserve his reputation and credit; and then, if he is an honest man, he will resign.

Memorial of Robert Morris.

The number of times the mail shall be carried weekly, the advertising for proposals for carrying the mail, and the establishing of new post offices and new post roads, appear to me to be matters that should be left in the direction of the Supreme Executive. Very great embarrassments ensue when business is pointed out in detail; and there is no power at hand to alter the same, however necessary it may be to alter it.

The Postmaster General should be subjected to suitable penalties, in case he neglects or refuses to render true and just accounts of the receipts and expenditures, and to pay over the moneys to the Treasury that may be over and above the annual expenditures, at such periods as may be required.

It may be a question, whether the Postmaster General should keep an office separate from one in which common and ordinary business is done. There may be some reasons why he should not have a separate office. Irregularities and interruptions of communications will happen, and those who have the receiving and delivering of the mail, are most likely to be acquainted seasonably with them.

When the Postmaster General keeps a separate office, many things that he ought to be acquainted with may entirely escape his notice.

I found the General Post Office not blended with one in which common and ordinary business was transacted, and it remains in the same situation.

The prohibition at present against receiving and carrying letters extends to such only as do it for hire or reward, but it ought to extend to all who receive and carry letters, whether with or without reward; and penalties should be annexed to enforce an observance of it. Some few exceptions may be found necessary, where masters of vessels carry letters respecting the merchandises under their immediate care; and letters sent by a special messenger, by a friend, or by a common known carrier of goods.

Regulations may probably be found necessary respecting by or way-letters; embezzling or destroying letters on which the postage has been paid; detaining or opening letters; secreting, embezzling, and stealing any valuable papers out of any letters; against the carriers of the mail in case they neglect or desert it; to oblige the ferry man to set the mail across in all possible cases, in a given time; to recover debts due to and from the deputy postmasters in a summary way.

These are some of the principal alterations that have occurred to me as being necessary to be introduced into the regulations of the Post Office; and no doubt many others may suggest themselves to the wisdom of the Legislature.

With respect to appropriating to a particular object any supposed surplus of revenue that may arise in the Department, I beg leave to observe, that it will undoubtedly tend to awaken the attention of the citizens to the Department, if a certain sum should be required to be paid quarterly or semi-annually into the Treasury, and be appropriated to the payment of the interest of the domestic debt, as far as it might go.

This might interest a powerful body of citizens in attending to the operations of the Department, and would probably have a greater tendency to keep the Postmasters strictly to their duty, if any should be otherwise disposed, than any authority with which the Postmaster General might be clothed.

I have enclosed the form of an act, or rather such principles as appear to me proper to be introduced into the arrangement of the Post Office, which will tend more fully than the foregoing observations to explain my views of the alterations that are necessary.

I am, sir, with esteem,

Your most obedient humble servant,

SAMUEL OSGOOD.

Hon. ALEXANDER HAMILTON, Esq.

Secretary of the Treasury.

MEMORIAL OF ROBERT MORRIS.

To the President, the Senate, and House of Representatives of the United States of America, the memorial of ROBERT MORRIS, late Superintendent of the Finances of the said United States, humbly sheweth:

That on the 20th day of June, 1785, and subsequent to your memorialist's resignation of his office of Superintendent, the Congress passed a resolution in the following words: "Resolved, That three commissioners be appointed to inquire into the receipts and expenditures of public moneys, during the administration of the late Superintendent of Finance, and to examine and adjust the accounts of the United States with that department, during his administration, and to report a state thereof to Congress;" which resolution, to persons unacquainted with the nature of the office, and the mode of conducting the business of the department, gave occasion to the supposition that your memorialist had accounts both difficult and important to settle with the United States, in respect to his official transactions; that though your memorialist foresaw the disagreeable consequences which might result to himself from the diffusion of such an opinion, he, notwithstanding, not only forebore any representation on the subject, but scrupulously avoided every species of interference, direct or indirect, lest it should be imagined, either that he was actuated by the desire of obtaining from Congress those marks of approbation which had, in repeated instances, been bestowed on the servants of the public, or that he feared to meet the proposed investigation. Respect for the Sovereign of the United States, concurring with motives of delicacy, to forbid even the appearance of asking, what, if merited, it was to be presumed would be conferred, (as being the proper reward of services, not of solicitation,) and a firm confidence in the rectitude of his conduct, leaving your memorialist no inducement to evade any inquiry into it, which it might be thought fit to institute.

Letter from the National Assembly of France.

That your memorialist, taking it for granted that the reasons which had produced a determination to establish a mode of inquiry into the transactions of the most important office under the Government, would have insured a prosecution of the object, till it had been carried into effect, long remained in silent expectation of the appointment of commissioners, according to that resolution which had been entered into for that purpose. But it has so happened, from what cause your memorialist will not undertake to explain, that no further steps have ever been taken in relation to the surmises which the appearance of an intention to inquire into his conduct had a tendency to excite, without having been afforded an opportunity of obviating them. That the unsettled condition of certain accounts of a commercial nature between the United States and the late house of Willing, Morris & Co. and your memorialist, prior to his appointment as Superintendent of the Finances, having been confounded with his transactions in that capacity, your memorialist has, in various ways, been subjected to injurious imputations on his official conduct, the only fruits of services, which, at the time they were rendered, he trusts he may, without incurring the charge of presumption, affirm, were generally esteemed both important and meritorious, and were at least rendered with ardor and zeal, with unremitting attention, and unwearied application.

That your memorialist, desirous of rescuing his reputation from the aspersions thrown upon it, came, in the month of October, 1788, to the city of New York, as well for the purpose of urging the appointment of commissioners to inspect his official transactions, as for that of procuring an adjustment of the accounts which existed previous to his administration. But the first object was frustrated by the want of a sufficient number of members to make a Congress; and the last was unavoidably delayed by the preliminary investigations requisite on the part of the commissioner named by the late Board of Treasury, toward a competent knowledge of the business; that in the month of February, 1789, your memorialist returned to New York for the same purposes; but the obstacles which he had before experienced, still operated to put it out of his power to present the memorial which had been prepared by him in October, praying for an appointment of commissioners; that he was therefore obliged to confine himself to measures for the settlement of his accounts, respecting the transactions antecedent to his appointment as Superintendent, which he entered upon accordingly, with the commissioner appointed by the Board of Treasury; and in which, as much progress as time and circumstances would permit was made, until the 4th of March last, when that commissioner, conceiving his authority, by the organization of the new Government, to have ceased, declined further proceedings, and of course, your memorialist was obliged to wait the establishment of a new Treasury Department, for the further prosecution of that settlement, which has been accordingly resumed, and he hopes will speedily be accomplished. But inasmuch as no mode of inquiry into his official conduct has hitherto been put in operation, and as doubts of its propriety have been raised by an act of the Government, your memorialist conceives himself to have a claim upon the public justice, for some method of vindicating himself, which will be unequivocal and definitive. Wherefore, and encouraged by a consciousness of the integrity of his administration, your memorialist is desirous that a strict examination should be had into his conduct while in office, in order, that if he has been guilty of mal-administration, it may be detected and punished; if otherwise, that his innocence may be manifested and acknowledged. Unwilling, from this motive, that longer delay should attend the object of the resolution which has been recited, your memorialist humbly prays that an appointment of commissioners may take place to carry the said resolution into effect. And your memorialist, as in duty bound, will pray, &c.

ROBERT MORRIS.

New York, February 8, 1790.

LETTER FROM THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF FRANCE.

A Message was received from the President of the United States, accompanied with the following copies of a letter, addressed to him by the President of the National Assembly of France, and of a decree of that Assembly transmitted with it.

MR. PRESIDENT:

The National Assembly has worn, during three days, mourning for Benjamin Franklin, your fellow-citizen, your friend, and one of the most useful of your co-operators in the establishment of American liberty. They charge me to communicate their resolution to the Congress of the United States. In consequence, I have the honor to address to you, Mr. President, the extract from the proceedings of their session of the 11th, which contains the deliberations.

The National Assembly have not been stopped in their decree by the consideration that Franklin was a stranger. Great men are the fathers of universal humanity; their loss ought to be felt, as a common misfortune, by all the tribes of the great human family; and it belongs, without doubt, to a nation still affected by all the sentiments which accompany the achievement of their liberty, and which owes its enfranchisement essentially to the progress of the public reason, to be the first to give the example of the filial gratitude of the people towards their true benefactors; besides that these ideas, and this example, are so proper to disseminate a happy emulation of patriotism, and thus to extend more and more the empire of reason and virtue, which could not fail promptly to determine a body, devoted to the most important legislative combinations; charged with assuring to the French the rights of men and citizens, it has believed, without doubt, that fruitful and great truths were likewise numbered among the rights of man.

The name of Benjamin Franklin will be immortal in the records of freedom and philosophy: but it is more particularly dear to a country where, conducted by the most sublime mission, this venerable man knew very soon to acquire an infinite number of friends and admirers, as well by the simplicity and sweetness of his manners, as by the purity of his principles, the extent of his knowledge, and the charms of his mind.

It will be remembered, that every success which he obtained in his important negotiation, was applauded and celebrated (so to express it) all over France, as so many crowns conferred on genius and virtue.

Even then the sentiment of our rights existed in the bottom of our souls. It was easily perceived, that it feelingly mingled in the interest which we took in America, and in the public vows which we preferred for your liberty.

At last the hour of the French has arrived: we love to think that the citizens of the United States have not regarded with indifference our steps towards liberty. Twenty-six millions of men, breaking their chains, and seriously occupied in giving themselves a durable constitution, are not unworthy the esteem of a generous people who have preceded them in that noble career.

We hope they will learn with interest the funeral homage which we have rendered the Nestor of America. May this solemn act of fraternal friendship serve more and more to bind the tie which ought to unite two free nations. May the common enjoyment of liberty shed itself over the whole globe, and become an indissoluble chain of connection among all the people of the earth! For ought they not to perceive that they will march more steadfastly and more certainly to their true happiness, in understanding and loving each other, than in being jealous and fighting?

May the Congress of the United States, and the National Assembly of France, be the first to furnish this fine spectacle to the world! And may the individuals of the two nations connect themselves by a mutual affection, worthy of the most illustrious by their exertions for liberty—Washington and Lafayette!

Permit me, Mr. President, to offer, on this occasion, my particular homage of esteem and admiration.

I have the honor to be, with respectful consideration, Mr. President, your most humble and most obedient servant,

SIEYES, President.

Paris, June 20, 1790.

Decree of the National Assembly of the 11th of June, 1790.

The National Assembly decree, that their members shall wear, during three days, mourning for Benjamin Franklin, to commence on Monday next; that the discourse pronounced on this occasion be printed, and that the President write to the American Congress, in the name of the National Assembly.

Compared with the original, by us, President and Secretaries of the National Assembly, at Paris, June 10, 1790.

SIEYES, President.
GOUDAU,
FELIX DE PARDIEU, DUMOUCHEZ, Secretaries.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT ON FRENCH AFFAIRS.

UNITED STATES, January 19, 1791.

Gentlemen of the Senate:

I lay before you a representation of the Charge des Affaires of France, made by order of his Court, on the acts of Congress of the 20th of July, 1789 and 1790, imposing an extra tonnage on foreign vessels, not excepting those of that country; together with the report of the Secretary of State thereon: and I recommend the same to your consideration, that I may be enabled to give to it such answer as may best comport with the justice and the interest of the United States.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

The papers referred to in the above Message were read as follows:

DOCUMENTS.

The Secretary of State having received from the Charge des Affaires of France, a note on the tonnage payable by French vessels in the ports of the United States, has had the same under his consideration, and thereupon makes the following report to the President of the United States.

The Charge des Affaires of France, by a note of the 13th of December, represents, by order of his Court, that they consider so much of the acts of Congress of July 20, 1789 and 1790, as imposes an extraordinary tonnage on foreign vessels, without excepting those of France, to be in contravention of the fifth article of the treaty of amity and commerce between the two nations; that this would have authorized, on their part, a proportional modification in the favors granted to the American navigation; but that his Sovereign had thought it more conformable to his principles of friendship and attachment to the United States, to order him to make representations thereon, and to ask in favor of French vessels a modification of the acts which impose an extraordinary tonnage on foreign vessels.

The Secretary of State, in giving in this paper to the President of the United States, thinks it his duty to accompany it with the following observations:

The third and fourth articles of the treaty of amity and commerce between France and the United States, subject the vessels of each nation to pay, in the ports of the other, only such duties as are paid by the most favored nation; and give them, reciprocally, all the privileges and exemptions in navigation and commerce, which are given by either to the most favored nations. Had the contracting parties stopped here, they would have been free to raise or lower their tonnage, as they should find it expedient, only taking care to keep the other on the footing of the most favored nation. The question then is, whether the fifth article cited in the note is any thing more than an application of the principle comprised in the third and fourth to a particular object, or whether it is an additional stipulation of something not so comprised?

I. That it is merely an application of a principle comprised in the preceding articles, is declared by the express words of the article, to wit: "Dans l'exemption ci-dessus est nommément comprise, &c." "in the above exemption is particularly comprised the imposition of 100 sols per ton established in France on foreign vessels." Here, then, is at once an express declaration, that the exemption from the duty of 100 sols is comprised in the third and fourth articles; that is to say, it was one of the exemptions enjoyed by the most favored nations, and, as such, extended to us by those articles. If the exemption spoken of in this first member of the fifth article was comprised in the third and fourth articles, as is expressly declared, then the reservation by France out of that exemption (which makes the second member of the same article) was also comprised, that is to say, if the whole was comprised, the part was comprised. And if this reservation of France in the second member was comprised in the third and fourth articles, then the counter reservation by the United States (which constitutes the third and last member of the same article) was also comprised; because, it is but a corresponding portion of a similar whole, on our part, which had been comprised by the same terms with theirs.

In short, the whole article relates to a particular duty of 100 sols, laid by some antecedent law of France on the vessels of foreign nations, relinquished as to the most favored, and consequently to us. It is not a new and additional stipulation, then, but a declared application of the stipulations comprised in the preceding articles to a particular case, by way of greater caution.

The doctrine laid down generally in the third and fourth articles, and exemplified specially in the fifth, amounts to this: "The vessels of the most favored nations coming from foreign ports are exempted from the duty of 100 sols; therefore, you are exempted from it by the third and fourth articles. The vessels of the most favored nations coming coastwise pay that duty; therefore, you are to pay it by the third and fourth articles. We shall not think it unfriendly in you to lay a like duty on coasters, because it will be no more than we have done ourselves. You are free also to lay that or any other duty on vessels coming from foreign ports, provided they apply to all other nations, even the most favored. We are free to do the same, under the same restriction. Our exempting you from a duty which the most favored nations do not pay, does not exempt you from one which they do pay."

In this view it is evident that the fifth article neither enlarges nor abridges the stipulations of the third and fourth. The effect of the treaty would have been precisely the same had it been omitted altogether; consequently, it may be truly said, that the reservation by the United States in this article is completely useless. And it may be added, with equal truth, that the equivalent reservation by France is completely useless, as well as her previous abandonment of the same duty; and, in short, the whole article. Each party then remains free to raise or lower its tonnage, provided the change operates on all nations, even the most favored.

Without undertaking to affirm, we may obviously conjecture that this article has been inserted on the part of the United States from an overcaution to guard, (nommément) by name, against a particular aggravance, which they thought they could never be too well secured against; and that has happened which generally happens, doubts have been produced by the too great number of words used to prevent doubt.

II. The Court of France, however, understands this article as intended to introduce something to which the preceding articles had not reached; and not merely as an application of them to a particular case. Their opinion seems to be founded on the general rule in the construction of instruments, to leave no words merely useless, for which any rational meaning can be found. They say that the reservation by the United States, of a right to lay a duty equivalent to that of the 100 sols reserved by France, would have been completely useless, if they were left free by the preceding articles to lay a tonnage to any extent whatever; consequently, that the reservation of a part proves a relinquishment of the residue.

If some meaning, and such a one is to be given to the last member of the article, some meaning, and a similar one, must be given to the corresponding member. If the reservation by the United States of a right to lay an equivalent duty, implies a relinquishment of their right to lay any other, the reservation by France, of a right to continue the specified duty to which it is an equivalent, must imply a relinquishment of the right on her part to lay or continue any other. Equivalent reservations by both must imply equivalent restrictions on both. The exact reciprocity stipulated in the preceding articles, and which pervades every part of the treaty, ensures a counter right to each party for every right ceded to the other.

Let it be further considered, that the duty called tonnage in the United States is in lieu of the duties for anchorage, for the support of buoys, beacons, and light-houses, to guide the mariner into harbor and along the coast, which are provided and supported at the expense of the United States; and for fees to measurers, weighers, gaugers, &c., who are paid by the United States; for which articles, among many others, (light-house money excepted,) duties are paid by us in the ports of France under their specific names. That Government has hitherto thought these duties consistent with the treaty; and consequently nice discussions of right, and to make the modification an act of friendship and of compensation for favors received, the passage of such a bill will then be the answer.

French Affairs.

TH. JEFFERSON.

JANUARY 18, 1791.

[TRANSLATION.]

L. G. Otto to the Secretary of State.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 13, 1790.

SIR: During the long stay you made in France, you had opportunities of being satisfied of the favorable dispositions of His Majesty to render permanent the ties that united the two nations, and to give stability to the treaties of alliance and of commerce which form the basis of this union. These treaties were so well maintained by the Congress formed under the ancient Confederation, that they thought it their duty to interpose their authority whenever any laws made by individual States appeared to infringe their stipulations, and particularly in 1785, when the States of New Hampshire and of Massachusetts had imposed an extraordinary tonnage on foreign vessels, without exempting those of the French nation. The reflections that I have the honor to address to you in the subjoined note, being founded on the same principles, I flatter myself that they will merit, on the part of the Government of the United States, the most serious attention.

I am, with respect, &c.,

L. G. OTTO.

PHILADELPHIA, December 13, 1790.

L. G. OTTO.

[TRANSLATION.]

L. G. Otto to the Secretary of State.

NEW YORK, January 8, 1791.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to send you a letter from the King to Congress, and one which M. de Montmorin has written to yourself. You will find therein the sincere sentiments with which you have inspired our Government, and the regret of the Minister in not having a more near relation of correspondence with you. In these, every person who has had the advantage of knowing you in France participates.

At the same time, it gives me pain, sir, to be obliged to announce to you that the complaints of our merchants on the subject of the tonnage duty increase, and that they have excited not only the attention of the King, but that of several departments of the Kingdom. I have received new orders to request of the United States a decision in this matter, and to solicit, in favor of the aggrieved merchants, the restitution of the duties which have already been paid. I earnestly beg of you, sir, not to lose sight of an object, which, as I have already had the honor to tell you verbally, is of the greatest importance for cementing the future commercial connexions between the two nations.

In more particularly examining this question, you will, perhaps, find that motives of convenience are as powerful as those of justice, to engage the United States to give to His Majesty the satisfaction which he requires. At least twice a the same duties, under a general, instead of specific names, with us, must be equally consistent with it. It is not the name, but the thing which is essential. If we have renounced the right to lay any port duties, they must be understood to have equally renounced that of either laying new, or continuing the old. If we ought to refund the port duties received from their vessels since the date of the act of Congress, they should refund the port duties they have received from our vessels since the date of the treaty, for nothing short of this is the reciprocity of the treaty.

French Affairs.

If this construction be adopted, then each party has forever renounced the right of laying any duties on the vessels of the other coming from any foreign port, or more than 100 miles on those coming coastwise. Could this relinquishment be confined to the two contracting parties alone, the United States would be the gainers; for it is well known that a much greater number of American than of French vessels are employed in the commerce between the two countries; but the exemption once conceded by the one nation to the other becomes immediately the property of all others who are on the footing of the most favored nations. It is true that those others would be obliged to yield the same compensation. Whether we should give our vessels duty free. Whether we should gain or lose in the exchange of the measures with them, is not easy enough to say.

Another consequence of this construction will be, that the vessels of the most favored nations, paying no duties, will be on a better footing than those of natives which pay a moderate duty; consequently either the duty on these also must be given up, or they will be supplanted by foreign vessels in our own ports.

The resource, then of duty on vessels, for the purposes either of revenue or regulation, will be forever lost to both. It is hardly conceivable that either party looking forward to all these consequences, would see their interest in them.

III. But if France persists in claiming this exemption, what is to be done? The claim, indeed, is couched in mild and friendly terms; but the idea leaks out that a refusal would authorize them to modify proportionally the favor granted by the same article to our navigation. Perhaps they may do what we should feel much more severely; they may turn their eyes to the favors granted us by their arrêtés of December 7, 1788, which hang on their will alone, unconnected with the treaty. Those arrêtés, among other advantages, admit our whale oils to the exclusion of that of all other foreigners. And this monopoly procures a vent for seven-twelfths of the produce of that fishery, which experience has taught us could find no other market. Near two-thirds of the produce of our cod fisheries, too, have lately found a free vent in the colonies of France.† This, indeed, has been an irregularity growing out of the anarchy reigning in those colonies. Yet the demands of the colonists, even of the Government party among them, (if an auxiliary disposition can be excited by some marks of friendship and distinction on our part,) may perhaps produce a Constitutional concession to them to procure their provisions at the cheapest market; that is to say, at ours.

Considering the value of the interests we have at stake, and considering the smallness of difference between foreign and native tonnage on French vessels alone, it might, perhaps, be thought advisable to make the sacrifice asked; and especially if it can be so done as to give no title to other the most favored nations to claim it. If the act should put French vessels on the footing of those of natives, and declare it to be in consideration of the favors granted us by the arrêtés of December 29, 1787, and December 7, 1788, (and perhaps this would satisfy them,) no nation could then demand the same favor without offering an equivalent compensation. It might strengthen, too, the tenure by which those arrêtés are held, which must be precarious so long as they are gratuitous.

It is desirable in many instances, to exchange mutual advantages by legislative acts rather than by treaty; because the former, though understood to be in consideration of each other, and therefore greatly respected, yet when they become too inconvenient, can be dropped at the will of either party; whereas, stipulations by treaty are forever irrevocable but by joint consent, let a change of circumstances render them ever so burdensome. On the whole, if it be the opinion that the first construction is to be insisted on as ours, in opposition to the second, urged by the Court of France, and that no relaxation is to be admitted, an answer shall be given to that Court defending that construction, and explaining, in as friendly terms as possible, the difficulties opposed to the exemption they claim.

2. If it be the opinion that it is advantageous for us to close with France in her interpretation of a reciprocal and perpetual exemption from tonnage, a repeal of so much of the tonnage law will be the answer.

3. If it be thought better to waive vigorous and

* By an official paper from the bureau of the balance of commerce of France, we find that of the ships which entered the ports of France from the United States in the year 1789, only thirteen, amounting to 2,105 tons, were French; and 163, making 24,173 tons, were American.

† Abstract of the produce of the fisheries exported from Boston, Plymouth, Dighton, Penobscot, Frenchman's Bay, Machias, and New York, of which the returns are not received.

France and the West Indies.
The rest of the world,

$586,167	$131,906	$718,073
307,097	101,306	408,403
893,264	233,212	1,126,476
Whole produce

French Affairs.

many American vessels enter the ports of France as do those of France the ports of America. The exemption of the tonnage duty, then, is evidently less advantageous for the French than for the navigators of the United States. Be this as it may, I can assure you, sir, that the delay of a decision in this respect, by augmenting the just complaints of the French merchants, will only augment the difficulties. I therefore beg of you to enable me, before the sailing of the packet, which will take place towards the last of this month, to give my Court a satisfactory answer.

I have the honor to be, &c.,
L. G. OTTO.
His Excellency T. JEFFERSON, Secretary of State.

PUBLIC ACTS OF CONGRESS:

PASSED AT THE FIRST SESSION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS, BEGUN AND HELD AT NEW YORK, ON THE FOURTH OF MARCH 1789.

An act to regulate the time and manner of administering certain oaths.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the oath of affirmation required by the sixth article of the Constitution of the United States, shall be administered in the form following, to wit: "I, A. B. do solemnly swear or affirm (as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States." The said oath or affirmation shall be administered within three days after the passing of this act, by any one member of the Senate to the President of the Senate, and by him to all the members, and to the Secretary; and by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to all the members who have not taken a similar oath, by virtue of a particular resolution of the said House, and to the clerk. And in case of the absence of any member from the service of either House, at the time prescribed for taking the said oath or affirmation, the same shall be administered to such member when he shall appear to take his seat.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That at the first session of Congress after every general election of Representatives, the oath or affirmation aforesaid shall be administered by any one member of the House of Representatives to the Speaker, and by him to all the members present, and to the clerk, previous to entering on any other business, and to the members who shall afterwards appear, previous to taking their seats. The President of the Senate, for the time being, shall also administer the said oath or affirmation to each Senator who shall hereafter be elected, previous to his taking his seat. And in any future case of a President of the Senate, who shall not have taken the said oath or affirmation, the same shall be administered to him by any one of the members of the Senate.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the members of the several State Legislatures, at the next sessions of the said Legislatures respectively, and all executive and judicial officers of the several States, who have been heretofore chosen or appointed, or who shall be chosen or appointed before the first day of August next, and who shall then be in office, shall, within one month thereafter, take the same oath or affirmation, except where they shall have taken it before; which may be administered by any person authorized by the law of the State in which such office shall be holden, to administer oaths. And the members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers of the several States, who shall be chosen or appointed after the said first day of August, shall, before they proceed to execute the duties of their respective offices, take the foregoing oath or affirmation, which shall be administered by the person or persons who, by the law of the State, shall be authorized to administer the oath of office; and the person or persons so administering the oath hereby required to be taken, shall cause a record or certificates thereof to be made, in the same manner, as by the law of the State, he or they shall be directed to record or certify the oath of office.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all officers appointed, or hereafter to be appointed under the authority of the United States, shall, before they act in their respective offices, take the same oath or affirmation, which shall be administered by the person or persons who shall be authorized by law to administer to such officers their respective oaths of office; and such officers shall incur the same penalties in case of failure, as shall be imposed by law in case of failure in taking their respective oaths of office.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives for the time being, shall, at the time of taking the oath or affirmation aforesaid, each take an oath or affirmation in the words following, to wit: "I, A. B. Secretary of the Senate, or Clerk of the House of Representatives (as the case may be) of the United States of America, do solemnly swear or affirm, that I will truly and faithfully discharge the duties of my said office, to the best of my knowledge and abilities.

FRED. A. MUHLENBERG,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

JOHN ADAMS,
Vice President of the United States, and President of the Senate.

APPROVED, June 1, 1789.
GEO. WASHINGTON,
President of the United States.

An Act for laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States.

Whereas it is necessary for the support of Government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures, that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported:

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the first day of August next ensuing, the several duties hereinafter mentioned shall be laid on the following goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States from any foreign port or place; that is to say—

On all distilled spirits of Jamaica proof, imported from any kingdom or country whatsoever, per gallon, ten cents;

On all other distilled spirits, per gallon, eight cents;

On molasses, per gallon, two and a half cents;

On Madeira wine, per gallon, eighteen cents;

On all other wines, per gallon, ten cents;

On every gallon of beer, ale, or porter, in casks, five cents;

On all cider, beer, ale, or porter, in bottles, per dozen, twenty cents;

On malt, per bushel, ten cents;

On brown sugars, per pound, one cent;

On loaf sugars, per pound, three cents;

On all other sugars, per pound, one and a half cents;

On coffee, per pound, two and a half cents;

On cocoa, per pound, one cent;

On all candles of tallow, per pound, two cents;

On all candles of wax or spermaceti, per pound, six cents;

On cheese, per pound, four cents;

On soap, per pound, two cents;

On boots, per pair, fifty cents;

On all shoes, slippers, or galoshes, made of leather, per pair, seven cents;

On all shoes or slippers made of silk or stuff, per pair, ten cents;

On cables, for every one hundred and twelve pounds, seventy-five cents;

On tarred cordage, for every one hundred and twelve pounds, seventy-five cents;

On untarred cordage and yarn, for every one hundred and twelve pounds, ninety cents;

On twine or pack-thread, for every one hundred and twelve pounds, two hundred cents;

On all steel unwrought, for every one hundred and twelve pounds, fifty-six cents;

On all nails and spikes, per pound, one cent;

On salt, per bushel, six cents;

On manufactured tobacco, per pound, six cents;

On snuff, per pound, ten cents;

On indigo, per pound, sixteen cents;

On wool and cotton cards, per dozen, fifty cents;

On coal, per bushel, two cents;

On pickled fish, per barrel, seventy-five cents;

built in foreign countries, and on the sixteenth day of May last wholly the property of a citizen or citizens of the United States, and so continuing until the time of importation, as follows:

On bohea tea, per pound, six cents;

On all souchong, or other black teas, per pound, ten cents;

On all hyson teas, per pound, twenty cents;

On all other green teas, per pound, twelve cents;

On all teas imported from Europe in ships or vessels built in the United States, and belonging wholly to a citizen or citizens thereof, or in ships or vessels built in foreign countries, and on the sixteenth day of May last, wholly the property of a citizen or citizens of the United States, and so continuing until the time of importation, as follows:

On bohea tea, per pound, eight cents;

On all souchong, and other black teas, per pound, thirteen cents;

On all hyson teas, per pound, twenty-six cents;

On all other green teas, per pound, sixteen cents;

On all teas imported in any other manner than as above mentioned, as follows:

On bohea tea, per pound, fifteen cents;

On all souchong, or other black teas, per pound, twenty-two cents;

On all hyson teas, per pound, forty-five cents;

On all other green teas, per pound, twenty-seven cents;

On all goods, wares, and merchandises, other than teas, imported from China or India, in ships not built in the United States, and not wholly the property of a citizen or citizens thereof, nor in vessels built in foreign countries, and on the sixteenth day of May last wholly the property of a citizen or citizens of the United States, and so continuing until the time of importation, twelve and a half per centum ad valorem.

On all looking glasses, window and other glass, (except black quart bottles,)

On all China, stone, and earthen ware,

On gunpowder,

On all painte ground in oil,

On shoe and knee buckles,

On gold and silver lace, and

On gold and silver leaf, ten per centum ad valorem;

On all blank books,

On all writings, printing, or wrapping paper, paper hangings, and pasteboard,

On all cabinet wares,

On all buttons,

On all saddles,

On all gloves of leather,

On all hats of beaver, fur, wool, or mixture of either,

On all millinery ready made,

On all castings of iron, and upon slit and rolled iron,

On all leather tanned or tawed, and all manufactures of leather, except such as shall be otherwise rated,

On canes, walking sticks, and whips,

On clothing ready-made,

On all brushes,

On gold, silver, and plated ware, and on jewelry and paste work,

On anchors, and on all wrought tin and pewter ware, seven and a half per centum ad valorem;

On playing cards, per pack, ten cents;

On every coach, chariot, or other four wheeled carriage, or parts thereof, fifteen per centum ad valorem.

On all other goods, wares, and merchandise, five per centum on the value thereof at the time and place of importation, except as follows: Salt-petre, tin in pigs, tin plates, lead, old pewter, brass, iron and brass wire, copper in plates, wool, cotton, dying woods and dying drugs, raw hides, beaver, and all other furs and deer skins.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the first day of December, which shall be in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety, there shall be laid a duty on every one hundred and twelve pounds weight of hemp, imported as aforesaid, of sixty cents; and on cotton per pound, three cents.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all the duties paid, or secured to be paid, upon any of the goods, wares, and merchandises, as aforesaid, except on distilled spirits, other than brandy and geneva, shall be returned or discharged upon such of the said goods, wares, or merchandises, as shall, within twelve months after payment made, or security given, be exported to any country without the limits of the United States, as settled by the late treaty of peace; except one per centum on the amount of the said duties, in consideration of the expense which shall have accrued by the entry and safe keeping thereof.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed and paid on every quintal of dried, and on every barrel of pickled fish, of the fisheries of the United States, and on every barrel of salted provision of the United States, exported to any country without the limits thereof, in lieu of a drawback of the duties imposed on the importation of the salt employed and expended therein, viz:

On every quintal of dried fish, five cents;

On every barrel of pickled fish, five cents;

On every barrel of salted provision, five cents.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That a discount of ten per cent. on all the duties imposed by this act, shall be allowed on such goods, wares, and merchandises, as shall be imported in vessels built in the United States, and which shall be wholly the property of a citizen or citizens thereof, or in vessels built in foreign countries, and on the sixteenth day of May last, wholly the property of a citizen or citizens of the United States, and so continuing until the time of importation.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue and be in force until the first day of June, which shall be in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-six, and from thence until the end of the next succeeding session.

sion of Congress, which shall be held thereafter, and no longer.

Approved, July 4, 1789.

An Act imposing duties on tonnage.

Be it enacted, &c., That the following duties shall be, and are hereby, imposed on all ships or vessels entered into the United States, that is to say:

On all ships or vessels built within the said States, and belonging wholly to a citizen or citizens thereof; or not built within the said States, but on the twenty-ninth day of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, belonging, and during the time such ships or vessels shall continue to belong wholly to a citizen or citizens thereof, at the rate of six cents per ton. On all ships or vessels hereafter built in the United States, belonging wholly, or in part, to subjects of foreign Powers, at the rate of thirty cents per ton. On all other ships or vessels, at the rate of fifty cents per ton.

Sec. 2. Provided always, and be it enacted, That no ship or vessel built within the aforesaid States, and belonging to a citizen or citizens thereof, shall, whilst employed in the coasting trade, or in the fisheries, pay tonnage more than once in any year.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That every ship or vessel employed in the transportation of any of the produce or manufactures of the United States, coastwise, within the said States, except such ship or vessel be built within the said States, and belong to a citizen or citizens thereof, shall, on each entry, pay fifty cents per ton.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That this act shall commence and be in force from and after the fifteenth day of August next.

Approved, July 20, 1789.

An act for establishing an Executive Department, to be denominated the Department of Foreign Affairs.

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be an Executive Department, to be denominated the Department of Foreign Affairs; and that there shall be a principal officer therein, to be called the Secretary for the Department of Foreign Affairs, who shall perform and execute such duties as shall, from time to time, be enjoined on or intrusted to him by the President of the United States, agreeable to the Constitution, relative to correspondences, commissions, or instructions, to or with public ministers from foreign States or princes, or to memorialists, or other foreigners, or to such other matters respecting foreign affairs as the President of the United States shall assign to the said department. And furthermore, that the said principal officer shall conduct the business of the said department in such manner as the President of the United States shall, from time to time, order or instruct.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be in the said Department an inferior officer, to be appointed by the said principal officer, and to be employed therein as he shall deem proper, and to be called the chief clerk in the Department of Foreign Affairs; and who, whenever the said principal officer shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacancy, shall, during such vacancy, have the charge and custody of all records, books, and papers appertaining to the said department.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said principal officer, and every other person to be appointed or employed in the said department, shall, before he enters on the execution of his office or employment, take an oath or affirmation, well and faithfully to execute the trust committed to him.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary for the Department of Foreign Affairs, to be appointed in consequence of this act, shall, forthwith after his appointment, be entitled to have the custody and charge of all records, books, and papers, in the office of Secretary for the Department of Foreign Affairs, heretofore established by the United States in Congress assembled.

Approved, July 27, 1789.

An Act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That for the due collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships and vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, there shall be established and appointed, districts, ports, and officers, in manner following, to wit:

The State of New Hampshire shall be one district, to include the town of Portsmouth as the sole port of entry; and the towns of Newcastle, Dover, and Exeter, as ports of delivery; but all ships or vessels bound to or from either of the said ports of delivery, shall first come to, enter, and clear, at Portsmouth; and a naval officer, collector, and surveyor, for the said district, shall be appointed, to reside at Portsmouth.

In the State of Massachusetts shall be twenty districts and ports of entry, to wit: Newburyport, Gloucester, Salem, and Beverly, as one port; Marblehead, Boston, and Charlestown, as one port; Plymouth, Barnstable, Nantucket, Edgartown, New Bedford, Dighton, York, Biddeford, and Pepperelborough, as one port; Portsmouth, and Falmouth as one port; Bath, Wiscasset, Penobscot, Frenchman's Bay, Machias, and Passamaquoddy. To the district of Newburyport shall be annexed the several towns or landing places of Amesbury, Salisbury, and Haverhill, which shall be ports of delivery only; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, for the district, shall be appointed, to reside at Newburyport. To the district of Gloucester shall be annexed the town of Manchester, as a port of delivery only; and a collector and surveyor shall be appointed to reside at Gloucester. To the district of Salem and Beverly shall be annexed the pointed a collector, to reside at the said ports of Machias and Passamaquoddy respectively. The district of Newburyport shall include all the waters and shores from the State of New Hampshire to the north line of Ipswich. The district of Gloucester shall include all the waters and shores in the towns of Gloucester and Manchester. The district of Salem and Beverly shall include all the shores and waters within the towns of Ipswich, Beverly, Salem, and Danvers. The district of Marblehead shall include all the waters and shores within the towns of Marblehead and Lynn. The district of Boston and Charlestown shall include all the waters and shores within the counties of Middlesex and Suffolk. The district of Plymouth shall include all the waters and shores within the county of Plymouth, except the towns of Wareham and Rochester. The district of Barnstable shall include all the shores and waters within the county of Barnstable, excepting the town of Falmouth. The district of Nantucket shall include the island of Nantucket. The district of Edgartown shall include all the waters and shores within the county of Duke's county and the town of Falmouth. The district of New Bedford shall include all the waters and shores within the towns of New Bedford, Dartmouth, Westport, Rochester, and Wareham, together with all the islands within the county of Bristol. The district of Dighton shall include all the waters and shores on Taunton river, and in the town of Rehoboth; and the collectors of the several districts within that part of the State of Massachusetts, eastward of New Hampshire, shall agree, as soon as may be, upon a divisional line between their respective districts, and transmit the same to the Comptroller of the Treasury; and such districts so agreed upon, shall include all the shores, waters, and islands within the same.

In the State of Connecticut shall be three districts, to wit: New London, New Haven, and Fairfield. The district of New London shall extend from the east line of the said State of Connecticut to the west line of the town of Killingworth, and north to the south line of the State of Massachusetts, and shall also include the several towns or landing places of Norwich, Stonington, Groton, Lyme, Saybrook, Haddam, East Haddam, Middletown, Chatham, Weathersfield, Glastonbury, Hartford, East Hartford, and Killingworth, as ports of delivery only, New London to be the sole port of entry; and a collector and surveyor for the district shall be appointed, to reside at New London, and a surveyor to reside at each of the ports of Stonington and Middletown. The district of New Haven shall extend from the west line of the district of New London, westerly to Ousatanick river; to which shall be annexed the several towns or landing places of Guilford, Branford, Milford, and Derby, as ports of delivery only, New Haven to be the sole port of entry; and a collector and surveyor for the district shall be appointed, to reside at New Haven. The district of Fairfield shall include all the ports and places in the said State of Connecticut, west of the district of New Haven, to which shall be annexed the several towns or landing places of Norwalk, Stratford, Stamford, and Greenwich, as ports of delivery only, Fairfield to be the sole port of entry; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Fairfield; and New London, New Haven, and Fairfield, shall severally be ports of entry.

In the State of New York shall be two districts, to wit: Sag Harbor on Nassau or Long Island, and the city of New York, each of which shall be a port of entry. The district of Sag Harbor shall include all bays, harbors, rivers, and shores, within the two points of land which are called Oyster Pond Point, and Montauk Point; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Sag Harbor, which shall be the only place of delivery in the said district. The district of the city of New York shall include such parts of the coasts, rivers, bays, and harbors, of the said State, not included in the district of Sag Harbor; and, moreover, the several towns or landing places of New Windsor, Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Esopus, city of Hudson, Kinderhook, and Albany, as ports of delivery only; and a naval officer, collector, and surveyor, for the district, shall be appointed, to reside at the city of New York; also two surveyors, one to reside at Hudson; and all ships or vessels bound to, or from, any port of delivery within the last named district, shall be obliged to come to, and enter or clear out, at the city of New York.

In the State of New Jersey shall be three districts, to wit: Perth Amboy, Burlington, and Bridgetown, which shall severally be ports of entry. The district of Perth Amboy shall comprehend all that part of the State of New Jersey known by the name of East New Jersey, (that part excepted which is hereafter included in the district of Burlington,) together with all the waters thereof, heretofore within the jurisdiction of the said State, in which district the towns or landing places of New Brunswick, Middletown Point, Elizabethtown, and Newark, shall be ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Perth Amboy. The district of Burlington shall comprehend that part of the State known by the name of West New Jersey, which lies to the eastward and northward of the county of Gloucester, with all the waters thereof, heretofore within the jurisdiction of the said State, including the river and inlet of Little Egg Harbor with the waters emptying into the same, and the seacoast, sound, inlets, and harbors thereof, from Barnegat inlet to Brigantine inlets, in which district, the landing places of Lambertton and Little Egg Harbor shall be ports of delivery only; and a collector shall be appointed for the district, to reside at Burlington, and a surveyor at Little Egg Harbor. The district of Bridgetown shall comprehend the counties of Gloucester, Salem, Cumberland, and Cape May, (that part of Gloucester county excepted, which is included within the district of Burlington,) and all the waters thereof heretofore within the jurisdiction of the said State; and the town of Salem, Port Elizabeth, on Morrice river, and Stillwell's Landing on Great Egg Harbor, shall be ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Bridge-town.

Acts of Congress.

The State of Pennsylvania shall be one district, and Philadelphia shall be the sole port, both of entry and delivery, for the same; and a naval officer, collector, and surveyor, for the district shall be appointed, to reside at the said port of Philadelphia.

The State of Delaware shall be one district, and the borough of Wilmington shall be the port of entry, to which shall be annexed New Castle and Port Penn, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed to reside at the said port of Wilmington.

In the State of Maryland shall be nine districts, to wit: Baltimore, Chester, Oxford, Vienna, Snow Hill, Annapolis, Nottingham, Nanjemoy, and Georgetown. The district of Baltimore shall include Patapsco, Susquehanna, and Elk rivers, and all the waters and shores on the west side of Chesapeake Bay, from the mouth of Magetty river to the south side of Elk river, inclusive, in which Havre-de-Grace and Elkton shall be ports of delivery only; and a naval officer, collector, and surveyor, shall be appointed for the said district, to reside at the town of Baltimore, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Chester shall include Chester river, and all the waters and shores on the eastern side of Chesapeake bay, from the south side of Elk river to the north side of the eastern bay and Wye river, exclusive, in which Georgetown, on Sassafra river, shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Chester, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Oxford shall include all the waters and shores on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay, from the north side of Wye river and the eastern bay, to the south side of Choptank river, inclusive, and Cambridge shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Oxford, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Vienna shall include all the waters and shores on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay, from the south side of Choptank river to the south side of Wicomico river, inclusive, and Salisbury shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Vienna, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Snow Hill shall include all the waters and shores on the sea-coast, from the north line of Virginia to the south line of Delaware, together with all the waters and shores on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay, from the south side of Wicomico river to the south side of Pocomoke river inclusive, so far as the jurisdiction of the said State of Maryland extends, to which Sinepuxent shall be a port of delivery for West India produce only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Snow Hill, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Annapolis shall include Magetty ty river, and all the waters and shores from thence to Drum Point, on Patuxent river; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Annapolis, which shall be the sole port of entry and delivery for the same. The district of Nottingham shall include all the waters and shores on the west side of Chesapeake Bay to Drum Point, on the river Patuxent, together with the said river, and all the navigable waters emptying into the same, to which Benedict, Lower Marlborough, Town Creek, and Silvey's Landing, shall be annexed as ports of delivery only; a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Nottingham, and a surveyor at Town creek; and Nottingham shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Nanjemoy shall include all the waters of Potomac river, within the jurisdiction of the State of Maryland, from Point Lookout to Pomonkey Creek, inclusive, to which Saint Mary's shall be annexed as a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Nanjemoy; also a surveyor, to reside at Saint Mary's, and Nanjemoy shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Georgetown shall include all the waters and shores from Pomonkey creek, on the north side of Potomac river, to the head of the navigable waters of the said river, within the jurisdiction of the State of Maryland, to which Digges's Landing and Carrollsburg shall be annexed as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Georgetown, which shall be the sole port of entry.

In the State of Virginia shall be twelve districts, to wit: Hampton as one port; Norfolk and Portsmouth as one port; Bermuda Hundred and City Point as one port; Yorktown, Tappahannock, Yeocomico river, including Kinsale, Dumfries, including Newport, Alexandria, Folly Landing, Cherry-Stone, South Quay, and Louisville. The authority of the officers at Hampton shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, between the south side of the mouth of York river, along the west shore of Chesapeake bay to Hampton, and thence up James river to the west side of Chickahominy river; and a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Hampton, which shall be the sole port of entry. To the district of Norfolk and Portsmouth shall be annexed Suffolk and Smithfield, as ports of delivery only; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended within a linedrawn from Cape Henry to the mouth of James river, and thence up James river to Jordan's Point, and up Elizabeth river to the highest tide water thereof, and Norfolk and Portsmouth shall be the sole port of entry; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Norfolk; also a surveyor to reside at each of the ports of Suffolk and Smithfield. To the district of Bermuda Hundred, or City Point, shall be annexed Richmond, Petersburg, and Manchester, as ports of delivery only; and a collector and surveyor shall be appointed, to reside at Bermuda Hundred, or City Point, which shall be the sole port of entry; also a surveyor for Petersburg, to reside thereat, and a surveyor for Richmond and Manchester, to reside at Richmond; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended between Jordan's Point and the highest tide water on James and Appamattox rivers. To the district of Yorktown shall be annexed West Point and Cumberland, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Yorktown, which shall be the sole port of entry; also a surveyor for the two ports of delivery, to reside at West Point; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended between the point forming the south shore of the mouth of Rappahannock river, and the point forming the south shore of the mouth of York river, and thence up said river to West Point, and thence up Pomonkey and Mattaponi rivers to the highest navigable waters thereof. To the district of Tappahannock shall be annexed Urbanna, Port Royal, Fredericksburg, and Falmouth, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Tappahannock, which shall be the sole port of entry; also a surveyor for each of the ports of Urbanna, Port Royal, and Fredericksburg; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended between Smith's Point, at the mouth of Potomac, and the point forming the south shore of the mouth of Rappahannock river, and thence up the last mentioned river to the highest tide water thereof. The district of Yeocomico river, including Kinsale, shall extend from Smith's Point, on the south side of Potomac river, to Boyd's Hole on the same river, including all the waters, shores, bays, rivers, creeks, harbors, and inlets, along the south shore of Potomac river to Boyd's Hole aforesaid; and Yeocomico, including Kinsale, shall be the sole port of entry, and a collector shall be appointed, to reside on Yeocomico river. The district of Dumfries, including Newport, shall extend from Boyd's Hole to Cockpit Point, on the south side of Potomac river; and a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Dumfries, which shall be the sole port of entry; and the authority of the officers of this district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended between Boyd's Hole and Cockpit Point aforesaid. For the district of Alexandria shall be appointed a collector and surveyor, to reside at Alexandria, which shall be the sole port of entry; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, on the south side of the river Potomac, from the last mentioned Cockpit Point to the highest tide water of the said river. For the district of Folly Landing shall be appointed a collector, who shall reside at Accomack Court house, and whose authority shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, of the county of Accomack. For the district of Cherry Stone shall be appointed a collector, to reside at Cherry Stone, whose authority shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended within Northampton county. For the district of South Quay a collector shall be appointed, to reside thereat, whose authority shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, in that part of Virginia comprehended within the limits of the said State. For the district of Louisville a collector shall be appointed, to reside thereat, whose authority shall extend over all waters, shores, and inlets, included between the rapids and the mouth of Ohio river, on the southeast side thereof.

Acts of Congress.

In the State of South Carolina shall be three districts, to wit: Georgetown, Charleston, and Beaufort, each of which shall be a port of entry. The district of Georgetown shall include the shores, inlets, and rivers, from the boundary of North Carolina to the point of Cape Roman.

The district of Charleston shall include all the shores, inlets, and rivers, from Cape Roman to Combahee river, inclusive; and the district of Beaufort shall include the shores, inlets, and rivers, from Combahee river to Back river in Georgia, comprehending also the shores, inlets, and harbors, formed by the different bars and sea islands, lying within each district respectively; at the port of Charleston shall be a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, and a collector at each of the other ports.

In the State of Georgia shall be four districts, to wit: Savannah, Sunbury, Brunswick, and Saint Mary's, each of which shall be a port of entry. The district of Savannah shall include Savannah river, Great and Little Ogeechee rivers, with the other harbors, creeks, and rivers, formed by the inlets of Tybee, Little Tybee, Warsaw, and Ossabaw, north of the island of Ossabaw; and a naval officer, collector, and surveyor, for the said district shall be appointed to reside at Savannah. The district of Sunbury shall include the Medway, North and South Newport, and Sapelo rivers, with the harbors, creeks, and rivers, formed by the inlets of Saint Catharine's, south of Ossabaw and Sapelo, and a collector for the district shall be appointed to reside at Sunbury. The district of Brunswick shall include the Altamaha, Frederica, and Turtle rivers, with the other harbors, creeks, and rivers, formed by the inlets of Doboy, south of Sapelo, Altamaha, and Saint Simons, north of the south point of Jekyll island; Frederica shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector for the said district shall be appointed, to reside at Brunswick. The district of Saint Mary's shall include Great Setilla, Little Setilla, Crooked river, and Saint Mary's river, with the harbors, creeks, and rivers, formed by the inlets of Saint Andrews and Amelia Sounds; and a collector for the said district shall be appointed, to reside at Saint Mary's. And in each district it shall be lawful for the collector to grant a permit to unlade at any port or place within the district, and to appoint or put on board any ship or vessel, for which a permit is granted, one or more searchers or inspectors, as may be necessary for the security of the revenue.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That every port of entry established by this act shall be a port of delivery also, Provided, always, that no ship or vessel not wholly belonging to a citizen or citizens of the United States shall be admitted to unload at any port or place except the following, to wit: Portsmouth, in the State of New Hampshire; Portland, Falmouth, Dighton, Salem, Gloucester, Newburyport, Marblehead, Sherbourne, Boston, Plymouth, Wiscasset, Machias, and Penobscot, in the State of Massachusetts; New London, or New Haven, in the State of Connecticut; New York; Perth Amboy, or Burlington, in the State of New Jersey; Philadelphia; Wilmington, in the State of Delaware; Annapolis, Vienna, Oxford, Georgetown on Potomac, Chestertown, Town Creek, Nottingham, Nanjemoy, Digges' Landing, Snow Hill, and Carrollsburg, in the State of Maryland; Alexandria, Kinsale, Newport, Tappanhook, Port Royal, Fredericksburg, Urbanna, Yorktown, West Point, Hampton, Bermuda Hundred, City Point, Rocket's Landing, Norfolk, or Portsmouth, in the State of Virginia; Charleston, Georgetown, or Beaufort, in the State of South Carolina; or in either of the districts of Savannah, Sunbury, Brunswick, or Saint Mary's, in the State of Georgia. Nor shall any ship or vessel arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, or from any place beyond the same, be admitted to enter at any other than the following ports, to wit: Portsmouth, in the State of New Hampshire; Boston, Newburyport, Salem, Gloucester, Portland, or Falmouth, in the State of Massachusetts; New London, or New Haven, in the State of Connecticut; New York; Perth Amboy; Philadelphia; Wilmington, in the State of Delaware; Baltimore, Maryland; Alexandria, Norfolk, or Portsmouth, in the State of Virginia; Charleston, Georgetown, or Beaufort, in the State of South Carolina; or Savannah, in the State of Georgia: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the master or commander of any ship or vessel from making entry with the collector of any port or district in which such ship or vessel may be owned, or from whence she may have sailed on such a voyage.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the master or commander of every ship or vessel bound to a port of delivery only, in any of the following districts, to wit: Portland and Falmouth, Bath, Newburyport, New London, (except the port of Stonington in the said district,) Norfolk and Portsmouth, Bermuda Hundred and City Point, Yorktown or Tappanhook, (except the port of Urbanna in the said district,) shall first come to at the port of entry of such district, with his ship or vessel, and there make entry, deliver a manifest of her cargo, and pay, or secure to be paid, all legal duties, tonnage, port fees, and charges, in manner by this act provided, before such ship or vessel shall proceed to her port of delivery; and that any ship or vessel bound to a port of delivery in any other district not under like restrictions by this act, or either of the ports of Stonington or Urbanna, may first proceed to her port of delivery, and then make legal entry within the time by this act limited.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the master or commander of every ship or vessel, if bound to the district of Nottingham, shall, before he pass by the port of Town Creek, and immediately after his arrival, deposit with the surveyor of the said port a true manifest of the cargo on board such ship or vessel; if bound to any district on the Potomac, shall, before he pass by the rivers Saint Mary's and Yeocomico, and immediately after his arrival, deposit with the surveyor at Saint Mary's, or the collector of Yeocomico, as may be most convenient, a true manifest of the cargo on board such ship or vessel, including a declaration of the port at which the same is to be entered; if bound to the district of Tappanhook, shall, before he pass by the port of Urbanna, and immediately after his arrival, deposit with the surveyor for that port a like manifest; and if bound to the district of Bermuda Hundred, or City Point, shall, before he pass by Elizabeth river, and immediately after his arrival, deposit with the collector of the port of Norfolk and Portsmouth, or with the collector for the port of Hampton, a like manifest; and the said surveyors and collectors, respectively, shall, after registering the manifests, transmit the same, duly certified to have been so deposited, to the officer with whom the entries are to be made, without which certificate no such entry shall be received.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the duties of the respective officers, to be appointed by virtue of this act, shall be as follows: At such of the ports to which there shall be appointed a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, it shall be the duty of the collector to receive all reports, manifests, and documents, made or exhibited to him by the master or commander of any ship or vessel, conformably to the regulations prescribed by this act, to make due entry and record, in books therein; to receive the entry of all ships and vessels, and of all the goods, wares, and merchandise, imported in such ships or vessels, together with the original invoices thereof; to estimate the duties payable thereon, and to endorse the same on each entry; to receive all moneys paid for duties, and to take all bonds for securing the payment of duties; to grant all permits for the unloading and delivery of goods; to employ proper persons as weighers, gaugers, measurers, and inspectors, at the several ports within his district, together with such persons as shall be necessary to serve in the boats which may be provided for securing the collection of the revenue; to provide, at the public expense, and with the approbation of the principal officer of the Treasury Department, storehouses for the safe keeping of goods, together with such scales, weights, and measures, as shall be deemed necessary, and to perform all other duties which shall be assigned to him by law. It shall be the duty of the naval officer to receive copies of all manifests, to estimate and record the duties on each entry made with the collector, and to correct any error made therein, before a permit to unlade or deliver shall be granted; to countersign all permits and clearances granted by the collector. It shall be the duty of the surveyor to superintend and direct all inspectors, weighers, measurers, and gaugers, within his district, and the employment of the boats which may be provided for securing the collection of the revenue; to go on board ships or vessels arriving within his district, or to put on board one or more inspectors; to ascertain by a hydrometer what distilled spirits shall be of Jamaica proof, rating all distilled spirits which shall be of the proof of twenty-four degrees as of Jamaica proof, and to examine whether the goods imported are conformable to the entries thereof; and the said surveyors shall, in all cases, be subject to the control of the collector and naval officer.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That every collector appointed in virtue of this act, in case of his necessary absence, sickness, or inability to execute the duties of his office, may appoint a deputy, duly authorized under his hand and seal, to execute and perform, on his behalf, all and singular the powers, functions, and duties, of collector of the district, to which he, the said principal, is attached, who shall be answerable for the neglect of duty, or other malconduct, of his said deputy, in the execution of the office.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That in case of the disability or death of any collector, the duties and authorities vested in him by this act shall devolve on his deputy, if any such hath been appointed, (for whose conduct the estate of such disabled or deceased collector shall be liable;) and the said deputy shall exercise the authority and perform all the duties, until a successor shall be appointed. But in cases where no deputy is appointed, the authorities and duties of the disabled or deceased collector shall devolve upon the naval officer of the same district, until a successor, duly authorized and sworn, shall enter upon the execution of the duties of the said office.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That at such of the ports established by this act, to which a collector and surveyor only are assigned, the said collector shall execute all the duties herein required to be done by the collector and naval officer at other ports. That at such ports to which a collector only is assigned, such collector shall possess all the powers, and execute, as far as may be, all the duties prescribed to a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, at the ports where such officers are established; that at such ports of delivery only, to which a surveyor is assigned, it shall be his duty to receive and record the copies of all manifests transmitted to him by the collector; to enter and record all permits granted by such collector, distinguishing the gauge, weight, measure, and quality, of the goods specified therein; to take care that no goods be unladed or delivered from any ship or vessel without such permit, and to perform all other duties required to be done by a surveyor: that at such ports of delivery only, to which no surveyor is assigned, it shall be the duty of the collector of the district to attend the unloading and delivery of goods, or, in cases of necessity, to employ a proper person or persons for that purpose, who shall possess the power, and be entitled to the like compensation allowed to inspectors during the time they are employed. Every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall attend in person at the port or district for which he is appointed, and, before he enters on the execution of his office, shall take an oath or affirmation in the form following, to wit: "I, _____ do solemnly swear or affirm, (as the case may be,) that I will truly and faithfully execute and perform all the duties of a _____ of the port or district of _____, according to law, and the best of my skill and ability." The said oath or affirmation shall be administered by any justice of the peace, and a certificate thereof, under the hand and seal of such justice, transmitted within three months thereafter to the Comptroller of the Treasury. Any collector, naval officer, or surveyor, failing herein, shall forfeit and pay two hundred dollars, recoverable, with costs, in any court having cognizance thereof, to the use of the informer; and no weigher, gauger, measurer, or inspector, shall execute the duties of his office, until he shall have taken the above oath or affirmation.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the collectors, naval officers, and surveyors, to be appointed by virtue of this act, shall respectively keep fair and true accounts of all their transactions, relative to their duty as officers of the customs, in such manner and form as may be directed by the proper department, or officer appointed by law to superintend the revenue of the United States; and shall, at all times, submit their books, papers, and accounts to the inspection of such persons as may be appointed for that purpose. And the collectors of the different ports shall at all times pay, to the order of the officer who shall be authorized to direct the same, the whole of the moneys which they may respectively receive by virtue of this act, (such moneys as they are otherwise by this act directed to pay, only excepted,) and shall also, once in every three months, or oftener, if they shall be required, transmit their accounts for settlement to the department or officer before mentioned.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That every master or other person, having or taking the charge or command of any ship or vessel bound to any port of the United States from any foreign port or place, shall deliver, upon demand, to any officer or other person lawfully authorized, who shall first come on board his ship or vessel, two manifests, signed by the said master or person having command, and specifying, in words, (and not in figures,) a true account of the loading which such ship or vessel had on board at the port from which she last sailed, and at the time of her sailing, or at any time since, the packages, marks, and numbers, and noting thereon to what port in the United States such ship or vessel is bound, and the name or names of the person or persons to whom the goods are consigned, or in cases where the goods are shipped to order, the names of the shippers, noting the goods consigned to their order. One of which manifests such officer or other person shall sign, and return to the master or other person having the charge of such ship or vessel, certifying thereon as nearly as may be, the time when the same was produced. And that a like manifest was delivered to him, and shall transmit the other manifest to the collector of the district to which such ship or vessel is bound.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the master or other person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel (ships and vessels of war excepted) coming into, or arriving in any of the ports or districts of the United States, or in any of the creeks or harbors thereof, shall, within forty-eight hours after such arrival, repair to the office of the collector of the district where such vessel shall so arrive, and shall report to the said collector the place from whence ship or vessel, and shall deliver to such collector two manifests, agreeably to the directions of this act, unless he shall before have delivered one manifest to some officer, or other person lawfully authorized in manner as hereinbefore is required, in which case he shall deliver the manifest certified as aforesaid, together with such documents as are usually furnished in the port from whence they came, and shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before the collector or other proper officer, which oath or affirmation he or they are authorized and required to administer, and shall be in the words following, to wit: "I, —, do solemnly swear or affirm (as the case may be) that this is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, a just and true manifest of all the goods, wares, and merchandise, on board the —, at the port from which she last sailed, at the time of her sailing, or at any time since, and of which vessel I am at present master." And if the master or other person having charge or command of any such ship or vessel shall refuse or neglect to make the entry, or deliver his manifest and documents, pursuant to the directions of this act, he shall forfeit and pay five hundred dollars for each refusal or neglect.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be unladen or delivered from any ship or vessel but in open day, or without a permit from the collector for that purpose; and if the master or commander of any ship or vessel shall suffer or permit the same, such master and commander, and every other person who shall be aiding or assisting in landing, removing, housing, or otherwise securing the same, shall forfeit and pay the sum of four hundred dollars for every offence; shall, moreover, be disabled from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, for a term not exceeding seven years; and it shall be the duty of the collector of the district to advertise the names of all such persons in the public gazette of the State in which he resides, within twenty days after each respective conviction. And all goods, wares, and merchandise, so landed or discharged, shall become forfeited, and may be seized by any officer of the customs; and where the value thereof shall amount to four hundred dollars, the vessel, tackle, apparel, and furniture, shall be subject to like forfeiture and seizure: Provided, always, That if any ship or vessel, compelled by distress of weather, or other sufficient cause, shall put into any port or place of the United States, other than that to which she was actually destined, the master or other person having command, shall, within forty-eight hours next after his arrival, make report and deliver a true manifest of his cargo to the collector of the port or district; and, moreover, shall, within twenty-four hours, make protest in the usual form before a notary public or justice of the peace, of the cause and circumstances of such distress; and if it shall appear to the collector that there is a necessity for unloading such ship or vessel, he shall grant permission, and appoint a proper officer to attend the unloading thereof; and all goods, wares, and merchandise, so unladen, shall be stored under the direction, and subject to the safekeeping of such collector; but if any part thereof shall be of a perishable nature, or it may be necessary to make sale of any part thereof to defray the expenses of such vessel or cargo, the said collector shall grant a license to the master, commander, or owner, to dispose of so much thereof as are perishable, or shall be necessary to defray such expenses: Provided, That the duties thereon be first paid or secured: And, provided also, That such necessity be made appear by the wardens of the port, or other persons legally authorized to certify the same, and where there are no such persons, by the affidavit of two reputable citizens of the neighborhood, best acquainted with matters of that kind.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That every person having goods, wares, and merchandise, in any ship or vessel which shall arrive at any port of entry, or of delivery only, shall make entry with the collector of the port or district where the same shall arrive, of all such goods, wares, and merchandise, specifying the number of packages, and the marks, numbers, and contents of each, (or if in bulk, the quantity and quality,) together with an account of the net prime cost thereof; and shall, moreover, produce to the collector the original invoice or invoices, together with the bills of lading; and the said collector shall estimate and endorse the duties on the said entry, the party making such entry taking an oath or affirmation, that it contains the whole of the goods, wares, and merchandise, imported by him, or to him consigned, in such ship or vessel which shall then have come to his knowledge, and that the said invoice contains, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the net prime cost thereof; and that if he shall afterwards discover any other, or greater quantity than is contained in such entry, he will make due report and entry thereof; and the said oath or affirmation shall be administered by the collector, and the entry shall be subscribed by the person making the same: Provided, That in all cases where the party making entry shall reside ten miles or upward from such port, the affidavit or affirmation of such party, taken before a justice of the peace, and by him endorsed on the original invoice, shall be as effectual, as if administered and endorsed by the collector.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That all such entries so authenticated by the collector, together with a copy of the same made out by the party, shall, before any permit is granted for the landing of any goods, wares, or merchandise, therein contained, be examined by the naval officer, (where such officer is established,) who shall countersign the same, and, retaining one, shall return the other certified to the party, together with the bills of lading, and invoice or invoices; and on such certified entries being returned to the collector, and the duties thereon paid, or secured to be paid, he shall grant a permit for the unloading and landing of the goods, wares, and merchandise, therein mentioned. And at such ports for which no naval officer is appointed, the collector shall grant like permits for the unloading and landing of all such goods as shall be so entered, and the duties thereof paid or secured.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the collector, naval officer, and surveyor, of any port of entry or delivery, at which any ship or vessel may arrive, to put on board such ship or vessel one or more inspectors, who shall make known to the person having charge of such ship or vessel, the duties he is to perform by virtue of this act; and such inspector shall suffer no goods, wares, or merchandise, to be delivered without a permit from the proper officer authorizing the same, and shall enter in a book, to be by him kept for that purpose, the contents of each permit, specifying the marks and numbers of each package, and a description thereof, with the name of the person to whom such permit was granted; and if, at the expiration of fifteen working days after such ship or vessel shall begin to unload her cargo, there shall be found on board any goods, wares, or merchandise, the said inspector shall take possession thereof, and deliver them to the collector of the district, or to such person as he shall authorize or appoint on his behalf to receive the said goods, taking his receipt for the same, and giving a certificate to the person having command, describing the packages, with their marks and numbers, so taken: and as soon as any ship or vessel is entirely unladen, he shall, with the collector and naval officer, compare the account and entries he has made of the goods unladen from such ship or vessel with the manifest delivered to the collector, and if it appears that there are more goods than are specified in the said manifest, the same shall be endorsed thereon, with a description of the packages, their marks and numbers, or of such goods as may be in bulk, and the same shall be subscribed by such inspector, who is hereby directed to remain on board the said ship or vessel until she is discharged: Provided always, That the said limitation of fifteen days shall not extend to vessels laden with salt or coal; but if the master or owner of such vessels require longer time to discharge their cargoes, the wages of the inspector, for every day's attendance exceeding the said fifteen days, shall be paid by the master or owner. And if any goods, wares, or merchandise, subject to duty, shall be removed from the wharf or place where the same may be landed, before they shall be weighed or gauged, (as the case may be,) or without the consent of the collector or other proper officer, all such goods, wares, and merchandise, so removed, shall be forfeited. All goods delivered to the collector in manner aforesaid, shall be kept at the charge and risk of the owner, for a term not exceeding nine months; and if within that time no claim can be made for the same, an appraisement thereof shall be made by two or more reputable merchants, and lodged with the collector, who shall sell the same at public auction, and pay the proceeds, retaining the duties and charges thereon, into the Treasury of the United States, there to remain for the use of the owner, who shall, upon due proof of his property, be entitled to receive the same; and the receipt or certificate of the collector shall exonerate the master or commander from all claim of the owner: Provided, That where entry shall have been duly made of such goods, the same shall not be appraised; and that where such goods are of a perishable nature, they shall be sold forthwith.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That if any goods, wares, or merchandise, on which duties are payable, shall receive damage during the voyage, or shall not be accompanied with the original invoice of their cost, it shall be lawful for the collector to appoint one merchant, and the owner or consignee another, who, being sworn or affirmed by the collector, well and truly to appraise such goods, shall value them accordingly, and the duties upon such goods shall be estimated according to such valuation; and if any package, or any goods stowed in bulk, which shall have been entered as is herein before directed, shall not be duly delivered, or if any of the packages so entered shall not agree with the manifest, or if the manifest shall not agree with the delivery, in every such case the person having command shall forfeit and pay the sum of two hundred dollars, unless it shall appear that such disagreement was occasioned by unavoidable necessity or accident, and not with intention to defraud the revenue.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That the ad valorem rates of duty upon goods, wares, and merchandise, at the place of importation; shall be estimated by adding twenty per cent. to the actual cost thereof, if imported from the Cape of Good Hope, or from any place beyond the same, and ten per cent. on the actual cost thereof, if imported from any other place or country, exclusive of all charges.

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That all foreign coins and currencies shall be estimated according to the following rates: each pound sterling of Great Britain at four dollars forty-four cents; each livre tournois of France at eighteen cents and a half; each florin or guilder of the United Netherlands at thirty-nine cents; each mark banco of Hamburg at thirty-three cents and one-third; each rix-dollar of Denmark at one hundred cents; each rix-dollar of Sweden at one hundred cents; each ruble of Russia at one hundred cents; each real plate of Spain at ten cents; each milree of Portugal at one dollar and twenty-four cents; each pound sterling of Ireland at four dollars ten cents; each tale of China at one dollar forty-eight cents; each pagoda of India at one dollar ninety-four cents; each rupee of Bengal at fifty-five cents and a half; and all other denominations of money in value as near as may be to the said rates; and the invoices of all importations shall be made out in the currency of the place or country from whence the importation shall be made, and not otherwise.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That all duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported, shall be paid by the importer, before a permit shall be granted for landing the same, unless the amount of such duties shall exceed fifty dollars, in which case it shall be at the option of the party making entry, to secure the same by bond, with one or more sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the collector, and made payable as followeth, to wit: For the duties upon all articles of West India produce, within four months; for the duties upon all Madeira wines, within twelve months; and upon all other goods, within six months; but in any case the party making entry shall be at liberty to deposit with the collector any part of the goods upon which such duties shall arise, of double the value, in the judgment of the collector, to secure the payment of the duties, with the charges; which deposit the collector shall accept in lieu of such bond and security, and shall safely keep the goods so deposited, at the expense and risk of the party, for the term for which such bond would have been given; at the expiration, whereof, unless the said deposit shall have been redeemed by the payment of the duties, the said goods shall be sold at public sale, and as much as shall be necessary applied to the payment of the said duties, and the residue, after deducting the charges which have accrued, shall be paid to the owner or owners of such goods: Provided always, That where the amount of duties shall exceed fifty dollars, a discount shall be allowed for prompt payment, after the rate of ten per centum per annum on the amount of such excess: And provided also, That no person whose bond for the payment of duties is due and unsatisfied, shall be allowed a future credit with the collector, until such bond shall be fully paid or discharged.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That all the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of any ship or vessel, shall be paid to the collector within ten days after entry made, and before such ship or vessel shall be permitted to clear out; the register of which ship or vessel, at the time of entry, shall be lodged in the office of the collector, and there remain until such clearance.

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That where any bond for the payment of duties shall not be satisfied on the day it became due, the collector shall prosecute for the recovery of the money due thereon, by action, or suit at law, in the proper court having cognizance therein; and in all cases of insolvency, or where any estate, in the hands of executors or administrators, shall be insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debt due to the United States on any such bonds shall be first satisfied.

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That when it shall appear that any goods, wares, or merchandise, of which entry shall have been made in the office of a collector, are not invoiced according to the actual cost thereof at the place of exportation, and that the difference was made with design to defraud the revenue, all such goods, wares, or merchandise, or the value thereof, to be recovered of the person making entry, shall be forfeited; and in any such case, or where the collector is suspicious of fraud, and that any such goods, wares, or merchandise, are not invoiced at a sum equal to that for which they have usually sold in the place or country from whence they were imported, it shall be the duty of such collector to take the said goods, wares, or merchandise, into his possession, and retain the same at the risk and expense of the owner or consignee thereof, until their value, at the time and place of importation, according to the principles for estimating the same, established by this act, shall be ascertained by two reputable merchants, mutually chosen by the said collector and owner or consignee, and the duties arising upon such valuation shall be first paid, or secured to be paid, as required by this act in other cases of importation.

Sec. 23. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the collector, or other officer of the customs, after entry made of any goods, wares, or merchandise, on suspicion of fraud, to open and examine, in the presence of two or more reputable merchants, any package or packages thereof; and if, upon such examination, they shall be found to agree with the entries, the officer making such seizure shall cause the same to be repacked, and delivered to the owner or claimant forthwith, and the expense of such examination shall be paid by the collector, and allowed in the settlement of his accounts; but if any of the packages so examined be found to differ in their contents from the entry, and it shall appear that such difference hath been made with intention to defraud the revenue, then all the goods, wares, or merchandise, contained in such package or packages, shall be forfeited: Provided, always, That if the owner or consignee of such goods as shall not be accompanied with the original invoice, should choose to wait the receipt of the invoice, in such case the collector shall take into his possession all such goods, wares, and merchandise, and store the same, at the expense and risk of the owner or consignee, until the invoice shall arrive, or until they agree to have the same valued.

Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, or other person specially appointed by either of them for that purpose, shall have full power and authority to enter any ship or vessel in which they shall have reason to suspect any goods, wares, or merchandise, subject to duty, shall be concealed, and therein to search for, seize, and secure, any such goods, wares, or merchandise; and if they shall have cause to suspect a concealment thereof, in any particular dwelling house, store, building, or other place, they, or either of them, shall, upon application, on oath or affirmation, to any justice of the peace, be entitled to a warrant, to enter such house, store, or other place, (in the day time only,) and there to search for such goods, and if any shall be found, to seize and secure the same for trial; and all such goods, wares, and merchandise, on which the duties shall not have been paid or secured, shall be forfeited.

Sec. 25. And be it further enacted, That all goods, wares, and merchandise, which shall be seized by virtue of this act, shall be put into and remain in the custody of the collector, until such proceedings shall be had, as by this act are required, to ascertain whether the same have been forfeited or not; and if it shall be adjudged that they are not forfeited, they shall be forthwith restored to the owner or owners, claimant or claimants thereof. And if any person or persons shall conceal or buy any goods, wares, or merchandise, knowing them to be liable to seizure by this act, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a sum double the value of the goods so concealed or purchased.

Sec. 26. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the several officers to be appointed or employed by virtue of this act, to make seizure of, and secure any ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall be liable to seizure by virtue of this act, as well without as within their respective districts.

Sec. 27. And be it further enacted, That if any officer or other person, executing or aiding and assisting in the seizure of goods, shall be sued or molested for any thing done in virtue of the powers given by this act, or by virtue of a warrant granted by any judge or justice pursuant to law, such officer or other person may plead the general issue, and give this act in evidence; and if in such suit the plaintiff be non-suited, or judgment pass against him, the defendant shall recover double cost; and in all actions, suits, or informations, to be brought, where any seizure shall be made pursuant to this act, if the property be claimed by any person, in every such case the onus probandi shall be upon such claimant; and if any person shall forcibly resist, prevent, or impede, any officer of the customs, or their deputies, or any person assisting them in the execution of their duty, such persons so offending shall, for every offence, be fined in a sum not exceeding four hundred dollars.

Sec. 28. And be it further enacted, That every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall, within three months after he enters upon the execution of his office, give bond, with one or more sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States, and payable to the said United States, conditioned for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office according to law; that is to say, the collector of Philadelphia, in the sum of sixty thousand dollars; the collector of New York, fifty thousand dollars; the collector of Boston, forty thousand dollars; the collectors of Baltimore, town and Charleston, thirty thousand dollars; the collector of Norfolk and Portsmouth, fifteen thousand dollars; the collectors of Portsmouth, in New Hampshire, of Salem and Beverly, Wilmington, Annapolis, Georgetown in Maryland, Bermuda Hundred and City Point, and Alexandria, ten thousand dollars each; the collectors of Newburyport, Gloucester, Marblehead, Plymouth, Nantucket, Portland and Falmouth, New London, New Haven, Fairfield, Perth Amboy, Chester, Oxford, Yorktown, Dumfries, Georgetown in South Carolina, Beaufort, and Savannah, each five thousand dollars; and all the other collectors in the sum of two thousand dollars each. The naval officers for the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, town, and Charleston, ten thousand dollars each; and all the other naval officers, in the sum of two thousand dollars each. The surveyors of the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, town, and Charleston, five thousand dollars each, and all other surveyors one thousand dollars each; which bonds shall be filed in the office of the said Comptroller, and be by him severally put in suit, for the benefit of the United States, upon any breach of the condition thereof.

Sec. 29. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed and paid to the collectors, naval officers, and surveyors, to be appointed pursuant to this act, the fees and per centage following, that is to say: to each collector, for every entrance of any ship or vessel of one hundred tons burden, or upwards, two dollars and a half; for every clearance of any ship or vessel of one hundred tons burden, and upwards, two dollars and a half; for every entrance of any ship or vessel under the burden of one hundred tons, one dollar and a half; for every clearance of a ship or vessel under one hundred tons burden, one dollar and a half; for every permit to land goods, twenty cents; and for every permit to load goods for exportation, which are entitled to drawback, thirty cents; for every official certificate twenty cents; for every bill of health, twenty cents; for every other official document (registers excepted) required by the owner or master of every vessel not before enumerated, twenty cents; and where a naval officer is appointed to the same port, the said fees shall be equally divided between the collector and the said naval officer, apportioning to each his moiety of the necessary expenses of stationery, and the rent of an office to be provided by the collector in the place of his residence, most convenient for the trade of the district, in which the said collector and naval officer shall each have at least one separate room; and the said fees shall be received by the collector, who shall settle the accounts monthly, and pay to the naval officer the balance which may be due to him on such monthly settlement.

To each surveyor there shall be allowed, for all the services required by law, to be performed by such surveyor, on board any ship or vessel of one hundred tons, and upwards, and having on board goods, wares, and merchandise, subject to duty, three dollars; for the like services on board any ship or vessel of less than one hundred tons burden, having on board goods, wares, and merchandise, subject to duty, one and a half dollars; on all vessels not having on board goods, wares, and merchandise, subject to duty, two thirds of a dollar; all which fees shall be paid to the collector by the master or owner of the ship or vessel in which the services are performed, and the said collector shall pay weekly to the surveyor the fees so received. To each inspector there shall be allowed for every day he shall be actually employed in aid of the customs, a sum not exceeding one dollar and twenty-five cents, to be paid by the collector out of the revenue, and charged to the public. To the measurers, weighers, and gaugers, respectively, for their services, shall be allowed, and paid by the collector, out of the revenue, for the measurement of every one hundred bushels of salt, or grain, eighteen cents; for the measurement of every one hundred bushels of coal, twenty-five cents; for the weighing of every one hundred and twelve pounds, one cent; for the gauging of every cask, six cents. There shall, moreover, be allowed to the collectors of each of the following ports, to wit: Boston, Salem, and Beverly, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk or Portsmouth, and Charleston, one-half per cent. on the amount of all moneys by them respectively received and paid into the Treasury of the United States; and to the collector at each of the other ports by this act established, one per centum on the amount of all moneys by them respectively received and paid into the Treasury of the United States. Every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall cause to be affixed and constantly kept in some public and conspicuous place of his office, a fair table of the rates of fees and duties demandable by law; and in case of failure herein, shall forfeit and pay one hundred dollars, to be recovered with costs, in any court having cognizance thereof, to the use of the informer; and if any officer of the customs shall demand or receive any greater or other fee, compensation, or reward, for executing any duty or service required of him by law, he shall forfeit and pay two hundred dollars for each offence, recoverable in manner aforesaid, for the use of the party aggrieved.

Sec. 30. And be it further enacted, That the duties and fees to be collected by virtue of this act, shall be received in gold and silver coin only, at the following rates, that is to say: the gold coins of France, England, Spain, and Portugal, and all other gold coins of equal fineness, at eight-ty-nine cents for every penny weight. The Mexican dollar at one hundred cents; the crown of France at one dollar and eleven cents; the crown of England at one dollar and eleven cents; and all silver coins, of equal fineness, at one dollar and eleven cents per ounce.

* By "An act to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the United States," approved on the 25th of February, 1791, the bills or notes of that institution, payable on demand, in gold and silver coin, were made receivable in all payments to the United States.

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That all the drawbacks allowed by law on the exportation of goods, wares, and merchandise, imported, shall be paid or allowed by the collector at whose office the said goods, wares, and merchandise, were originally entered, and not otherwise, retaining one per centum for the benefit of the United States.

Sec. 32. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That no goods, wares, or merchandise, entitled to drawback, shall be reladen before an entry shall be made with the collector of the port from whence such goods are intended to be exported; which entry shall contain a particular account of the casks and packages, their marks, numbers, and contents, the cost thereof, the vessel or vessels in which they were imported, and the place or places imported from; and the person or persons intending to export such goods, shall give bond, with one or more sufficient sureties, that the same, or any part thereof, shall not be relanded in any port or place within the limits of the United States, as settled by the late treaty of peace; and shall, moreover, make oath or affirmation as to the truth of the entry, that the goods, wares, or merchandise, are, in quantity, quality, and value, as therein expressed, according to the inward entry thereof, which entry was duly made at the time of importation, pursuant to the directions of this act, and that the quality is the same as at the time of importation; and the exporter of such goods shall not be entitled to drawback the duties, until at least six months after the exportation thereof, and until he shall produce to the collector, with whom such outward entry is made, a certificate in writing of two reputable merchants, at the foreign port or place in which the same were landed, together with the oath or affirmation of the master and mate of the vessel in which they were exported, certifying the delivery thereof; but in case any vessel shall be cast away, or meet with such unavoidable accidents as to prevent the landing such goods, a protest in due form of law, made by the master and mate, or some of the seamen, or in case no such protest can be had, then the oath or affirmation of the exporter shall be received in lieu of the other proofs herein directed, unless there shall be good reason to suspect the truth of such oath or affirmation, in which case it shall and may be lawful for the collector to require such further proof as the nature of the case may demand: Provided, also, That no goods, wares, or merchandise, imported, shall be entitled to a drawback of the duties paid or secured to be paid thereon, unless such duties shall amount to twenty dollars at least, nor unless they shall be exported in the same cask, package or packages, and from the port or district into which they were originally imported; and, moreover, shall be related under the inspection of the collector, naval officer, or surveyor of the port.

Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, That the sums allowed to be paid by law on the exportation of dried or pickled fish, and of salted provisions, shall be paid by the collector of the port or district from whence the same shall be exported: Provided, That due entry thereof shall be first made, and bonds given, as in the case of drawbacks, and that no such allowance shall be made, unless it shall amount to three dollars, at least, upon any one entry.

Sec. 34. And be it further enacted, That if any goods, wares, or merchandise, entered for exportation with a view to drawback the duties, or to obtain any allowance given by law on the exportation thereof, shall be landed in any port or place within the limits of the United States as aforesaid, all such goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture, together with the vessels from which such goods shall be landed, and the vessels or boats used in landing the same, and all persons concerned therein shall, on indictment and conviction thereof, suffer imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months; and for discovery of frauds, and seizure of goods, wares, and merchandise, relanded contrary to law, the several officers established by this act shall have the same powers, and in case of seizure the same proceedings shall be had, as in the case of goods, wares, and merchandise, imported contrary to law; and for measuring, weighing, or gauging goods for exportation, the same fees shall be allowed as in like cases upon the importation thereof.

Sec. 35. And be it further enacted, That if any officer of the customs shall, directly or indirectly, take or receive any bribe, reward, or recompense, for conniving, or shall connive at a false entry of any ship or vessel, or of any goods, wares, or merchandise, and shall be thereof convicted, every such officer shall forfeit and pay a sum not less than two hundred nor more than two thousand dollars for each offence, and be forever disabled from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States; and any person giving or offering any bribe, recompense, or reward, for any such deception, collusion, or fraud, shall forfeit and pay a sum not less than two hundred nor more than two thousand dollars for each offence; and in all cases where an oath or affirmation is, by this act, required from a master or other person having command of a ship or vessel, or from an owner or consignee of goods, wares, and merchandise, if the person so swearing or affirming shall swear or affirm falsely, such person shall, on indictment and conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, in the discretion of the court before whom the conviction shall be had, so as the fine shall not exceed one thousand dollars, and the term of imprisonment shall not exceed twelve months.

Sec. 36. And be it further enacted, That all penalties, accruing by any breach of this act, shall be sued for, and recovered, with costs of suit, in the name of the United States, in any court proper to try the same, by the collector of the district where the same accrued, and not otherwise, unless in cases of penalty relating to an officer of the customs; and such collector shall be, and hereby is, authorized and directed, to sue for and prosecute the same to effect, and to distribute and pay the sum recovered, after first deducting all necessary costs and charges, according to law. And all ships or vessels, goods, wares, and merchandise, which shall become forfeit by virtue of this act, shall be seized, labelled, and prosecuted, as aforesaid, in the proper court having cognizance thereof; and the court shall cause fourteen days notice to be given of such seizure and label, by causing the substance of such label, with the order of the court thereon, setting forth the time and place appointed for trial, to be inserted in some public newspaper nearest the place of seizure, and also by posting up the same in the most public manner for the space of fourteen days, at or near the place of trial; and proclamation shall be made in such manner as the court shall direct; and if no person shall appear to claim such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, the same shall be adjudged to be forfeited; but if any person shall appear before such judgment of forfeiture, and claim any such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, and shall give bond to defend the prosecution thereof, and to respond the cost in case he shall not support his claim, the court shall proceed to hear and determine the cause according to law. And upon the prayer of any claimant to the court, that any ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, so seized and prosecuted, or any part thereof should be delivered to such claimant, it shall be lawful for the court to appoint three proper persons to appraise such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, who shall be sworn in open court for the faithful discharge of their duty; and such appraisement shall be made at the expense of the party on whose prayer it is granted; and on the return of such appraisement, if the claimant shall, with one or more sureties, to be approved of by the court, execute a bond in the usual form, to the United States, for the payment of a sum equal to the sum at which the ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, so prayed to be delivered, be appraised, the court shall, by rule, order such ship or vessels, goods, wares, or merchandise, to be delivered to the said claimant, and the said bond shall be lodged with the proper officer of the court, and if judgment shall pass in favor of the claimant, the court shall cause the said bond to be cancelled; but if judgment shall pass against the claimant as to the whole or any part of such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, and the claimant shall not, within twenty days thereafter, pay into the court the amount of the appraised value of such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, so condemned, with the costs, the bond shall be put in suit. And when any prosecution shall be commenced on account of the seizure of any ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, and judgment shall be given for the claimant or claimants; if it shall appear to the court before whom such prosecution shall be tried, that there was a reasonable cause of seizure, the same court shall cause a proper certificate or entry to be made thereof, and in such case the claimant shall not be entitled to costs, nor shall the person who made the seizure, or the prosecutor, be liable to action, judgment, or suit, on account of such seizure or prosecution: Provided, That the ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, be, after judgment, forthwith returned to such claimant or claimants, his or their agents: And, provided, That no action or prosecution shall be maintained in any case under this act, unless the same shall have been commenced within three years next after the penalty or forfeiture was incurred.

Acts of Congress.

Sec. 37. And be it further enacted, That all ships, vessels, goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall be condemned by virtue of this act, shall be sold by the proper officer of the court in which such condemnation shall be had, to the highest bidder at public auction, by order of such court, and at such place as the court may appoint, giving at least fifteen days notice (except in case of perishable goods) in one or more of the public newspapers of the place where such sale shall be, or if no paper is published in such place, in one or more of the papers published in the nearest place thereto.

Sec. 38. And be it further enacted, That all penalties, fines, and forfeitures, recovered by virtue of this act (and not otherwise appropriated) shall, after deducting all proper costs and charges, be disposed of as follows: One moiety shall be for the use of the United States, and paid into the Treasury thereof; the other moiety shall be divided into three equal parts, and paid to the collector, naval officer, and surveyor, of the district wherein the same shall have been incurred: and in such districts where only two of the said officers shall have been established, the said moiety shall be equally divided between them; and in such districts where only one of the said officers shall have been established, the said moiety shall be given to such officer: Provided, That in all cases where such penalties, fines, and forfeitures, shall be recovered in pursuance of information given to such collector, by any person other than the said naval officer and surveyor, the one half of such moiety shall be given to the informer, and the remainder thereof shall be disposed of between the collector, naval officer, and surveyor, in manner and form as above limited and expressed.

And, whereas, The States of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, and North Carolina, have not as yet ratified the present Constitution of the United States, by reason whereof this act doth not extend to the collecting of duties within either of the said two States, and it is thereby become necessary that the following provision, with respect to goods, wares, or merchandise, imported from either of the said two States, should, for the present, take place:

Sec. 39. Be it therefore further enacted, That all goods, wares, and merchandise, not of their own growth or manufacture, which shall be imported from either of the said two States of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, or North Carolina, into any other port or place within the limits of the United States, as settled by the late treaty of peace, shall be subject to the like duties, seizures, and forfeitures, as goods, wares, or merchandise, imported from any State or country without the said limits.

Sec. 40. And be it further enacted, That no goods, wares, or merchandise, of foreign growth or manufacture, subject to the payment of duties, shall be brought into the United States in other manner than by sea, nor in any ship or vessel less than thirty tons burden, except within the district of Louisville, and except also in such vessels as are now actually on their voyages, nor shall be landed or unladen at any other place than is by this act directed, under the penalty of seizure and forfeiture of all such vessels, goods, wares, or merchandise, brought in, landed or unladen in any other manner. And all goods, wares, and merchandise, brought into the United States by land, contrary to this act, shall be forfeited, together with the carriages, horses, and oxen, that shall be employed in conveying the same.

Approved, July 31, 1789.

An Act for settling the accounts between the United States and individual States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is empowered to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint such person or persons as he may think proper for supplying any vacancy that now is, or may hereafter take place in the Board of Commissioners, established by an ordinance of the late Congress, of the seventh of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, to carry into effect the said ordinance and resolutions of Congress for the settlement of accounts between the United States and individual States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said Board of Commissioners be, and they hereby are, empowered to appoint a chief clerk and such other clerks as the duties of their office may require; and that the pay of the said chief clerk be six hundred dollars per annum, and of each other clerk four hundred dollars per annum.

Approved, August 5, 1789.

An Act to establish an Executive Department, to be denominated the Department of War.

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be an executive department, to be denominated the Department of War; and that there shall be a principal officer therein to be called the Secretary for the Department of War, who shall perform and execute such duties as shall from time to time be enjoined on, or entrusted to him by the President of the United States, agreeably to the Constitution, relative to military commissions, or to the land or naval forces, ships, or warlike stores of the United States, or to such other matters respecting military or naval affairs, as the President of the United States shall assign to the said Department, or relative to the granting of lands to persons entitled thereto, for military services rendered to the United States, or relative to Indian affairs. And, furthermore, that the said principal officer shall conduct the business of the said Department in such manner as the President of the United States shall from time to time order or instruct.

Acts of Congress.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be in the said Department an inferior officer, to be appointed by the said principal officer, to be employed therein as he shall deem proper, and to be called the chief clerk in the Department of War, and who, whenever the said principal officer shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacancy, shall, during such vacancy, have the charge and custody of all records, books, and papers, appertaining to the said Department.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said principal officer, and every other person to be appointed or employed in the said Department shall, before he enters on the execution of his office or employment, take an oath or affirmation well and faithfully to execute the trust committed to him.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary for the Department of War, to be appointed in consequence of this act, shall forthwith, after his appointment, be entitled to have the custody and charge of all records, books, and papers, in the office of Secretary for the Department of War, heretofore established by the United States in Congress assembled.

Approved, August 7, 1789.

An Act to provide for the government of the Territory northwest of the river Ohio.

Whereas, in order that the ordinance of the United States in Congress assembled, for the government of the Territory northwest of the river Ohio may continue to have full effect, it is requisite that certain provisions should be made so as to adapt the same to the present Constitution of the United States:

Be it enacted, &c., That in all cases in which, by the said ordinance, any information is to be given, or communication made by the Governor of the said Territory to the United States in Congress assembled, or to any of their officers, it shall be the duty of the said Governor to give such information, and to make such communication to the President of the United States; and the President shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint all officers which by the said ordinance were to have been appointed by the United States in Congress assembled, and all officers so appointed shall be commissioned by him; and in all cases where the United States in Congress assembled might, by the said ordinance, revoke any commission, or remove from any office, the President is hereby declared to have the same powers of revocation and removal.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the Governor of the said Territory, the Secretary thereof shall be, and he is hereby authorized and required to execute all the powers and perform all the duties of the Governor, during the vacancy occasioned by the removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the said Governor.

Approved, August 7, 1789.

An Act for the establishment and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers.

Be it enacted, &c., That all expenses which shall accrue from and after the fifteenth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, in the necessary support, maintenance, and repairs of all light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, erected, placed, or sunk, before the passing of this act, at the entrance of, or within, any bay, inlet, harbor, or port of the United States, for rendering the navigation thereof easy and safe, shall be defrayed out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, nevertheless, That none of the said expenses shall continue to be so defrayed by the United States after the expiration of one year from the day aforesaid, unless such light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, shall in the meantime be ceded to and vested in the United States, by the State or States respectively in which the same may be together with the land and tenements thereunto belonging, and together with the jurisdiction of the same.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That a light-house shall be erected near the entrance of the Chesapeake bay, at such place, when ceded to the United States in manner aforesaid, as the President of the United States shall direct.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to provide by contracts, which shall be approved by the President of the United States, for building a light-house near the entrance of Chesapeake bay, and for rebuilding when necessary, and keeping in good repair, the light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, in the several States, and for furnishing the same with all necessary supplies; and also to agree for the salaries, wages, or hire of the person or persons appointed by the President for the superintendence and care of the same.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all pilots in the bays, inlets, rivers, harbors, and ports of the United States, shall continue to be regulated in conformity with the existing laws of the States respectively wherein such pilots may be, or with such laws as the States may respectively hereafter enact for the purpose, until further legislative provision shall be made by Congress.

Approved, August 7, 1789.

An Act providing for the expenses which may attend negotiations or treaties with the Indian tribes, and the appointment of commissioners for managing the same.

Be it enacted, &c. That a sum not exceeding twenty thousand dollars, arising from the duties on imports and tonnage, shall be and the same is hereby appropriated to defraying the expense of negotiating and treating with the Indian tribes.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That each of the commissioners who may be appointed for managing such negotiations and treaties, shall be entitled to an allowance, exclusive of his expenses at the place of treaty, of eight dollars per day, during his actual service, to be paid out of the money so appropriated.

Approved, August 20, 1789.

An act for registering and clearing vessels, regulating the coasting trade, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c. That any ship or vessel built within the United States, and belonging wholly to a citizen or citizens thereof, or not built within the said States, but, on the sixteenth day of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, belonging, and thereafter continuing to belong, wholly to a citizen or citizens thereof, and of which the master is a citizen of the United States, and no other, may be registered in manner hereinafter provided, and being so registered, shall be deemed and taken to be, and denominated, a ship or vessel of the United States, and entitled to the benefits granted by any law of the United States to ships or vessels of the descriptions aforesaid.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the person or persons claiming property in any such ship or vessel, in order to entitle her to the benefits aforesaid, shall cause the same to be registered, and shall obtain a certificate of such registry from the collector of the district to which such ship or vessel belongs, in manner hereinafter directed, which certificate, attested by the Secretary of the Treasury, under his hand and seal, and countersigned by the collector, shall be in the form following, viz:

"In pursuance of an act of the Congress of the United States of America, entitled 'An act for registering and clearing vessels, regulating the coasting trade, and for other purposes,' [here insert the name, occupation, and residence of the subscribing owner] having taken and subscribed the oath or affirmation required by the said act, and having sworn or affirmed that he, together with [names, occupation, and residence of non-subscribing owners] is [or are] sole owner [or owners] of the ship [or vessel] called the [ship's name] of [place to which the ship or vessel belongs] whereof [master's name] is at present master, and is a citizen of the United States, and that the said ship [or vessel] was [when and where built] and [name of surveying officer] having certified to us that the said ship or vessel has [number of decks] and ——— masts, that her length is ———, her breadth ———, her depth ———, and that she measures ——— tons; that she is [here describe the vessel and how built] has ——— gallery and ——— head. And that the said subscribing owners having consented and agreed to the above description and measurement, and having caused sufficient security to be given, as is required by the said act, the said [kind of vessel and name] has been duly registered at the port of ———. Given under our hand and seals of office, at [port] this ——— day of ———, in the year [words at full length.] And the collector shall transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury a duplicate of every such certificate so granted. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the collectors of the several ports of the United States a sufficient number of certificates, attested under his hand and seal, leaving the blanks to be filled up by the collectors respectively.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That, to ascertain the tonnage of all ships or vessels, the surveyor or other person appointed by the collector to measure the same, shall take the length of every vessel, if double-decked, from the fore part of the main stem to the after part of the stern post above the upper deck, the breadth at the broadest part above the main wales, and half such breadth shall be accounted the depth of every double-decked vessel; he shall then deduct from the length three-fifths of the breadth, multiply the remainder by the breadth, and the product by the depth, dividing the product of the whole by ninety-five, the quotient shall be deemed the true contents or tonnage of such ship or vessel. To ascertain the tonnage of every single-decked vessel, he shall take the length and breadth, as is directed to be taken for double-decked vessels, and deduct three-fifths, in like manner, and the depth from the under side of the deck-plank to the ceiling in the hold, and shall multiply and divide as aforesaid, and the quotient shall be deemed the true contents or tonnage of such single-decked vessel.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the port to which any such ship or vessel shall be deemed to belong, agreeably to the intent and meaning of this act, shall be the port at or near which the husband, or acting and managing owner or owners of such ship or vessel usually resides or reside; and the name of such ship or vessel, and of the place to which she belongs, shall be painted on her stern on a black ground, with white letters of not less than three inches in length.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That no ship or vessel owned in whole or in part by any citizen of the United States, usually residing in any foreign country, shall, during the time he shall continue so to reside, be deemed a vessel of the United States, entitled to be registered by virtue of this act, unless he be an agent for, and partner in, some house or copartnership, consisting of citizens of the United States actually carrying on trade in the said States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That no registry shall be made, or certificate granted, until the following oath or affirmation be taken and subscribed before the officer hereinbefore authorized to make such registry and grant such certificate, (which oath or affirmation such officer is hereby empowered to administer,) by the owner of such ship or vessel, if owned by one person only, or in case there shall be two or more owners, then by any one of such owners, namely:

"I, ———, [place of residence and occupation] do swear or affirm, that the ship or vessel of ——— [take the description from the certificate of the surveyor or other person authorized by this act] was built at ———, in the year ——— or was the entire property of ——— on the sixteenth day of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, and hath continued to be the property of a citizen or citizens of the United States; that ———, the present master, is a citizen of the United States, and that I, ———, and [the other owners' names, occupation, and where they respectively reside, viz: town, place, county, and State, or if resident in a foreign country, being an agent for, and partner in, any house or copartnership] am, or are, sole owner or owners of the said ship or vessel, and that no other person whatever hath any property therein; and that I, the said ———, [and the said owners, if any] am, or are, truly a citizen of the United States, and that no foreigner, directly or indirectly, hath any part or interest in the said ship or vessel."

Sec. 7. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That whenever the owner or owners of such ship or vessel usually resides or reside out of the district within which such ship or vessel may be at the time of granting the certificate of registry, that such owner, or where there are two or more owners, any one of them may take and subscribe the said oath or affirmation, before the collector of the district within which he usually resides, omitting in the said oath or affirmation the description of such ship or vessel as expressed in the certificate of the surveyor, and inserting in lieu thereof the name of the port and district within which such ship or vessel may then be; and the collector before whom such oath or affirmation may be taken and subscribed, shall transmit the same to the collector of the district where such ship or vessel may be, upon the receipt whereof the said collector shall proceed to register such ship or vessel in like manner as though the usual and regular oath or affirmation had been taken and subscribed before him.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the surveyor or other person to be appointed in pursuance of this act, shall, previous to the registering or granting of any certificate of registry, as aforesaid, examine and measure such ship or vessel, as to all and every particular contained in the form of the certificate aforesaid, in the presence of the master, or of any other person to be appointed for that purpose on the part of the owner or owners, and shall deliver a just and true account in writing of the build, description, and measurement of every such ship or vessel, as are specified in the form of the certificate above recited, to the person authorized as aforesaid to make such registry and grant such certificate thereof; and the said master or other person attending on the part of the owner or owners, is hereby required to sign his name also to the certificate of the surveying or examining officer or other person duly appointed, in testimony of the truth thereof, provided such master or other person shall agree to the several particulars therein set forth and described.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That when the certificate of registry aforesaid shall be granted, sufficient security, by bond, shall be given to the collector in behalf of the United States, by the master and owner or owners, or by some other person or persons, on his, her, or their behalf, such security to be approved of by the collector, in the penalties following: that is to say, if such ship or vessel shall be above the burden of fifteen, and not exceeding fifty tons, in the penalty of four hundred dollars; if exceeding the burden of fifty tons, and not exceeding one hundred tons, in the penalty of eight hundred dollars; if exceeding the burden of one hundred tons, and not exceeding two hundred tons, in the penalty of twelve hundred dollars; if exceeding the burden of two hundred tons, and not exceeding three hundred tons, in the penalty of sixteen hundred dollars; and if exceeding the burden of three hundred tons, in the penalty of twenty thousand dollars. And the condition of every such bond shall be, that such certificate shall not be sold, lent, or otherwise disposed of, to any person or persons whomsoever, and that the same shall be solely used for the ship or vessel to which it is granted; and that in case such ship or vessel shall be lost or taken by an enemy, burnt, or broken up, or otherwise prevented from returning to the port to which she belongs, the certificate, if preserved, shall be delivered up within three months after the arrival of the master in any port or place in the United States, to the collector of the district where he shall arrive; and that if any foreigner, or any person or persons for his use and benefit, shall purchase or otherwise become entitled to the whole or any part or share of, or interest in, such ship or vessel, and the same shall be within any district of the United States, in such case the certificate of registry shall, within seven days after such purchase or transfer of property in such ship or vessel, be delivered up to the collector of the said district; and in case such ship or vessel shall be in any foreign port or place, or at sea, when such transfer of interest or property shall take place, the said master shall, within eight days after his arrival in any port or place within the United States, deliver up the said certificate to the collector of the district where he shall arrive; and all the certificates so delivered up, shall be forthwith transmitted by the collector, to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be cancelled.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That whenever any ship or vessel, registered in conformity with this act, shall, in whole or in part, be sold or transferred to a citizen or citizens of the United States, the former certificate of registry shall be delivered up to the collector, and by him, without delay, transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be cancelled; and such ship or vesbel shall be registered anew by her former name, and a certificate thereof shall be granted by the collector in like manner as is herein before directed.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That whenever any such ship or vessel shall in whole or in part, be sold or transferred to any person or persons, the certificate of the registry of every such ship or vessel shall be recited at length in the instrument of transfer or sale thereof, and in default thereof such instrument of sale or transfer shall be void, and that such ship or vessel shall not be deemed or denominated a ship or vessel entitled to any of the benefits or advantages of a ship or vessel of the United States.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That whenever the master or other person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel, registered in the manner hereinbefore directed, shall be changed, the master or owner of such ship or vessel shall deliver to the collector of the district where such change shall take place, the certificate of registry of such ship or vessel, who shall thereon endorse and subscribe a memorandum of such change, and forthwith give notice of the same to the collector of the district where such ship or vessel was last registered pursuant to this act, who shall likewise make a memorandum of the same in the book of registers, and transmit a copy thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That if the certificate of registry of any ship or vessel shall be lost or destroyed, the master or other person having charge of the said ship or vessel, may make oath or affirmation before the collector of the district where such ship or vessel may arrive, who is hereby authorized to administer the same in the words and form following:

"I, _____, being master, or having charge of the ship or vessel called the _____, do swear or affirm, that the said ship or vessel hath been, as I verily believe, registered according to law by the name of _____, and that a certificate thereof was granted at the port _____, but that the same is lost or destroyed, (as the case may be,) and that the same if found again, and comes again within my power, shall be delivered up to the collector of the port where it was granted; and that the master of said ship or vessel is a citizen of the United States, and that the said ship or vessel, as I believe, the entire property of a citizen or citizens of the United States, and that no foreigner has, to my knowledge and belief, any property or interest therein;" and the said oath or affirmation shall be filed in the office of the said collector before whom it was made, who is hereby required to register the said vessel anew, by her former name, and take the security in manner hereinbefore directed, and deliver the certificate of such registry to the owner or owners, if residing within his district, or, if not resident therein, to the master or other person having charge of said ship or vessel, that such certificate of registry is granted in pursuance of this act, instead of a former certificate of registry, which appears by such proof as this act requires to be lost; and such certificate of registry shall have the same effect with the original, and the said collector shall, within three months, transmit a duplicate of the said certificate to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be registered in his office, who shall notify the collector who granted the certificate which was lost or destroyed, of the same, who is hereby required to cause a memorandum thereof to be made in his book of registers.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That if any ship or vessel, after having been registered in pursuance of this act, shall, in any manner whatever, be altered in form or burden, by being lengthened or built upon, or from one denomination to another, by the mode or method of rigging or fitting, in such case such vessel shall be registered anew, by her former name, in manner hereinbefore directed, as soon as she returns to the port to which she belongs, or to any other port in which she may be lawfully registered by virtue of this act; otherwise such ship or vessel shall not be deemed and considered as a ship or vessel of the United States.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the collector of every district where registers shall be made and certificates granted in pursuance of this act, shall progressively number the same as they shall be severally granted, beginning at the time when this act shall be in force, and continuing to the end of the present year, and thenceforth beginning at the commencement of every year, and shall enter an exact copy of every such certificate, with the number thereof, in a book to be kept for that purpose; and shall, within three months, transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury a true copy, together with the number of every certificate which shall be by him so granted.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That every ship or vessel built in the United States after the fifteenth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, and belonging wholly or in part to the subjects of foreign Powers shall be recorded in the office of the collector of the district in which such ship or vessel was built, in manner following, that is to say: The builder of every such ship or vessel shall make oath or affirmation before the collector of such district, who is hereby authorized to administer such oath in manner following:

"I, _____, of [here insert the place of residence, county, and State] shipwright, do swear or affirm, that [here designate the kind of vessel] named _____, having [number of decks] and being in length _____, in breadth _____, and measuring _____ tons, having _____ galley and _____ head, was built by me, or under my direction, at [place, county, and State] in the United States, in the year _____, which oath or affirmation shall be recorded in the manner hereinbefore directed, in a book to be kept for that purpose.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That a certificate of the said record, attested under the hand and seal of the collector of the district as aforesaid, shall be granted to the master of every such ship or vessel in manner following: "In pursuance of an act entitled 'An act _____ I, _____ collector of the district of _____ in the United States, do certify, that the builder [name] of [place of residence, county, and State] having sworn or affirmed that the ship or vessel [here designate the kind of vessel] named _____, whereof _____ is at present master, was built at [place, county, and State, where built] by him or under his direction, in the year _____, and [here insert the name of the surveyor, or other person appointed by the collector, where there is no surveyor] having certified that the said ship or vessel has [number of decks] in length _____, in breadth _____, in depth _____, and measures _____ tons; and the said builder and master having agreed to the said description and measurement, the said ship or vessel has been recorded in the district of _____, in the United States. Witness my hand and seal this _____ day of _____, in the year _____," which certificate shall be recorded in the office of the collector, and a duplicate thereof transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to be recorded in his office.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That the surveyor or other person to be appointed by the collector as aforesaid, is hereby required to deliver a true account in writing, signed with his name, of the build, description, and measurement, of every such ship or vessel, as specified in the form of the said certificate of record, of such ships or vessels, which account shall also be signed by the master, to the collector of the district where such certificate of the record shall be granted.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That if the master or the name of any ship or vessel so recorded shall be changed, the owner, part owner, or consignee, of such ship or vessel, shall cause a memorandum thereof to be endorsed on the certificate of the record by the collector of the district where such ship or vessel may be, or at which she shall arrive, if such change took place in a foreign country, and a copy thereof shall be entered in the book of records, a transcript whereof shall be transmitted by the collector to the collector of the district where such certificate was granted, who shall enter the same in his book of records, and forward a duplicate of such entry to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States; and in such case, until the said owner, part owner, or consignee, shall cause the said memorandum to be made by the collector in manner aforesaid, such ship or vessel shall not be deemed or considered as a vessel recorded in pursuance of this act.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That the master or other person having command of any ship or vessel recorded in pursuance of this act, shall, on entry of such ship or vessel, produce the certificate of such record to the collector of the district, in failure of which the said ship or vessel shall not be entitled to the privileges of a vessel recorded as aforesaid.

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That all the penalties and forfeitures inflicted and incurred by this act, shall and may be sued for, prosecuted, and recovered, in such courts, and be disposed of in such manner as any penalties or forfeitures inflicted, or which may be incurred, for any offence committed against the United States, in and by an act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States," may be sued for, prosecuted, recovered, and disposed of.

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the tenth day of September next, every ship or vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, built within the United States, and wholly owned by a citizen or citizens thereof; or not built within the United States, and on the sixteenth day of May, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, wholly owned, and thereafter continuing to be owned, by a citizen or citizens of the United States, but not registered, if detained from district to district, or to the bank or wharf fisheries, shall, in order to be entitled to all the privileges of a ship or vessel belonging to the United States, employed in the coasting trade or in the fisheries, be enrolled by the collector of the district where the owner or one of the owners of such vessel may reside, and every vessel so enrolled shall have her name and the name of the place to which she belongs painted on her stern, in manner directed by this act for registered vessels, and such collector, on due proof, by oath or affirmation, to him made, by the owner or one of the owners of such ship or vessel, of her name, burden, and denomination, and that she is of the description aforesaid, and of the names of the owner or owners, and of the master thereof, and that they are citizens of the United States, and of the place or places of residence of such owner or owners, shall enrol, in a book to be kept for that purpose, the name of every such vessel, her burden, where built, and denomination, the name or names, and place or places of residence of the owner or owners thereof, and that he or they, together with the master, are citizens of the United States; a description of the build of such vessel as aforesaid, and the date of the enrolment, and shall also grant to the owner or owners a certificate containing a copy of such enrolment, and transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury a copy of every such certificate of enrolment, to be by him recorded. And whenever the property of such ship or vessel shall be changed, in whole or in part, the person or persons who shall then be owner or owners, or one of them, shall make known such change to the collector of the district where he or they may reside, and such collector is hereby authorized and directed to grant a new certificate of the enrolment of such ship or vessel, by her former name, to such owner or owners, upon his or their delivering up the former certificate, which shall be sent to the office of the collector from whence it was issued, to be cancelled: Provided, That the master or owner of every vessel of less than twenty tons burden, and not less than five tons, which shall be employed between any of the districts in the United States, shall cause the name of such vessel and of the place to which she belongs, to be painted on her stern, in manner directed by this act for registered vessels, and shall annually procure a license from the collector of the district to which such vessel belongs, who is hereby authorized to give the same, purporting that such vessel is exempt from clearing and entering for the term of one year from the date thereof; and the master or owner of every such vessel shall give bond, with sufficient security, for the payment of two hundred dollars to the United States, with condition that such vessels shall not be employed in any illicit trade or commerce; and before any new license shall be given for a succeeding year to the master of such vessel, he shall, on oath or affirmation, declare that no illicit trade has been carried on in such vessel, to his knowledge or belief, during the time for which she was licensed.

Acts of Congress.

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That the master, commander, or owner, of every ship or vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, to be employed in trade between different districts in the United States, and of every vessel to be employed in the bank or whale fisheries, having a certificate of registry or enrolment as herein directed, shall, upon application to the collector of the district where such vessel may lie, be entitled to receive a license to trade between the different districts in the United States, or to carry on the bank or whale fishery for one year, and it shall be the duty of the collector to grant the same; but no license shall be granted for any vessel until the owner or owners applying therefor shall have paid the tonnage duty thereon, and shall enter into bond, with sufficient security, for the payment of one thousand dollars to the United States, with condition that such vessel shall not, within the time for which such license was granted, be employed in any illicit trade or commerce. And if any vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards not having a certificate of registry or enrolment and a license, shall be found trading between different districts, or be employed in the bank or whale fisheries, every such ship or vessel shall be subject to the same tonnage and fees as foreign ships or vessels.

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That the master or commander of every ship or vessel bound to any foreign port, shall deliver to the collector of the district where such ship or vessel may be, a manifest of the cargo on board such ship or vessel, and on making oath or affirmation to the truth thereof, it shall be the duty of the said collector to grant a clearance for such ship or vessel and her loading; and if any ship or vessel, bound to any foreign port, shall depart from the place of her loading without such clearance, the master, commander, consignee, or owner thereof, shall forfeit and pay the sum of two hundred dollars for every such offence.

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That the master of every ship or vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, licensed to trade between the different districts of the United States, having on board goods, wares, or merchandise, of foreign growth or manufacture, of the value of two hundred dollars, or rum or other ardent spirits, exceeding four hundred gallons, and being bound from one district to another, shall deliver to the collector, and where the collector and surveyor reside at different places within the same district, to the collector or surveyor, as the one or the other may reside at or nearest to the port where such ship or vessel may be, duplicate manifests of the whole cargo on board such ship or vessel, specifying therein the name and place of residence of every shipper and consignee, together with the quantity of goods, wares, or merchandise, shipped by and to each. And upon the oath or affirmation of the said master, before the said collector or surveyor, to the truth of such manifest, it shall be the duty of such collector or surveyor to return to the said master one of the said manifests, first certifying thereon that the same had been sworn or affirmed to and delivered to him according to law; and also to grant to the said master a permit, authorizing such ship or vessel to proceed to the place of her destination.

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That the master of every ship or vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, licensed to trade as aforesaid, not having on board rum or other ardent spirits, exceeding four hundred gallons, and arriving from one district to another in the same State, or from a district in one State to a district in the next adjoining State, with goods, wares, or merchandise, of the growth or manufacture of the United States only, shall, within twenty-four hours, place or port where a collector or surveyor resides, and before any part of the cargo on board such ship or vessel be landed or unloaded, deliver to such collector or surveyor a manifest thereof, and shall make oath or affirmation, before such collector or surveyor, that such manifest contains a true account of all the goods, wares, and merchandise, on board such ship or vessel, and thereupon shall receive from such collector or surveyor a permit to land or unload the same.

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That in all other cases the master of every vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, licensed to trade as aforesaid, shall, within twenty-four hours (Sundays excepted) next after his arrival at any port or place within the United States, where a collector or surveyor resides, and before any part of the cargo on board any such ship or vessel be landed or unloaded, deliver to such collector or surveyor the manifest thereof, authenticated before, and received from, the collector or surveyor of the port or place where the said cargo was taken on board, together with his permit to depart from the place of lading, whereupon it shall be the duty of such collector or surveyor to grant a permit to land or unload such cargo.

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That if the master of any ship or vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, licensed to trade as aforesaid, and having on board goods, wares, or merchandise, of the value of two hundred dollars or upwards, shall depart with the said ship or vessel from any port, with intent to go to another district, without such manifest and permit, except as is hereinafter provided, the master or owner of ing State, shall deliver to the collector, or where the collector and surveyor reside at different places within the same district, to the collector or surveyor, as the one or the other may reside at or nearest to the port where such ship or vessel may be, duplicate manifests of the whole cargo on board such ship or vessel, specifying therein the name and place of residence of every shipper and consignee, together with the quantity of goods, wares, or merchandise, shipped by and to each. And upon the oath or affirmation of the said master, before the said collector or surveyor, to the truth of such manifest, it shall be the duty of such collector or surveyor to return to the said master one of the said manifests, first certifying thereon that the same had been sworn or affirmed to and delivered to him according to law; and also to grant to the said master a permit, authorizing such ship or vessel to proceed to the place of her destination.

Acts of Congress.

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That the master of every ship or vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, licensed to trade as aforesaid, not having on board rum or other ardent spirits, exceeding four hundred gallons, and arriving from one district to another in the same State, or from a district in one State to a district in the next adjoining State, with goods, wares, or merchandise, of the growth or manufacture of the United States only, shall, within twenty-four hours, place or port where a collector or surveyor resides, and before any part of the cargo on board such ship or vessel be landed or unloaded, deliver to such collector or surveyor a manifest thereof, and shall make oath or affirmation, before such collector or surveyor, that such manifest contains a true account of all the goods, wares, and merchandise, on board such ship or vessel, and thereupon shall receive from such collector or surveyor a permit to land or unload the same.

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That in all other cases the master of every vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, licensed to trade as aforesaid, shall, within twenty-four hours (Sundays excepted) next after his arrival at any port or place within the United States, where a collector or surveyor resides, and before any part of the cargo on board any such ship or vessel be landed or unloaded, deliver to such collector or surveyor the manifest thereof, authenticated before, and received from, the collector or surveyor of the port or place where the said cargo was taken on board, together with his permit to depart from the place of lading, whereupon it shall be the duty of such collector or surveyor to grant a permit to land or unload such cargo.

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That if the master of any ship or vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, licensed to trade as aforesaid, and having on board goods, wares, or merchandise, of the value of two hundred dollars or upwards, shall depart with the said ship or vessel from any port, with intent to go to another district, without such manifest and permit, except as is hereinafter provided, the master or owner of such ship or vessel shall forfeit and pay the sum of four hundred dollars for every such offence; and all goods, wares, and merchandise, of the value of two hundred dollars or upwards, which shall be found on board any such ship or vessel, after her departure from the port where the same were taken on board, without being contained in, accompanied with such manifest as is hereinbefore directed, except as is hereinafter excepted, shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture.

Provided always, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to subject the master or owner of any ship or vessel licensed to trade as aforesaid, having on board goods, wares, and merchandise, of the growth and manufacture of the United States only, rum and other ardent spirits, exceeding four hundred gallons, excepted, and bound from district to district in the same State, or from a district in one State to a district in the next adjoining State, to any penalty for having departed from the port of loading without such permit and manifest, or to subject the said goods on board such ship or vessel to seizure or forfeiture, in case they are not accompanied with a manifest as aforesaid.

SEC. 30. And be it further enacted, That if any ship or vessel having a license to trade or fish for one year, shall, within that time, be destined to any foreign port, the master or commander of every such ship or vessel shall, before he departs from the United States, deliver such license to the collector of the port from whence he intends to depart; and it shall be the duty of such collector forthwith to transmit the license, to him so delivered, to the collector of the district where the same was granted, who shall thereupon cancel every license; and if any master or commander shall neglect or refuse to deliver up such license before he depart from the United States, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred dollars for every such neglect or refusal.

SEC. 31. And be it further enacted, That the fees and allowances for the several duties to be performed in virtue of this act, and the distribution of the same, shall be as follows, to wit:

For the first register or certificate of record granted for every ship or vessel, there shall be paid to the collector granting the same, the sum of two dollars;

For every subsequent one, one dollar and fifty cents;

For every certificate of enrolment, fifty cents; For every license to trade between the different districts of the United States, or to carry on the bank or whale fishery for one year, fifty cents;

For every entry of inward cargo directed to be made in conformity with this act, and for receiving of, and qualifying to, every manifest of vessels licensed to trade as aforesaid, sixty cents;

For a permit to land goods of foreign growth or manufacture, twenty cents;

For every permit to proceed to the place of destination, twenty-five cents;

And for taking every bond required by this act, twenty cents.

The whole amount of which fees shall be accounted for by the collector; and where there is a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall be equally divided between the said officers; and where there is no naval officer, between the collector and surveyor; and where there is only a collector, he shall receive the whole amount thereof; and where there is more than one surveyor in any district, each of them shall receive his proportionable part of such fees as shall arise in the port for which he is appointed: Provided, always, That in all cases where the tonnage of any ship or vessel shall be ascertained by any person specially appointed for that purpose, as is hereinbefore directed, that such person shall be allowed and paid by the collector a reasonable compensation for the same, out of the fees aforesaid, before any distribution thereof as aforesaid.

Sec. 32. And be it further enacted, That in every case where the collector is, by this act, directed to grant any license, certificate, permit, or other document, the naval officer, if there be one residing at the port, shall sign the same.

Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, That in every case where a forfeiture of any ship or vessel, or of any goods, wares, or merchandise, shall accrue, it shall be the duty of the collector or other proper officer, who shall give notice of the sale of such ship or vessel, or of such goods, wares, or merchandise, to insert, in the same advertisement, the name or names, and the place or places of residence, of the person or persons to whom any such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, belonged or were consigned at the time of such service.

Sec. 34. And be it further enacted, That every collector who shall knowingly make any false registry, record, or enrolment, of any ship or vessel; and every officer or person appointed as is herein provided, who shall make any false record, or grant any false certificate, or any document whatever, in any manner that shall not be herein prescribed, or that shall be contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, or shall take any other or greater fees than are by this act allowed, or receive any other reward or gratuity, contrary to the provisions of this act; and every surveyor or other person appointed to measure ships or vessels, who shall wilfully deliver to any collector or naval officer a false description of any ship or vessel to be registered, recorded, or enrolled, in pursuance of this act, shall, upon conviction of any such neglect or offence, forfeit the sum of one thousand dollars, and be rendered incapable of serving in any office of trust or profit under the United States; and if any person or persons, authorized and required by this act, in respect of his or their office or offices, to perform any act or thing required to be done or performed, pursuant to any of the provisions of this act, and wilfully neglecting or refusing to do or perform the same, according to the true intent and meaning of this act, shall, on being duly convicted thereof, if not subject to the penalty and disqualification aforesaid, forfeit the sum of five hundred dollars for the first offence, and a like sum for the second offence, and shall, from thenceforward, be rendered inca-port and give information to either branch of the Legislature, in person or in writing, (as he may be required,) respecting all matters referred to him by the Senate or House of Representatives, or which shall appertain to his office; and generally to perform all such services relative to the finances as he shall be directed to perform.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Comptroller to superintend the adjustment and preservation of the public accounts; to examine all accounts settled by the Auditor, and certify the balances arising thereon to the Register; to countersign all warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury which shall be warranted by law; to report to the Secretary the official forms of all papers to be issued in the different offices for collecting the public revenue, and the manner and form of keeping and stating the accounts of the several persons employed therein. He shall moreover provide for the regular and punctual payment of all moneys which may be collected, and shall direct prosecutions for all delinquencies of officers of the revenue, and for debts that are or shall be due to the United States.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive and keep the moneys of the United States, and to disburse the same upon warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury, countersigned by the Comptroller, recorded by the Register, and not otherwise. He shall take receipts for all moneys paid by him, and all receipts for moneys received by him shall be endorsed upon warrants signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, without which warrant so signed, no acknowledgment for money received into the public Treasury shall be valid. And the said Treasurer shall render his accounts to the Comptroller quarterly, (or oftener if required,) and shall transmit a copy thereof, when settled, to the Secretary of the Treasury. He shall, moreover, on the third day of every session of Congress, lay before the Senate and House of Representatives fair and accurate copies of all accounts by him from time to time rendered to, and settled with the Comptroller as aforesaid, as also a true and perfect account of the state of the Treasury. He shall at all times submit to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Comptroller, or either of them, the inspection of the moneys in his hands; and shall, prior to the entering upon the duties of his office, give bond, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller, in the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars payable to the United States, with condition for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, and for the fidelity of the persons to be by him employed, which bond shall be lodged in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Auditor to receive all public accounts, and after examination to certify the balance, and transmit the accounts with the vouchers and certificate to the Comptroller for his decision thereon: Provided, That if any person whose account shall be so audited, be dissatisfied therewith, he may within six months appeal to the Comptroller against such settlement.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Register to keep all accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the public money, and of all debts due to or from the United States; to receive from the Comptroller the accounts which shall have been finally adjusted, and to preserve such accounts with their vouchers and certificates; to record all warrants for the receipt or payment of moneys at the Treasury, certify the same thereon, and to transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury copies of the certificates of balances of accounts adjusted as is herein directed.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That whenever the Secretary shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacancy in the office of Secretary, the assistant shall, during the vacancy, have the charge and custody of the records, books, and papers, appertaining to the said office.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That no person appointed to any office instituted by this act, shall directly or indirectly be concerned or interested in carrying on the business of trade or commerce, or be owner in whole or in part of any sea vessel, or purchase by himself, or another in trust for him, any public lands or other public property, or be concerned in the purchase or disposal of any public securities of any State, or of the United States, or take or apply to his own use any emolument or gain for negotiating or transacting any business in the said department, other than what shall be allowed by law; and if any person shall offend against any of the prohibitions of this act, he shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and forfeit to the United States the penalty of three thousand dollars, and shall upon conviction be removed from office, and for ever thereafter be incapable of holding any office under the United States. Provided, That if any other person than a public prosecutor shall give information of any such offence, upon which a prosecution and conviction shall be had, one half the aforesaid penalty of three thousand dollars, when recovered, shall be for the use of the person giving such information.

Approved, September 2, 1789.

An act for establishing the salaries of the Executive Officers of Government, with their assistants and clerks.

Be it enacted, &c. That there shall be allowed to the officers hereinafter mentioned, the following annual salaries, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States: to the Secretary of the Treasury, three thousand five hundred dollars; to the Secretary in the Department of State, three thousand five hundred dollars; to the Secretary of the Department of War, three thousand dollars; to the Comptroller of the Treasury, two thousand dollars; to the Auditor, fifteen hundred dollars; to the Treasurer, two thousand dollars; to the Register, twelve hundred and fifty dollars; to the Governor of the Western Territory, for his salary as such, and for discharging the duties of Superintendent of Indian Affairs in the Northern Department, two thousand dollars; to the three judges of the Western Territory, each eight hundred dollars; to the assistant of the Secretary of the Treasury, fifteen hundred dollars; to the chief clerk in the Department of State, eight hundred dollars; to the chief clerk in the Department of War, six hundred dollars; to the Secretary of the Western Territory, seven hundred and fifty dollars; to the principal clerk of the Comptroller, eight hundred dollars; to the principal clerk of the Auditor, six hundred dollars; to the principal clerk of the Treasury, six hundred dollars.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the heads of the three departments first above mentioned shall appoint such clerks therein respectively as they shall find necessary; and the salary of the said clerks respectively shall not exceed the rate of five hundred dollars per annum.

Approved, September 11, 1789.

An Act to provide for the safe-keeping of the acts, records, and seal of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Executive Department of Foreign Affairs shall hereafter be denominated the Department of State, and the principal officer therein shall hereafter be called the Secretary of State.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever a bill, order, resolution, or vote of the Senate and House of Representatives, having been approved and signed by the President of the United States, or not having been returned by him with his objections, shall become a law, or take effect, it shall forthwith thereafter be received by the said Secretary from the President; and whenever a bill, order, resolution, or vote shall be returned by the President with his objections, and shall on being reconsidered, be agreed to be passed, and be approved by two-thirds of both Houses of Congress, and thereby become a law or take effect, it shall, in such case, be received by the said Secretary from the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, in whichsoever House it shall last have been so approved; and the said Secretary shall, as soon as conveniently may be, after he shall receive the same, cause every such law, order, resolution, and public newspapers printed within the United States, and shall also cause one printed copy to be delivered to each Senator and Representative of the United States, and two printed copies duly authenticated to be sent to the executive authority of each State; and he shall carefully preserve the originals, and shall cause the same to be recorded in books to be provided for the purpose.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the seal heretofore used by the United States in Congress assembled, shall be and hereby is declared to be the seal of the United States.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said Secretary shall keep the said seal, and shall make out and record, and shall affix the said seal to all civil commissions, to officers of the United States to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the President alone: Provided, That the said seal shall not be affixed to any commission before the same shall have been signed by the President of the United States, nor to any other instrument or act without the special warrant of the President therefor.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the said Secretary shall cause a seal of office to be made for the said department, of such device as the President of the United States shall approve, and all copies of records and papers in the said office, authenticated under the said seal, shall be evidence equally as the original record or paper.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid to the Secretary, for the use of the United States, the following fees of office by the persons requiring the services to be performed, except when they are performed for any officer of the United States, in a matter relating to the duties of his office, to wit: for making out and authenticating copies of records, ten cents for each sheet, containing one hundred words; for authenticating a copy of a record or paper under the seal of office, twenty-five cents.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the said Secretary shall forthwith, after his appointment, be entitled to have the custody and charge of the said seal of the United States, and also of all books, records, and papers remaining in the office of the late Secretary of the United States in Congress assembled; and such of the said books, records, and papers as may appertain to the Treasury Department, or War Department, shall be delivered over to the principal officers in the said departments respectively, as the President of the United States shall direct.

Approved, September 15, 1789.

An Act to suspend part of an act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States," and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, as obliges ships or vessels bound up the river Potomac, to come to and deposite manifests of their cargoes with the officers at Saint Mary's and Yeocomico, before they proceed to their port of delivery, shall be and is hereby suspended until the first day of May next.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That all the privileges and advantages to which ships and vessels owned by citizens of the United States are by law entitled, shall be, until the fifteenth day of January next, extended to ships and vessels wholly owned by citizens of the States of North Carolina and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations: Provided, That the master of every such ship or vessel last mentioned shall produce a register for the same, conformable to the laws of the State in which it shall have been obtained, showing that the said ship or vessel is, and before the first day of September instant, was owned as aforesaid, and make oath or affirmation before the collector of the port in which the benefit of this act is claimed, that the ship or vessel for which such register is produced is the same therein mentioned, and that he believes it is still wholly owned by the person or persons named in said register, and that he or they are citizens of one of the States aforesaid.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all rum, loaf sugar, and chocolate, manufactured or made in the States of North Carolina or Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, and imported or brought into the United States, shall be deemed and taken to be subject to the like duties as goods of the like kinds imported from any foreign State, kingdom, or country, are made subject to.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That Rehoboth, in the State of Massachusetts, shall be a port of entry and delivery, until the fifteenth day of January next, and that a collector be appointed for the same.

Approved, September 16, 1789.

An Act for the temporary establishment of the Post Office.

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be appointed a Postmaster General; his powers and salary, and the compensation to the assistant or clerk and deputies which he may appoint, and the regulations of the Post Office shall be the same as they last were under the resolutions and ordinances of the late Congress. The Postmaster General to be subject to the direction of the President of the United States in performing the duties of his office, and in forming contracts for the transportation of the mail.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, September 22, 1789.

An Act for allowing compensation to the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the officers of both Houses.

Be it enacted, &c., That at every session of Congress, and at every meeting of the Senate in the recess of Congress prior to the fourth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, each Senator shall be entitled to receive six dollars for every day he shall attend the Senate, and shall also be allowed at the commencement and end of every such session and meeting, six dollars for every twenty miles of the estimated distance by the most usual road from his place of residence to the seat of Congress; and in case any member of the Senate shall be detained by sickness, on his journey to or from any such session or meeting, or, after his arrival, shall be unable to attend the Senate, he shall be entitled to the same daily allowance: Provided, That no Senator shall be allowed a sum exceeding the rate of six dollars a day from the end of one such session or meeting to the time of his taking a seat in another.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That at every session of Congress, and at every meeting of the Senate in the recess of Congress after the aforesaid fourth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, each Senator shall be entitled to receive seven dollars for every day he shall attend the Senate; and shall also be allowed at the commencement and end of every such session and meeting, seven dollars for every twenty miles of the estimated distance, by the most usual road, from his place of residence to the seat of Congress; and in case any member of the Senate shall be detained by sickness on his journey to or from any such session or meeting, or after his arrival shall be unable to attend the Senate, he shall be entitled to the same allowance of seven dollars a day: Provided, That no Senator shall be allowed a sum exceeding the rate of seven dollars a day from the end of one such session or meeting to the time of his taking his seat in another.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That at every session of Congress each representative shall be entitled to receive six dollars for every day he shall attend the House of Representatives; and shall also be allowed, at the commencement and end of every session, six dollars for every twenty miles of the estimated distance, by the most usual road, from his place of residence to the seat of Congress; and in case any representative shall be detained by sickness on his journey to or from the session of Congress, or, after his arrival, shall be unable to attend the House of Representatives, he shall be entitled to the daily allowance aforesaid; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to defray the incidental expenses of his office, shall be entitled to receive, in addition to his compensation as a representative, six dollars for every day he shall attend the House. Provided always, That no representative shall be allowed a sum exceeding the rate of six dollars a day from the end of one such session or meeting to the time of his taking a seat in another.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed to each chaplain of Congress at the rate of five hundred dollars per annum, during the session of Congress; to the Secretary of the Senate and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives fifteen hundred dollars per annum each, to commence from the time of their respective appointments; and also a further allowance of two dollars a day to each during the session of that branch for which he officiates; and the said Secretary and Clerk shall each be allowed (when the President of the Senate or Speaker shall deem it necessary) to employ one principal clerk, who shall be paid three dollars per day, and an engrossing clerk, who shall be paid two dollars per day, during the session, with the like compensation to such clerk while he shall be necessarily employed in the recess.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the following compensation shall be allowed to the officers hereinafter mentioned, viz: to the sergeant-at-arms during the session, and while employed on the business of the House, four dollars per day; the allowance of the present sergeant-at-arms to commence from the time of his appointment; to the doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives for their services in those offices three dollars per day, during the session of the House to which he may belong, for his own services and for the hire of necessary laborers; the allowance to the present doorkeeper of the Senate to commence from the day appointed for the meeting of Congress; and the allowance to the doorkeeper of the House of Representatives to commence from his appointment; and to the assistant doorkeeper to each House two dollars per day during the sessions.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the said compensation which shall be due to the members and officers of the Senate shall be certified by the President; and that which shall be due to the members and officers of the House of Representatives shall be certified by the Speaker; and the same shall be passed as public accounts, and paid out of the public Treasury.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force until the fourth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-six, and no longer.

Approved, September 22, 1789.

An Act for allowing certain compensation to the Judges of the Supreme and other Courts, and to the Attorney General of the United States.

Be it enacted &c., That there shall be allowed to the Judges of the Supreme and other Courts of the United States the yearly compensation hereinafter mentioned, to wit: to the Chief Justice four thousand dollars; to each of the Justices of the Supreme Court, three thousand five hundred dollars; to the Judge of the district of Maine, one thousand dollars; to the Judge of the district of New Hampshire, one thousand dollars; to the Judge of the district of Massachusetts, twelve hundred dollars; to the Judge of the district of Connecticut, one thousand dollars; to the Judge of the district of New York, fifteen hundred dollars; to the Judge of the district of New Jersey, one thousand dollars; to the Judge of the district of Pennsylvania, sixteen hundred dollars; to the Judge of the district of Delaware, eight hundred dollars; to the Judge of the district of Maryland, fifteen hundred dollars; to the Judge of the district of Virginia, eighteen hundred dollars; to the Judge of the district of Kentucky, one thousand dollars; to the Judge of the district of South Carolina, eighteen hundred dollars; to the Judge of the district of Georgia, fifteen hundred dollars; and to the Attorney General of the United States, fifteen hundred dollars; which compensations shall commence from their respective appointments, and be paid at the Treasury of the United States in quarterly payments.

Approved, September 23, 1789.

An act for allowing a compensation to the President and Vice President of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be allowed to the President of the United States, at the rate of twenty-five thousand dollars, with the use of the furniture and other effects now in his possession belonging to the United States; and to the Vice President, at the rate of five thousand dollars per annum, in full compensation for their respective services, to commence with the time of their entering on the duties of their offices respectively, and to continue so long as they shall remain in office, and to be paid quarterly out of the Treasury of the United States.

Approved, September 24, 1789.

An Act to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of a Chief Justice and five associate justices, any four of whom shall be a quorum, and shall hold annually at the seat of Government two sessions, the one commencing the first Monday of February, and the other the first Monday of August. That the associate justices shall have precedence according to the date of their commissions, or when the commissions of two or more of them bear date on the same day, according to their respective ages.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the United States shall be, and they hereby are, divided into thirteen districts, to be limited and called as follows, to wit: one to consist of that part of the State of Massachusetts which lies easterly of the State of New Hampshire, and to be called the Maine District; one to consist of the State of New Hampshire, and to be called New Hampshire District; one to consist of the remaining part of the State of Massachusetts, and to be called Massachusetts District; one to consist of the State of Connecticut, and to be called Connecticut District; one to consist of the State of New York, and to be called New York District; one to consist of the State of New Jersey, and to be called New Jersey District; one to consist of the State of Pennsylvania, and to be called Pennsylvania District; one to consist of the State of Delaware, and to be called Delaware District; one to consist of the State of Maryland, and to be called Maryland District; one to consist of the State of Virginia, except that part called the District of Kentucky, and to be called Virginia District; one to consist of the remaining part of the State of Virginia, and to be called Kentucky District; one to consist of the State of South Carolina, and to be called South Carolina District; and one to consist of the State of Georgia, and to be called Georgia District.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be a court called a District Court in each of the aforementioned districts, to consist of one judge, who shall reside in the district for which he is appointed, and shall be called a District Judge, and shall hold annually four sessions, the first of which to commence as follows, to wit: in the districts of New York and New Jersey on the first, in the district of Pennsylvania on the second, in the district of Connecticut on the third, and in the district of Delaware on the fourth Tuesdays of November next; in the districts of Massachusetts, of Maine, and of Maryland on the first, in the district of Georgia on the second, and in the districts of New Hampshire, of Virginia, and of Kentucky on the third Tuesdays of December next; and the other three sessions progressively in the respective districts on the like Tuesdays of every third calendar month afterwards; and in the district of South Carolina on the third Monday in March and September, the first Monday in July, and the second Monday in December of each and every year, commencing in December next, and that the district judge shall have power to hold special courts at his discretion. That the stated district court shall be held at the places following, to wit: in the district of Maine, at Portland and Pownalsborough alternately, beginning at the first; in the district of New Hampshire, at Exeter and Portsmouth alternately, beginning at the first; in the district of Massachusetts, at Boston and Salem alternately, beginning at the first; in the district of Connecticut, at Hartford and New Haven, beginning at the first; in the district of New York, alternately at New Brunswick and Burlington, beginning at the first; in the district of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia and Yorktown alternately, beginning at the first; in the district of Delaware, alternately at Newcastle and Dover, beginning at the first; in the district of Maryland, at Baltimore and Easton, beginning at the first; in the district of Virginia, alternately at Richmond and Williamsburg, beginning at the first; in the district of Kentucky, at Harrodsburgh; in the district of South Carolina, at Charleston; and in the district of Georgia, alternately at Savannah and Augusta, beginning at the first; and that the special courts shall be held at the same place in each district as the stated courts; or in districts that have two, at either of them in the discretion of the judge, or at such other place in the district as the nature of the business and his discretion shall direct. And that in the districts that have but one place for holding the district court, the records thereof shall be kept at that place; and in districts which have two at that place in each district which the judge shall appoint.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the beforementioned districts, except those of Maine and Kentucky, shall be divided into three circuits, and be called the eastern, the middle, and the southern circuit. That the eastern circuit shall consist of the districts of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New York; that the middle circuit shall consist of the districts of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia; and that the southern circuit shall consist of the districts of South Carolina and Georgia; and that there shall be held annually in each district of said circuits two courts which shall be called circuit courts, and shall consist of any two justices of the Supreme Court and the district judge of such districts. Provided, That no district judge shall give a vote in any case of appeal or error from his own decision; but may assign the reasons of such his decision.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the first session of the said circuit court in the several districts shall commence at the times following, to wit: in New Jersey on the second, in New York on the fourth, in Pennsylvania on the eleventh, in Connecticut on the twenty-second, and in Delaware on the twenty-seventh day of April next; in Massachusetts on the third, in Maryland on the seventh, in South Carolina on the twelfth, in New Hampshire on the twentieth, in Virginia on the twenty-second, and in Georgia on the twenty-eighth day of May next, and the subsequent sessions in the respective districts on the like day of every sixth calendar month afterwards, except in South Carolina, where the session of the said court shall commence on the first, and in Georgia where it shall commence on the seventh day of October, and except when any of those days shall happen on a Sunday, and then the session shall commence on the next day following. And the sessions of the said circuit court shall be held in the district of New Hampshire, at Portsmouth and Exeter alternately, beginning at the first; in the district of Massachusetts, at Boston; in the district of Connecticut, alternately at Hartford and New Haven, beginning at the last; in the district of New York, alternately at New York and Albany, beginning at the first; in the district of New Jersey, at Trenton; in the district of Pennsylvania, alternately at Philadelphia and Yorktown, beginning at the first; in the district of Delaware, alternately at Newcastle and Dover, beginning at the first; in the district of Maryland, alternately at Annapolis and Easton, beginning at the first; in the district of Virginia, alternately at Charlottesville and Williamsburgh, beginning at the first; in the district of South Carolina, alternately at Columbia and Charleston, beginning at the first; and in the district of Georgia, alternately at Savannah and Augusta, beginning at the first. And the circuit courts shall have power to hold special sessions for the trial of criminal causes at any other time at their discretion, or at the direction of the Supreme Court.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Supreme Court may, by any one or more of its justices being present, be adjourned from day to day until a quorum be convened; and that a circuit court may also be adjourned from day to day by any one of its judges, or if none are present, by the marshal of the district until a quorum be convened; and that a district court, in case of the inability of the judge to attend at the commencement of a session, may, by virtue of a written order from the said judge, directed to the marshal of the district, be adjourned by the said marshal to such a day antecedent to the next stated session of the said court, as in the said order shall be appointed, and in case of the death of the said judge, and his vacancy not being supplied, all process, pleadings, and proceedings of what nature soever, pending before the said court, shall be continued of course until the next stated session after the appointment and acceptance of the office by his successor.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Supreme Court and the district courts shall have power to appoint clerks for their respective courts, and that the clerk for each district court shall be clerk also of the circuit court in such district, and each of the said clerks shall, before he enters upon the execution of his office, take the following oath or affirmation, to wit: "I, A. B., being appointed clerk of _____ do solemnly swear or affirm, that I will truly and faithfully enter and record all the orders, decrees, judgments, and proceedings of the said court, and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties of my said office, according to the best of my abilities and understanding. So help me God." Which words, "so help me God," shall be omitted in all cases where an affirmation is admitted instead of an oath. And the said clerks shall also severally give bond with sufficient sureties (to be approved of by the Supreme and District Courts respectively) to the United States, in the sum of two thousand dollars, faithfully to discharge the duties of his office, and seasonably to record the decrees, judgments, and determinations of the court of which he is clerk.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the justices of the Supreme Court and the district judges, before they proceed to execute the duties of their respective offices, shall take the following oath or affirmation, to wit: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear or affirm, that I will administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich; and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as _____, according to the best of my abilities and understanding, agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the United States. So help me God."

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the district courts shall have, exclusively of the courts of the several States, cognizance of all crimes and offences that shall be cognizable under the authority of the United States, committed within their respective districts, or upon the high seas; where no other punishment than whipping, not exceeding thirty stripes, a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months, is to be inflicted; and shall also have exclusive original cognizance of all civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, including all seizures under laws of impost, navigation, or trade of the United States, where the seizures are made on waters which are navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden, within their respective districts as well as upon the high seas; saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it; and shall also have exclusive original cognizance of all seizures on land, or other waters than as aforesaid made, and of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under the laws of the United States. And shall also have cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, or the circuit courts, as the case may be, of all causes where an alien sues for a tort only in violation of the law of nations or a treaty of the United States. And shall also have cognizance, concurrent as last mentioned, of all suits at common law where the United States sue, and the matter in dispute amounts, exclusive of costs, to the sum or value of one hundred dollars. And shall also have jurisdiction exclusively of the courts of the several States, of all suits against consuls or vice-consuls, except for offences above the description aforesaid. And the trial of issues in fact, in the district courts, in all cases except civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, shall be by jury.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the district court of Kentucky shall, besides the jurisdiction aforesaid, have jurisdiction of all other causes, except of appeals and writs of error, hereinafter made cognizable in a circuit court, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court, and writs of error and appeals shall lie from decisions therein to the Supreme Court in the same causes, as from a circuit court to the Supreme Court, and under the same regulations. And the district court in Maine district shall, besides the jurisdiction hereinbefore granted, have jurisdiction of all causes, except in cases of appeals and writs of error hereinafter made cognizable in a circuit court, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court; and writs of error shall lie from decisions therein to the circuit court in the district of Massachusetts in the same manner as from other district courts to their respective circuit courts.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the circuit courts shall have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of costs, the sum or value of five hundred dollars, and the United States are plaintiffs or petitioners; or an alien is a party, or the suit is between a citizen of the State where the suit is brought and a citizen of another State. And shall have exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offences cognizable under the authority of the United States, except where this act otherwise provides, or the laws of the United States shall otherwise direct, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the crimes and offences cognizable therein. But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another, in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against an inhabitant of the United States by any original process in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving the writ, nor shall any district or circuit court have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment had been made, except in cases of foreign bills of exchange. And the circuit courts shall also have appellate jurisdiction from the district courts under the regulations and restrictions hereinafter provided.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That if a suit be commenced in any State court against an alien, or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought against a citizen of another State, and the matter in dispute exceeds the aforesaid sum or value of five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, to be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court, and the defendant shall, at the time of entering his appearance in such State court, file a petition for the removal of the cause for trial into the next circuit court, to be held in the district where the suit is pending, or if in the district of Maine, to the district court next to be holden therein, or if in Kentucky district, to the district court next to be holden therein, and offer good and sufficient surety for his entering in such court on the first day of its session copies of said process against him, and also for his there appearing and entering special bail in the cause, if special bail was originally requisite therein, it shall then be the duty of the State court to accept the surety, and proceed no further in the cause, and any bail that may have been originally taken shall be discharged, and the said copies being entered as aforesaid, in such court of the United States, the cause shall there proceed in the same manner as if it had been brought there by original process. And any attachment of the goods or estate of the defendant by the original process shall hold the goods or estate so attached, to answer the final judgment in the same manner as by the laws of such State they would have been holden to answer final judgment, had it been rendered by the court in which the suit commenced. And if in any action commenced in a State court, the title of land be concerned, and the parties are citizens of the same State, and the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, the sum or value being made to appear to the satisfaction of the court, either party, before the trial, shall state to the court and make affidavit, if they require it, that he claims and shall rely upon a right or title to the land, under a grant from a State, other than that in which the suit is pending, and produce the original grant or an exemplification of it, except where the loss of public records shall put it out of his power, and shall move that the adverse party inform the court, whether he claims a right or title to the land under a grant from the State in which the suit is pending; the said adverse party shall give such information, or otherwise not to be allowed to plead such grant, or give it in evidence upon the trial, and if he informs that he does claim under such grant, the party claiming under the grant first mentioned, may then, on motion, remove the cause for trial to the next circuit court to be holden in such district, or if in the district of Maine, to the court next to be holden therein; or if in Kentucky district, to the district court next to be holden therein; but if he is the defendant, shall do it under the same regulations as in the beforementioned case of the removal of a cause into such court by an alien; and neither party removing the cause, shall be allowed to plead or give evidence of any other title than that by him stated as aforesaid, as the ground of his claim. And the trial of issues in fact in the circuit courts shall, in all suits, except those of equity, and of admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction, be by jury.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the Supreme Court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies of a civil nature, where a State is a party, except between a State and its citizens; and except also between a State and citizens of other States, or aliens, in which latter case it shall have original but not exclusive jurisdiction. And shall have exclusively all such jurisdiction of suits or proceedings against ambassadors or other public ministers, or their domestic servants, as a court of law can have or exercise consistently with the law of nations; and original, but not exclusive jurisdiction of all suits brought by ambassadors or other public ministers, or in which a consul or vice-consul shall be a party. And the trial of issues in fact in the Supreme Court in all actions at law against citizens of the United States shall be by jury. The Supreme Court shall also have appellate jurisdiction from the circuit courts and courts of the several States in the cases hereinafter specially provided for; and shall have power to issue writs of prohibition to the district courts, when proceeding as courts of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and writs of mandamus, in cases warranted by the principle and usages of law, to any courts appointed, or persons holding office under the authority of the United States.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That all the before-mentioned courts of the United States shall have power to issue writs of scire facias, habeas corpus, and all other writs not specially provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, and agreeable to the principles and usages of law. And that either of the justices of the Supreme Court, as well as judges of the district courts, shall have power to grant writs of habeas corpus for the purpose of an inquiry into the cause of commitment. Provided, That writs of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to prisoners in gaol, unless where they are in custody, under or by color of the authority of the United States, or are committed for trial before some court of the same, or are necessary to be brought into court to testify.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That all the said courts of the United States shall have power in the trial of actions at law, on motion and due notice thereof being given, to require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession or power, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, in cases and under circumstances where they might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery; and if a plaintiff shall fail to comply with such order, to produce books or writings, it shall be lawful for the defendant to motion, to give the like judgment for the defendant as in cases of non-suit; and if a defendant shall fail to comply with such order, to produce books or writings, it shall be lawful for the courts respectively, on motion as aforesaid, to give judgment against him or her by default.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That suits in equity shall not be sustained in either of the courts of the United States, in any case where plain, adequate, and complete remedy may be had at law.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That all the said courts of the United States shall have power to grant new trials, in cases where there has been a trial by jury, for reasons for which new trials have usually been granted in the courts of law; and shall have power to impose and administer all necessary oaths or affirmations, and to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of said courts, all contempt of authority in any cause or hearing before the same; and to make and establish all necessary rules for the orderly conducting business in the said courts, provided such rules are not repugnant to the laws of the United States.

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That when in a circuit court, judgment upon a verdict in a civil action shall be entered, execution may, on motion of either party, at the discretion of the court, and on such conditions for the security of the adverse party as they may judge proper, be stayed forty-two days from the time of entering judgment, to give time to file in the clerk's office of said court, a petition for a new trial. And if such petition be there filed within said term of forty-two days, with a certificate thereon from either of the judges of such court, that he allows the same to be filed, which certificate he may make or refuse at his discretion, execution shall of course be further stayed to the next session of said court. And if a new trial be granted the former judgment shall be thereby rendered void.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of circuit courts, in causes in equity and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, to cause the facts on which they found their sentence or decree, fully to appear upon the record, either from the pleadings and decree itself, or a state of the case agreed by the parties, or their counsel, or if they disagree, by a stating of the case by the court.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That where in a circuit court a plaintiff in an action originally brought there, or a petitioner in equity, other than the United States, recovers less than the sum or value of five hundred dollars, or a libellant, upon his own appeal, less than the sum or value of three hundred dollars, he shall not be allowed, but at the discretion of the court may be adjudged to pay costs.

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That from final decrees in a district court in causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of three hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, an appeal shall be allowed to the next circuit court, to be held in such district. Provided, nevertheless, That all such appeals from final decrees as aforesaid from the district court of Maine shall be made to the circuit court, next to be holden after each appeal in the district of Massachusetts.

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That final decrees and judgments in civil actions in a district court, where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of fifty dollars, exclusive of costs, may be re-examined, and reversed or affirmed in a circuit court, holden in the same district, upon a writ of error, whereto shall be annexed and returned therewith at the day and place therein mentioned, an authenticated transcript of the record, and assignment of errors, and prayer for reversal, with a citation to the adverse party, signed by the judge of such district court, or a justice of the Supreme Court, the adverse party having at least twenty days' notice. And upon a like process may final judgments and decrees in civil actions, and suits in equity in a circuit court, brought there by original process, or removed there from by appeal from a district court where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of two thousand dollars, exclusive of costs, be re-examined, and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court, the citation being in such case signed by a judge of such circuit court, or justice of the Supreme Court, and the adverse party having at least thirty days' notice. But there shall be no reversal in either court on such writ of error for error in ruling any plea in abatement, other than a plea to a petition or bill in equity, as in the nature of a demurrer, or for any error in fact. And writs of error shall not be brought but within five years after rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or in case the person entitled to such writ of error be an infant, feme covert, non compos mentis, or imprisoned, then within five years as aforesaid, exclusive of the time of such disability. And every justice or judge signing a citation on any writ of error as aforesaid, shall take good and sufficient security that the plaintiff in error shall prosecute his writ to effect, and answer all damages and costs if he fail to make his plea good.

Sec. 23. And be it further enacted, That a writ of error as aforesaid shall be a supersedeas and stay execution in cases only where the writ of error is served, by a copy thereof being lodged for the adverse party in the clerk's office where the record remains, within ten days, Sundays exclusive, after rendering the judgment or passing the decree complained of. Until the expiration of which term of ten days, executions shall not issue in any case where a writ of error may be a supersedeas; and whereupon such writ of error the Supreme or a circuit court shall affirm a judgment or decree, they shall adjudge or decree to the respondent in error just damages for his delay, and single or double costs at their discretion.

Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That when a judgment or decree shall be reversed in a circuit court, such court shall proceed to render such judgment or pass such decree as the district court shall have rendered or passed, and the Supreme Court shall do the same on reversals therein, except where the reversal is in favor of the plaintiff or petitioner in the original suit, and the damage to be assessed, or matter to be decreed, are uncertain, in which case they shall remand the cause for a final decision. And the Supreme Court shall not issue execution in causes that are remanded before them by writs of error, but shall send a special mandate to the circuit court to award execution thereupon.

Sec. 25. And be it further enacted, That a final judgment or decree in any suit, in the highest court of law or equity of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under, any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and where is drawn in question the construction of any clause of the Constitution, or of a treaty, or statute of, or commission held under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or exemption, specially set up or claimed by either party, under such clause of the said Constitution, treaty, statute, or commission, may be re-examined, and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States upon a writ of error, the citation being signed by the chief justice, or judge or chancellor of the court rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or by a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations, and the writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a circuit court, and the proceedings upon the reversal shall also be the same, except that the Supreme Court, instead of remanding the cause for a final decision as before provided, may, at their discretion, if the cause shall have been once remanded before, proceed to a final decision of the same, and award execution. But no other error shall be assigned or regarded as a ground of reversal in any such case as aforesaid, than such as appears on the face of the record, and immediately respects the before-mentioned questions of validity or construction of the said Constitution, treaties, statutes, commissions, or authorities in dispute.

Sec. 26. And be it further enacted, That in all causes brought before either of the courts of the United States to recover the forfeiture annexed to any articles of agreement, covenant, bond, or other specialty, where the forfeiture, breach, or non-performance, shall appear by the default or confession of the defendant, or upon demurrer, the court before whom the action is, shall render judgment therein for the plaintiff to recover so much as is due according to equity. And when the sum for which judgment should be rendered is uncertain, the same shall, if either of the parties request it, be assessed by a jury.

Sec. 27. And be it further enacted, That a marshal shall be appointed in and for each district for the term of four years, but shall be removable from office at pleasure, whose duty it shall be to attend the district and circuit courts when sitting therein, and also the Supreme Court in the district in which that court shall sit. And to execute throughout the district all lawful precepts directed to him, and issued under the authority of the United States; and he shall have power to command all necessary assistance in the execution of his duty, and to appoint, as there shall be occasion, one or more deputies, who shall be removable from office by the judge of the district court, or the circuit court sitting within the district, at the pleasure of either; and before he enters on the duties of his office he shall become bound for the faithful performance of the same, by himself and by his deputies, before the judge of the district court, to the United States, jointly and severally with two good and sufficient sureties, inhabitants and freeholders of such district, to be approved by the district judge, in the sum of twenty thousand dollars, and shall take before said judge, as shall also his deputies, before they enter on the duties of their appointment, the following oath of office:

"I, A. B., do solemnly swear, or affirm, that I will faithfully execute all lawful precepts directed to the marshal of the district of — under the authority of the United States, and true returns make, and in all things well and truly, and without malice or partiality, perform the duties of the office of marshal (or marshal's deputy, as the case may be) of the district of — during my continuance in the said office, and take only my lawful fees. So help me God."

Sec. 28. And be it further enacted, That in all causes wherein the marshal or his deputy shall be a party, the writs and precepts therein shall be directed to such disinterested person as the court, or any justice or judge thereof, may appoint, and the person so appointed is hereby authorized to execute and return the same. And in case of the death of any marshal, his deputy or deputies shall continue in office, unless otherwise specially removed, and shall execute the same in the name of the deceased, until another marshal shall be appointed and sworn; and the defaults or misfeasances in office of such deputy or deputies in the mean time, as well as before, shall be adjudged a breach of the condition of the bond given, as before directed by the marshal who appointed them; and the executor or administrator of the deceased marshal shall have like remedy for the defaults and misfeasances in office of such deputy or deputies during such interval, as they would be entitled to if the marshal had continued in life and in the exercise of his said office, until his successor was appointed, and sworn or affirmed: and every marshal or his deputy when removed from office, or when the term for which the marshal is appointed shall expire, shall have power notwithstanding to execute all such precepts as may be in their hands respectively at the time of such removal or expiration of office; and the marshal shall be held answerable for the delivery to his successor of all prisoners that may be in his custody at the time of his removal, or when the term for which he is appointed shall expire, and for that purpose may retain such prisoners in his custody until his successor shall be appointed and qualified as the law directs.

Sec. 29. And be it further enacted, That, in cases punishable with death, the trial shall be had in the county where the offence was committed, or where that cannot be done without great inconvenience, twelve petit jurors at least shall be summoned from thence. And jurors in all cases to serve in the courts of the United States shall be designated by lot or otherwise in each State respectively according to the mode of forming juries therein now practised, so far as the laws of the same shall render such designation practicable by the courts or marshals of the United States; and the jurors shall have the same qualifications as are requisite for jurors by the laws of the State of which they are citizens, to serve in the highest courts of law in such State, and shall be returned as there shall be occasion for them, from such parts of the district from time to time as the court shall direct, so as shall be most favorable to an impartial trial, and so as not to incur an unnecessary expense, or unduly to burden the citizens of any part of the district with such services. And writs of venue facias when directed by the court shall issue from the clerk's office, and shall be served and returned by the marshal in his proper person or by his deputy, or in case the marshal or his deputy is not an indifferent person, or is interested in the event of the cause, by such fit person as the court shall specially appoint for that purpose, to whom they shall administer an oath or affirmation, that he will truly and impartially serve and return such writ. And when from challenges, or otherwise, there shall not be a jury to determine any civil or criminal cause, the marshal or his deputy, shall, by order of the court where such defect of jurors shall happen, return jurymen de talibus circumstantibus sufficient to complete the panel; and when the marshal or his deputy is qualified as aforesaid, jurors may be returned by such disinterested person as the court shall appoint.

Sec. 30. And be it further enacted, That the mode of proof by oral testimony and examination of witnesses in open court shall be the same in all the courts of the United States, as well in the trial of causes in equity and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, as of actions at common law. And when the testimony of any person shall be necessary in any civil cause depending in any district in any court of the United States, who shall live at a greater distance from the place of trial than one hundred miles, or is bound on a voyage to sea, or is about to go out of the United States, or out of such district, and to a greater distance from the place of trial than as aforesaid, before the time of trial, or is ancient or very infirm, the deposition of such person may be taken de bene esse before any justice or judge of any of the courts of the United States, or before any chancellor, justice or judge of a Supreme or Superior Court, mayor or chief magistrate of a city, or judge of a county court or court of common pleas of any of the United States, not being of counsel or attorney to either of the parties, or interested in the event of the cause, provided that a notification from the magistrate before whom the deposition is to be taken to the adverse party, to be present at the taking of the same, and to put interrogatories, if he think fit, be first made out and served on the adverse party or his attorney as either may be nearest, if either is within one hundred miles of the place of such caption, allowing time for their attendance after notified, not less than at the rate of one day, Sundays exclusive, for every twenty miles travel. And in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, or other cases of seizure when a libel shall be filed, in which an adverse party is not named, and depositions of persons circumstanced as aforesaid shall be taken before a claim be put in, the like notification as aforesaid shall be given to the person having the agency or possession of the property libelled at the time of the capture or seizure of the same, if known to the libellant. And every person deposing as aforesaid shall be carefully examined and cautioned, and sworn or affirmed to testify the whole truth, and shall subscribe the testimony by him or her given after the same shall be reduced to writing, which shall be done only by the magistrate taking the deposition, or by the deponent in his presence. And the depositions so taken shall be retained by such magistrate until he deliver the same with his own hand into the court for which they are taken, or shall, together with a certificate of the reasons as aforesaid of their being taken, and of the notice, if any given, to the adverse party, be by him the said magistrate sealed up and directed to such court, and remain under his seal until opened in court. And any person may be compelled to appear and depose as aforesaid in the same manner as to appear and testify in court. And in the trial of any cause of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction in a district court, the decree in which may be appealed from, if either party shall suggest to and satisfy the court that probably it will not be in his power to produce the witnesses there testifying before the circuit court should an appeal be had, and shall move that their testimony be taken down in writing, it shall be so done by the clerk of the court.

And if an appeal be had, such testimony may be used on the trial of the same, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court which shall try the appeal, that the witnesses are then dead or gone out of the United States, or to a greater distance than as aforesaid from the place where the court is sitting, or that by reason of age, sickness, bodily infirmity, or imprisonment, they are unable to travel and appear in court, but not otherwise. And unless the same shall be made to appear on the trial of any cause, with respect to witnesses whose depositions may have been taken therein, such depositions shall not be admitted or used in the cause. Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent any court of the United States from granting a dedimus potestatem, to take depositions according to common usage, when it may be necessary to prevent a failure or delay of justice; which power they shall severally possess, not to extend to depositions taken perpetuam rei memoriam, which, if they relate to matters that may be cognizable in any court of the United States, a circuit court on application thereto made, as a court of equity may, according to the usages in chancery, direct to be taken.

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That where any suit shall be depending in any court of the United States, and either of the parties shall die before the final judgment, the executor or administrator of such deceased party who was plaintiff, petitioner, or defendant, in case the cause of action doth by law survive, shall have full power to prosecute or defend any such suit or action until final judgment; and the defendant or defendants are hereby obliged to answer thereto accordingly; and the court before whom such cause may be depending, is hereby empowered and directed to hear and determine the same, and to render judgment for or against the executor or administrator, as the case may require. And if such executor or administrator having been duly served with a subpoena facias from the office of the clerk of the court where such suit is depending, twenty days beforehand, shall neglect or refuse to become a party to the suit, the court may render judgment against the estate of the deceased party, in the same manner as if the executor or administrator had voluntarily made himself a party to the suit; and the executor or administrator who shall become a party as aforesaid shall, upon motion to the court where the suit is depending, be entitled to a continuance of the same until the next term of the said court. And if there be two or more plaintiffs or defendants, and one or more of them shall die, if the cause of action shall survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, or against the surviving defendant or defendants, the writ or action shall not be thereby abated; but such death being suggested upon the record, the action shall proceed at the suit of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs against the surviving defendant or defendants.

Sec. 32. And be it further enacted, That no summons, writ, declaration, return, process, judgment, or other proceedings in civil causes in any of the courts of the United States, shall be abated, arrested, quashed, or reversed, for any defect, or want of form, but the said courts respectively shall proceed and give judgment according to the right of the cause and matter in law shall appear unto them, without regarding any imperfections, defects, or want of form in such writ, declaration, or other pleading, return, process, judgment, or course of proceeding whatsoever, except those only in cases of demurrer, which the party demurring shall specially set down and express together with his demurrer as the cause thereof. And the said courts respectively shall and may, by virtue of this act, from time to time, amend all and every such imperfections, defects, and wants of form, other than those only which the party demurring shall express as aforesaid, and may at any time permit either of the parties to amend any such conditions as the said courts respectively shall in their discretion and by their rules prescribe.

Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, That for any crime or offence against the United States, the offender may, by any justice or judge of the United States, or by any justice of the peace, or other magistrate of any of the United States where he may be found, agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such State, and at the expense of the United States, be arrested, and imprisoned or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States as by this act has cognizance of the offence: and copies of the process shall be returned as speedily as may be into the clerk's office of such court, together with the recognizances of the witnesses for their appearance to testify in the case; which recognizances the magistrate before whom the examination shall be, may require on pain of imprisonment. And if such commitment of the offender, or the witnesses shall be in a district other than that in which the offence is to be tried, it shall be the duty of the judge of that district where the delinquent is imprisoned, seasonably to issue, and warrant for the removal of the offender, and the witnesses, or either of them, as the case may be, to the district in which the trial is to be had. And upon all arrests in criminal cases bail shall be admitted, except where the punishment may be death, in which cases it shall not be admitted but by the Supreme or circuit court, or by a justice of the Supreme Court or a judge of a district court, who shall exercise their discretion therein, regarding the nature and circumstance of the offence, and of the evidence, and the usages of law. And if a person committed by a justice of the Supreme or a judge of a district court for an offence not punishable with death, shall afterwards procure bail, and there be no judge of the United States in the district to take the same, it may be taken by any judge of the Supreme or superior court of law of such State.

Sec. 34. And be it further enacted, That the laws of the several States, except where the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States shall otherwise require or provide, shall be regarded ed as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States in cases where they apply.

Sec. 35. And be it further enacted, That in all the courts of the United States the parties may plead and manage their own causes personally, or by the assistance of such counsel or attorneys at law as by the rules of the said courts respectively shall be permitted to manage and conduct causes therein. And there shall be appointed in each district a meet person learned in the law to act as attorney for the United States in such district, who shall be sworn or affirmed to the faithful execution of his office, whose duty it shall be to prosecute in such district all delinquents for crimes and offences, cognizable under the authority of the United States, and all civil actions in which the United States shall be concerned, except before the Supreme Court in the district in which that court shall be holden. And he shall receive as a compensation for his services such fees as shall be taxed therefor in the respective courts before which the suits or prosecutions shall be. And there shall also be appointed a meet person learned in the law to act as attorney general for the United States, who shall be sworn or affirmed to a faithful execution of his office; and whose duty it shall be to prosecute and conduct all suits in the Supreme Court in which the United States shall be concerned, and to give his advice and opinion upon questions of law when required by the President of the United States, or when requested by the heads of any of the departments, touching any matters that may concern their departments, and shall receive such compensation for his services as shall by law be provided.

Approved, September 24, 1789.

An Act to regulate processes in the courts of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That all writs and processes, issuing from a Supreme or circuit court, shall bear teste of the chief justice of the Supreme Court, and if from a district court, shall bear teste of the judge of such court, and shall be under the seal of the court from whence they issue, and signed by the clerk thereof: The seals of the Supreme and circuit courts to be provided by the Supreme Court, and of the district courts, by the respective judges of the same.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That, until further provision shall be made, and except where, by this act, or other statutes of the United States, is otherwise provided, the forms of writs and executions, except their style, and modes of process and rates of fees, except fees to judges in the circuit and district courts, in suits at common law, shall be the same in each State respectively as are now used or allowed in the Supreme Courts of the same. And the forms and modes of proceedings in causes of equity, and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, shall be according to the course of the civil law; and the rates of the fees, the same as are, or were last allowed by the States respectively, in the court exercising supreme jurisdiction in such causes. Provided, That on judgments in any of the cases aforesaid, where different kinds of executions are issuable in succession, a capias ad satisfaciendum being one, the plaintiff shall have his election to take out a capias ad satisfaciendum in the first instance, and be at liberty to pursue the same, until a tender of the debt and costs in gold or silver shall be made.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, September 29, 1789.

An Act to explain and amend an act, entitled "An act for registering and clearing vessels, regulating the coasting trade, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, &c., That when any goods, wares, or merchandise, of foreign growth or manufacture, shall be unladen from any ship or vessel in virtue of a permit, obtained for that purpose, and shall be put into a craft or vessel, with intent to be transported to a landing within the same district, it shall be the duty of the inspector, or other officer attending the unloading of such goods, wares, and merchandise, to deliver to the master or commander of every such craft or vessel a certificate of such goods, wares, and merchandise, having been duly entered, and a permit granted therefor; and such certificate shall contain a description of all the packages, with their marks and numbers, and shall authorize the transporting and landing of the same at any landing within the same district, without any further fee or permit, any thing in the said recited act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That so much of the twenty-second section of the said recited act, as exempts vessels of less than twenty and not less than five tons burden, employed between any of the districts of the United States, in any bay or river, and having a license from the collector of the district to which such vessel belongs, from entering and clearing for the term of one year, be extended to vessels not exceeding fifty tons. Provided, such vessel shall not have on board goods, wares, or merchandise, other than such as are actually the growth or produce of the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That so much of an act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, as hath rated the ruble of Russia at one hundred cents, be, and the same is hereby repealed and made null and void.

Approved, September 29, 1789.

An Act making appropriations for the service of the present year.

Be it enacted, &c., That there be appropriated for the services of the present year, to be paid out of the moneys which arise, either from the requisitions heretofore made upon the several States, or from the duties on imports and tonnage, the following sums, viz: a sum not exceeding two hundred and sixteen thousand dollars for defraying the expenses of the civil list under the late and present Government; a sum not exceeding one hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars for defraying the expenses of the Department of War; a sum not exceeding one hundred and ninety thousand dollars for discharging the warrants issued by the late Board of Treasury, and remaining unsatisfied; and a sum not exceeding ninety-six thousand dollars for paying the pensions to invalids.

Approved, September 29, 1789.

An Act providing for the payment of the invalid pensions of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the military pensions which have been granted and paid by the States respectively, in pursuance of the acts of the United States in Congress assembled, to the invalids who were wounded and disabled during the late war, shall be continued and paid by the United States, from the fourth of March last, for the space of one year, under such regulations as the President of the United States may direct.

Approved, September 29, 1789.

An Act to recognize and adapt to the Constitution of the United States, the establishment of the troops raised under the resolves of the United States, in Congress assembled, and for other purposes therein mentioned.

Be it enacted, &c., That the establishment contained in the resolve of the late Congress, of the third day of October, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, except as to the mode of appointing the officers; and also as is hereinafter provided, be, and the same is hereby recognised to be the establishment for the troops in the service of the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the pay and allowances of the said troops be the same as have been established by the United States in Congress assembled, by their resolution of the twelfth of April, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and privates, who are, or shall be, in the service of the United States, shall take the following oaths or affirmations, to wit: "I, A. B. do solemnly swear or affirm (as the case may be) that I will support the Constitution of the United States." "I, A. B. do solemnly swear or affirm, (as the case may be) to bear true allegiance to the United States of America, and to serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies or opposers whatsoever, and to observe and obey the orders of the President of the United States of America, and the orders of the officers appointed over me."

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said troops shall be governed by the rules and articles of war, which have been established by the United States in Congress assembled, or by such rules and articles of war as may hereafter by law be established.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That, for the purpose of protecting the inhabitants of the frontiers of the United States from the hostile incursions of the Indians, the President is hereby authorized to call into service, from time to time, such part of the militia of the States, respectively, as he may judge necessary for the purpose aforesaid; and that their pay and subsistence, while in service, be the same as the pay and subsistence of the troops above-mentioned.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue, and be in force, until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, September 29, 1789.

An Act to alter the time for the next meeting of Congress.

Be it enacted, &c., That, after the adjournment of the present session, the next meeting of Congress shall be on the first Monday in January next.

Approved, September 29, 1789.

ACTS OF THE SECOND SESSION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS.

An Act for giving effect to the several acts therein mentioned, in respect to the State of North Carolina, and other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That the several and respective duties specified and laid, in and by the act entitled "An act for laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandises imported into the United States; and in and by the act entitled "An act imposing duties on tonnage," shall be paid and collected upon all goods, wares, and merchandises, which, after the expiration of thirty days from the passing of this act, shall be imported into the State of North Carolina from any foreign port or place, and upon the tonnage of all ships and vessels, which after the said day shall be entered within the said State of North Carolina, subject to the exceptions, qualifications, allowances, and abatements, in the said acts contained or expressed; which acts shall be deemed to have the like force and operation within the said State of North Carolina, as elsewhere within the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That, for the due collection of the said duties, there shall be, in the said State of North Carolina, five districts; one to be called the district of Wilmington, and to comprehend all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from Little River Inlet inclusive, to New River Inlet inclusive; another to be called the district of Newbern, and to comprehend all the waters, shores, bays, harbors creeks, and inlets, from New River Inlet exclusive, to Ocracoke Inlet exclusive, together with Pamlico Sound, (except that part of it into which the Pamlico, or Tar, and Machapunga rivers empty themselves, and which lies between the Royal Shoal, extended to Machapunga Bluff, and the shoal which projects from the mouth of Pamlico river towards the Royal Shoal;) and thence to be called the district of Pamlico Sound, and to comprehend all that part of Pamlico Sound excepted out of the district of Newbern, and the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, adjacent to, and communicating with the same; and to comprehend all the waters, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from the channel between Pamlico Sound and Albemarle Sound inclusive: the other to be called the district of Pamlico Sound, and to comprehend North River, Pasquotank, and Little Rivers, and all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from the junction of Currituck and Albemarle Sound to the northern extremity of Back Bay. That in the district of Wilmington, the town of Wilmington shall be a port of entry and delivery; and Swansborough a port of delivery only; and there shall be a collector, naval officer, and a surveyor to reside at the said town of Wilmington, and a surveyor to reside at Swansborough. That in the district of Newbern, the town of Newbern shall be a port of entry and delivery, and the town of Beaufort a port of delivery only; and there shall be a collector to reside at Newbern, and a surveyor to reside at Beaufort. That in the district of Washington, the town of Washington shall be the sole port of entry and delivery, and there shall be a collector to reside at the same. That in the district of Edenton, the town of Edenton shall be a port of entry and delivery; and Hartford, Murfreesborough, Plymouth, Windsor, Skewarkey, Winton, and Bennet's Creek, ports of delivery; and there shall be a collector at the town of Edenton, and a surveyor at Hartford, another surveyor at Murfreesborough, one surveyor at each of the ports of Plymouth, Windsor, Skewarkey, Winton, and Bennet's Creek. That all ships or vessels, intending to proceed to Hartford, Plymouth, Windsor, Skewarkey, Winton, Bennet's Creek, or Murfreesborough, shall first come to and enter at the port of Edenton. That in the district of Cambden, Plankbridge, on Sawyer's Creek, shall be the port of entry and delivery, and Nixonton, Indian town, Newbiggin Creek, Currituck Inlet, Pasquotank River Bridge, ports of delivery; and there shall be a collector at Plankbridge on Sawyer's Creek, and a surveyor at each of the ports of Nixonton, Indian town, Currituck Inlet, Pasquotank River Bridge, and Newbiggin Creek; and that the authority of the officers of each district shall extend over the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, comprehended within such district.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the ports of Wilmington, Newbern, Washington, and Edenton, shall be the sole ports of entry within the said State of North Carolina, for ships or vessels not registered or licensed within the United States, according to law, and for all ships or vessels whatsoever, which shall arrive from the Cape of Good Hope, or any place beyond the same.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all the regulations, provisions, exceptions, allowances, compensations, directions, authorities, penalties, forfeitures, and other matters whatsoever, contained or expressed in the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States, and not locally inapplicable, shall have the like force and effect within the said State of North Carolina, for the collection of the said duties, as elsewhere within the United States, and as if the same were repeated, and re-enacted in this present act.

Sec. 5. Provided always, and be it declared, That the thirty-ninth section of the said act, and the third section of an act, entitled "An act to suspend part of an act, entitled, 'An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States, and for other purposes,'" did, by virtue of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, by the said State of North Carolina, cease to operate in respect to the same.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted and declared, That the act entitled "An act for registering and clearing vessels, regulating the coasting trade, and for other purposes," shall, after the expiration of thirty days from the passing of this act, have the like force and operation within the said State of North Carolina, as elsewhere within the United States, and as if the several clauses thereof were repeated, and re-enacted in this present act.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the second section of the act, entitled "An act to suspend part of an act, entitled, 'An act to regulate the collection of duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States, and for other purposes,'" passed the sixteenth day of September last, shall, with respect to the inhabitants and citizens of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, be revived, and also that the fourth section of the said act shall be revived, and both continued in force until the first day of April next, and no longer.

Speaker of the House of Representatives,
FRED. A. MUHLFENBERG,
JOHN ADAMS,
Vice President of the United States, and President of the Senate.
APPROVED, February 8, 1790.
GEO. WASHINGTON,
President of the United States.

An Act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the marshals of the several districts of the United States shall be, and they are hereby authorized and required to cause the number of the inhabitants within their respec-

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the marshals of the district of New York, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New Hampshire, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Massachusetts, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Connecticut, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New York, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New tive districts to be taken; omitting in such enumeration Indians not taxed, and distinguishing free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years from all others; distinguishing also the sexes and colors of free persons, and the free males of sixteen years and upwards from those under that age; for effecting which purpose the marshals shall have power to appoint as many assistants within their respective districts as to them shall appear necessary; assigning to each assistant a certain division of his district, which division shall consist of one or more counties, cities, towns, townships, hundreds, or parishes, or of a territory plainly and distinctly bounded by water courses, mountains, or public roads. The marshals and their assistants shall respectively take an oath or affirmation before some judge or justice of the peace resident within their respective districts, previous to their entering on the discharge of the duties by this act required. "I, A. B., marshal of the district of _____ do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will well and truly cause to be made, a just and perfect enumeration and description of all persons resident within my district, and return the same to the President of the United States, agreeably to the directions of an act of Congress, entitled 'An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States,' according to the best of my ability." The oath or affirmation of an assistant shall be, "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will make a just and perfect enumeration and description of all persons resident within the division assigned to me by the marshal of the district of _____, and make due return thereof to the said marshal, agreeably to the directions of an act of Congress, entitled 'An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States,' according to the best of my ability." The enumeration shall commence on the first Monday in August next, and shall close within nine calendar months thereafter: the several assistants shall, within the said nine months, transmit to the marshals, by whom they shall be respectively appointed, accurate returns of all persons, except Indians not taxed, within their respective divisions, which returns shall be made in a schedule, distinguishing the several families by the names of their master, mistress, steward, overseer, or other principal person therein, in manner following, that is to say: The number of persons within my division, consisting of _____, appears in a schedule hereunto annexed, subscribed by me this _____ day of _____ 1790.

A. B. assistant to the marshal of _____ Schedule of the whole Number of Persons within the Division allotted to A. B.

Names of the heads of families	Free white males of 16 years upwards, including heads of families	Free white males under 16 years	Free white females, including heads of families	All other free persons.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That every assistant failing to make return, or making a false return of the enumeration to the marshal within the time by this act limited, shall forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the marshals shall file the several returns aforesaid, with the clerks of their respective district courts, who are hereby directed to receive and carefully preserve the same; and the marshals respectively shall, on or before the first day of September, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, transmit to the President of the United States, the aggregate amount of each description of persons within their respective districts. And every marshal failing to file the returns of his assistants, or any of them, with the clerks of their respective district courts, or failing to return the aggregate amount of each description of persons in their respective districts, as the same shall appear from said returns, to the President of the United States, within the time limited by this act, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of eight hundred dollars; all which forfeitures shall be recoverable in the courts of the districts where the offences shall be committed, or in the circuit courts to be held within the same, by action of debt, information, or indictment; the one half thereof to the use of the United States, and the other half to the informer: but where the prosecution shall be first instituted on behalf of the United States, the whole shall accrue to their use. And for the more effectual discovery of offences, the judges of the several district courts, at their next sessions to be held after the expiration of the time allowed for making the returns of the enumeration hereby directed to the President of the United States, shall give this act in charge to the grand juries in their respective courts, and shall cause the returns of the several assistants to be laid before them for their inspection.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That every assistant shall receive at the rate of one dollar for every one hundred and fifty persons by him returned, where such persons reside in the country, and where such persons reside in a city or town, containing more than five thousand persons, such assistant shall receive at the rate of one dollar for every three hundred persons; but where, from the dispersed situation of the inhabitants in some divisions, one dollar for every one hundred and fifty persons shall be insufficient, the marshals, with the approbation of the judges of their respective districts, may make such further allowance to the assistants in such divisions as shall be deemed an adequate compensation, provided the same does not exceed one dollar for every fifty persons by them returned. The several marshals shall receive as follows: the marshal of the district of Maine, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New Hampshire, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Massachusetts, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Connecticut, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New York, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of New Jersey, two hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Pennsylvania, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Delaware, one hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Maryland, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Virginia, five hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Kentucky, two hundred and fifty dollars; the marshal of the district of North Carolina, three hundred and fifty dollars; the marshal of the district of South Carolina, three hundred dollars; the marshal of the district of Georgia, two hundred and fifty dollars. And to obviate all doubts which may arise respecting the persons to be returned, and the manner of making returns,

Sec. 5. Be it enacted, That every person whose usual place of abode shall be in any family on the aforesaid first Monday in August next shall be returned as of such family; and the name of every person, who shall be an inhabitant of any district, but without a settled place of residence, shall be inserted in the column of the aforesaid schedule, which is allotted for the heads of families, in that division where he or she shall be on the said first Monday in August next, and every person occasionally absent at the time of the enumeration, as belonging to that place in which he usually resides in the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That each and every person more than sixteen years of age, whether heads of families or not, belonging to any family within any division of a district made or established within the United States, shall be, and hereby is, obliged to render to such assistant of the division, a true account, if required, to the best of his or her knowledge, of all and every person belonging to such family respectively, according to the several descriptions aforesaid, on pain of forfeiting twenty dollars, to be sued for and recovered by such assistant, the one half for his own use, and the other half for the use of the United States.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That each assistant shall, previous to making his return to the marshal, cause a correct copy, signed by himself, of the schedule, containing the number of inhabitants within his division, to be set up at two of the most public places within the same, there to remain for the inspection of all concerned; for each of which copies the said assistant shall be entitled to receive two dollars, provided proof of a copy of the schedule having been so set up and suffered to remain shall be transmitted to the marshal, with the return of the number of persons; and in case any assistant shall fail to make such proof by this act allowed him.

Approved, March 1, 1790.

An act to establish a uniform rule of naturalization.

Be it enacted, &c., That any alien, being a free white person, who shall have resided within the limits and under the jurisdiction of the United States for the term of two years, may be admitted to become a citizen thereof, on application to any common law court of record in any one of the States wherein he shall have resided for the term of one year at least, and making proof, to the satisfaction of such court, that he is a person of good character, and taking the oath or affirmation prescribed by law, to support the Constitution of the United States, which oath or affirmation such court shall administer; and the clerk of such court shall record such application, and the proceedings thereon; and thereupon such person shall be considered as a citizen of the United States. And the children of such persons so naturalized, dwelling within the United States, being under the age of twenty-one years, at the time of such naturalization, shall also be considered as citizens of the United States. And the children of citizens of the United States, that may be born beyond sea, or out of the limits of the United States, shall be considered as natural born citizens. Provided, That the right of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers have never been resident in the United States. Provided, also, That no person heretofore proscribed by any State shall be admitted a citizen aforesaid, except by an act of the Legislature of the State in which such person was proscribed.

Approved, March 26, 1790.

An act making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety.

Be it enacted, &c., That there be appropriated for the service of the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety, to be paid out of the moneys arising from the duties on imports and tonnage, the following sums, to wit: a sum not exceeding one hundred and forty-one thousand four hundred and ninety-two dollars and seventy-three cents, for defraying the expenses of the civil list, as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the statement annexed to his report made to the House of Representatives on the ninth day of January last, including therein the contingencies of the several executive officers, which are hereby authorized and granted; and, also, a sum not exceeding one hundred and fifty-five thousand five hundred and thirty-seven dollars and seventy-two cents, for defraying the expenses of the Department of War; and the further sum of ninety-six thousand nine hundred and seventy-nine dollars and seventy-two cents, for paying the pensions which may become due to the invalids, as estimated in the statements accompanying the aforesaid report.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all the expenses arising from, and incident to, the sessions of Congress, which may happen in the course of the aforesaid year, agreeably to laws heretofore passed, shall be defrayed out of the moneys arising from the aforesaid duties on imports and tonnage.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized to draw from the Treasury a sum not exceeding ten thousand dollars for the purpose of defraying the contingent charges of Government, to be paid out of the moneys arising as aforesaid from the duties on imports and tonnage; and that he cause a regular statement and account of such expenditures to be laid before Congress at the end of the year.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That a sum not exceeding one hundred and forty-seven thousand one hundred and sixty-nine dollars and fifty-four cents be appropriated out of the moneys arising as aforesaid from the duties on imports and tonnage for discharging the demands which exist against the United States, as specified by the Secretary of the Treasury in his report made to the House of Representatives on the first of March instant, including therein a provision for building a light-house on Cape Henry in the State of Virginia, and for defraying the expenses arising from the act, entitled "An act for the establishment and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers."

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That out of the aforesaid appropriation of one hundred and forty-seven thousand one hundred and sixty-nine dollars and fifty-four cents, the payment of the following sums, not heretofore provided for by law, and estimated in the aforesaid report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the first of March instant, is hereby authorized and intended to be made, to wit: for the expenses of the late office of foreign affairs, six hundred and fifty dollars; to Roger Alden, for his services, including his office expenses, and the allowance to his clerks, eight hundred and seventy-three dollars and seventy cents; to the late commissioner for settling the accounts of the departments of the late quartermaster-general and commissaries general of purchases and issues, for his own and clerk's services, from the eighth of May to the first of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, one thousand and ten dollars and fifty-five cents; to the late commissioner for settling the accounts of the late marine, clothing, and hospital departments, for his own and clerk's services, from the eighth of May to the third of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, six hundred and twenty-eight dollars and twenty-six cents; to the late commissioner for adjusting the accounts of the secret and commercial committees of Congress, for his salary from the first of July to the third of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, one hundred and seventy-four dollars and sixteen cents; for defraying the extraordinary expenses of the late President of Congress, three hundred and eighteen dollars and fifty-three cents; for paying salaries to the late loan-officers of the several States, from the thirtieth day of June to the thirty-first day of December, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, including office charges, six thousand seven hundred and twenty-five dollars; for paying the interest due on the loans made by the Secretary of the Treasury two thousand four hundred and fourteen dollars and sixty-one cents.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the sum of one hundred and twenty dollars be paid out of the moneys arising from the aforesaid duties on imports and tonnage, to Jehoiahim McTolsin, in full compensation for his services as an interpreter and guide in the expedition commanded by Major-General Sullivan, in the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine; and also the sum of ninety-six dollars to James Mathers and Gifford Dalley each, for services during the late recess of Congress.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized to empower the Secretary of the Treasury, if he shall deem it necessary, to make such loans as may be requisite to carry into effect the foregoing appropriations, for the repayment of which the aforesaid duties on imports and tonnage shall be, and are hereby, pledged.

Approved, March 26, 1790.

An Act to prevent the exportation of goods not duly inspected according to the laws of the several States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the collectors and other officers of the customs in the several ports of the United States be, and they are hereby directed to pay due regard to the inspection laws of the States in which they may respectively act, in such manner that no vessel, having on board goods liable to inspection, shall be cleared out until the master or other proper person shall have produced such certificate that all such goods have been duly inspected, as the laws of the respective States do or may require to be produced to collectors or other officers of the customs.

Approved, April 2, 1790.

An Act to accept a cession of the claims of the State of North Carolina to a certain district of Western Territory.

A deed of cession having been executed, and in the Senate offered for acceptance to the United States, of the claims of the State of North Carolina, to a district of territory therein described; which deed is in the words following, viz:

To all who shall see these presents,

We, the undersigned SAMUEL JOHNSTON and BENJAMIN HAWKINS, Senators in the Congress of the United States of America, duly and constitutionally chosen by the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, send greeting.

Whereas, the General Assembly of the State of North Carolina, on the — day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, passed an act, entitled "An act for the purpose of ceding to the United States of America certain Western lands therein described," in the words following, to wit:

Whereas the United States in Congress assembled have repeatedly and earnestly recommended to the respective States in the Union, claiming or owning vacant Western Territory, to make cessions of part of the same, as a further means, as well of hastening the extinguishment of the debts,

Acts of Congress.

as of establishing the harmony of the United States; and the inhabitants of the said Western Territory being also desirous that such cession should be made, in order to obtain a more ample protection than they have heretofore received; now this State, being ever desirous of doing ample justice to the public creditors, as well as the establishing the harmony of the United States, and complying with the reasonable desires of her citizens: Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of North Carolina, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That the Senators of this State, in the Congress of the United States, or one of the Senators and any two of the Representatives of this State in the Congress of the United States, are hereby authorized, empowered, and required to execute a deed or deeds on the part and be half of this State, conveying to the United States of America all right, title, and claim which this State has to the sovereignty and territory of the lands situated within the chartered limits of this State, west of a line beginning on the extreme height of the Stone Mountain, at the place where the Virginia line intersects it; running thence along the extreme height of the said mountain to the place where Watauga river breaks through it; thence a direct course to the top of the Yellow Mountain, where Bright's Road crosses the same; thence along the ridge of the said mountain, between the waters of Doe River and the waters of Rock Creek, to the place where the road crosses the Iron Mountain; from thence along the extreme height of said mountain to where Nolichucky River runs through the same; thence to the top of the Bald Mountain; thence along the extreme height of the said mountain to the Painted Rock, on French Broad River; thence along the highest ridge of the said mountain to the place where it is called the Great Iron or Smoky Mountain; thence along the extreme height of the said mountain to the place where it is called Unicoi or Unaka Mountain, between the Indian towns of Cowee and old Chota; thence along the main-ridge of the said mountain to the southern boundary of this State, upon the following express conditions, and subject thereto, that is to say: First, that neither the lands nor inhabitants westward of the said mountain shall be estimated after the cession made by virtue of this act shall be accepted, in the ascertaining the proportion of this State with the United States, in the common expense occasioned by the late war. Secondly, that the lands laid off, or directed to be laid off, by any act or acts of the General Assembly of this State, for the officers and soldiers thereof, their heirs and assigns respectively, shall be and enure to the use and benefit of the said officers, their heirs and assigns respectively; and if the bounds of the said lands already prescribed for the officers and soldiers of the Continental line of this State, shall not contain a sufficient quantity of lands fit for cultivation, to make good the several provisions intended by law, that such officer or soldier, or his assignee, who shall fall short of his allotment or proportion, after all the lands fit for cultivation within the said bounds are appropriated, be permitted to take his quota, or such part thereof as may be deficient, in any other part of the said territory intended to be ceded by virtue of this act, not already appropriated. And where entries have been made agreeable to law, and titles under them not perfected by grant or otherwise, then, and in that case, the Governor for the time being shall be, and he is hereby, required to perfect, from time to time, such titles, in such manner as if this act had never been passed; and that all entries made by, or grants made to, all and every person or persons whatsoever, agreeable to law, and within the limits hereby intended to be ceded to the United States, shall have the same force and effect as if such cession had not been made; and that all and every right of occupancy and pre-emption, and every other right reserved by any act or acts to persons settled on and occupying lands within the limits of the lands hereby intended to be ceded as aforesaid, shall continue to be in full force, in the same manner as if the cession had not been made, and as conditions upon which the said lands are ceded to the United States. And further, it shall be understood that if any person or persons shall have, by virtue of the act entitled "An act for opening the Land Office for the redemption of specie and other certificates, and discharging the arrears due to the army," passed in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, made his or their entry in the office usually called John Armstrong's office, and located the same to any spot or piece of ground on which any other person or persons shall have previously located any entry or entries, that then, and in that case, the person or persons having made such entry or entries, or their assignee or assignees, shall have leave and be at full liberty to remove the location of such entry or entries to any lands on which no entry has been specially located, or on any vacant lands included within the limits of the lands hereby intended to be ceded: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to the making good any entry or entries, or any grant or grants heretofore declared void, by any act or acts of the General Assembly of this State. Thirdly, that all the lands intended to be ceded by virtue of this act to the United States of America, and not appropriated as before mentioned, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of the United States of America, North Carolina inclusive, according to their respective and usual proportion in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatever. Fourthly, that the territory so ceded shall be laid out and formed into a State or States, containing a suitable extent of territory, the inhabitants of which shall enjoy all the privileges, benefits, and advantages, set forth in the ordinance of the late Congress, for the government of the Western Territory of the United States; that is to say, whenever the Congress of the United States shall cause to be officially transmitted to the Executive authority of this State an authenticated copy of the act to be passed by the Congress of the United States, accepting the cession of territory made by virtue of this act, under the express conditions hereby specified, the said Congress shall at the same time assume the government of the said ceded territory, which they shall execute in a manner similar to that which they support in the territory west of the Ohio—shall protect the inhabitants against enemies, and shall never bar or deprive them of any privileges which the people in the territory west of the Ohio enjoy. Provided always, That no regulations made or to be made by Congress shall tend to emancipate slaves. Fifthly, that the inhabitants of the said ceded territory shall be liable to pay such sums of money as may, from taking their census, be their just proportion of the debt of the United States, and the arrears of the requisitions of Congress on this State. Sixthly, that all persons indebted to this State, residing in the territory intended to be ceded by virtue of this act, shall be held and deemed liable to pay such debt or debts in the same manner, and under the same penalty or penalties, as if this act had never been passed. Seventhly, that if the Congress of the United States do not accept the cession hereby intended to be made, in due form, and give official notice thereof to the Executive of this State, within eighteen months from the passing of this act, then this act shall be of no more force or effect whatsoever. Eighthly, that the laws in force and use in the State of North Carolina, at the time of passing this act, shall be and continue in full force within the territory hereby ceded, until the same shall be repealed or otherwise altered by the Legislative authority of the said territory. Ninthly, that the lands of non-resident proprietors within the said ceded territory shall not be taxed higher than the lands of residents. Tenthly, that this act shall not prevent the people now residing south of French Broad, between the rivers Tennessee and Big Pigeon, from entering their pre-emptions in that tract, should an office be opened for that purpose, under an act of the present General Assembly. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the sovereignty and jurisdiction of this State in and over the territory aforesaid, and all and every the inhabitants thereof, shall be and remain the same in all respects until the Congress of the United States shall accept the cession to be made by virtue of this act, as if this act had never passed.

Acts of Congress.

Read three times, and ratified in General Assembly, the _____ day of December, A. D. 1789.

CHAS. JOHNSON, Sp. Sen.
S. CABARRUS, Sp. H. C.

Now therefore know ye, That we, SAMUEL JOHNSTON and BENJAMIN HAWKINS, Senators aforesaid, by virtue of the power and authority committed to us by the said act, and in the name, and for and on behalf of the said State, do by these presents convey, assign, transfer and set over unto the United States of America, for the benefit of the said States, North Carolina, inclusive, all right, title, and claim, which the said State hath to the sovereignty and territory of the lands situated within the chartered limits of the said State, as bounded and described in the above recited act of the General Assembly, to and for the uses and purposes, and on the conditions mentioned in the said act.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto subscribed our names, and affixed our seals, in the Senate Chamber, at New York, this twenty-fifth day of February, in the year of our Lord, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, and in the fourteenth year of the independence of the United States of America.

SAM. JOHNSTON, BENJAMIN HAWKINS,
(L. s.) (L. s.)

Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of SAM. A. OTIS.

Be it enacted, &c., That the said deed be, and the same is hereby, accepted.
Approved, April 2, 1790.

An act to promote the progress of Useful Arts.

Be it enacted, &c., That, upon the petition of any person or persons to the Secretary of State, the Secretary for the Department of War, and the Attorney General of the United States, setting forth, that he, she, or they, hath or have invented or discovered any useful art, manufacture, engine, machine, or device, or any improvement therein, not before known or used, and praying that a patent may be granted therefor, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Secretary of State, the Secretary for the Department of War, the Attorney General, or any two of them, if they shall deem the invention or discovery sufficiently useful and important, to cause letters patent to be made out in the name of the United States, to bear teste by the President of the United States, reciting the allegations and suggestions of the said petition, and describing the said invention or discovery, clearly, truly, and fully; and thereupon granting to such petitioner or petitioners, his, her, or their heirs, administrators, or assigns, for any term not exceeding fourteen years, the sole and exclusive right and liberty of making, constructing, using, and vending to others to be used, the said invention or discovery; which letters patent shall be delivered to the Attorney General of the United States, to be examined, who shall, within fifteen days next after the delivery to him, if he shall find the same conformable to this act, certify it to be so at the foot thereof, and present the letters patent so certified to the President, who shall cause the seal of the United States to be thereto affixed, and the same shall be good and available to the grantee or grantees, by force of this act, to all and every intent and purpose herein contained, and shall be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose, in the office of the Secretary of State, and delivered to the patentee or his agent; and the delivery thereof shall be entered on the record, and endorsed on the patent by the said Secretary at the time of granting the same.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the grantee or grantees of each patent, shall, at the the pretence of any such authority, be deemed, adjudged, and taken, to be a pirate, felon, and robber, and on being thereof convicted, shall suffer death.

Sec. 10. And be it enacted, That every person who shall, either upon the land or the seas, knowingly and wittingly aid and assist, procure, command, counsel, or advise, any person or persons, to do or commit any murder or robbery, or other piracy aforesaid, upon the seas, which shall affect the life of such person, and such person or persons shall thereupon do or commit any such piracy or robbery, then all and every such person so, as aforesaid, aiding, assisting, procuring, commanding, counselling, or advising the same, either upon the land or the sea, shall be judged, to be accessory to such piracies before the fact, and every such person being thereof convicted, shall suffer death.

Sec. 11. And be it enacted, That after any murder, felony, robbery, or other piracy whatsoever aforesaid, is or shall be committed by any pirate or robber, every person who, knowing that such pirate or robber has done or committed any such piracy or robbery, shall, on the land or at sea receive, entertain, or conceal, any such pirate or robber, or receive or take into his custody any ship, vessel, goods, or chattels, which have been by any such pirate or robber practically and feloniously taken, shall be, and are hereby declared, deemed, and adjudged, to be accessory to such piracy or robbery, after the fact; and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years, and fined not exceeding five hundred dollars.

Sec. 12. And be it enacted, That if any seaman or other person shall commit manslaughter upon the high seas, or confederate or attempt, or endeavor to corrupt any commander, master, officer, or mariner, to yield up or to run away with any ship or vessel, or with any goods, wares, or merchandise, or to turn pirate, or to go over to or confederate with pirates, or in any wise trade with any pirate, knowing him to be such, or shall furnish such pirate with any ammunition, stores, or provisions of any kind, or shall fit out any vessel knowingly, and with a design to trade with, or supply, or correspond with, any pirate or robber upon the seas; or if any person or persons shall any ways consult, combine, confederate, or correspond with any pirate or robber on the seas, knowing him to be guilty of any such piracy or robbery; or if any seaman shall confine the master of any ship or other vessel, or endeavor to make a revolt in such ship, such person or persons so offending, and being thereof convicted, shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years, and fined not exceeding one thousand dollars.

Sec. 13. And be it enacted, That if any person or persons, within any of the places upon the land under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, or upon the high seas, in any vessel belonging to the United States, or to any citizen or citizens thereof, on purpose and of malice aforethought, shall unlawfully cut off the ear or ears, or cut out or disable the tongue, put out an eye, slit the nose, cut off the nose or a lip, or cut off or disable any limb or member of any person, with intention in so doing, to maim or disfigure such person in any the manners before mentioned, then, and in every such case, the person or persons so offending, their counsellors, aiders, and abettors, (knowing of, and privy to, the offence aforesaid,) shall, on conviction, be imprisoned not exceeding seven years, and fined not exceeding one thousand dollars.

Sec. 14. And be it enacted, That if any person or persons shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly act or assist in the falsely making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting, any certificate, indent, or other public security of the United States, or shall utter, put off, or offer, or cause to be uttered, put off, or offered in payment, or for sale, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited certificate, indent, or other public security, with intention to defraud any person, knowing the same to be false, altered, forged, or counterfeited, and shall be thereof convicted, every such person shall suffer death.

Sec. 15. And be it enacted, That if any person shall feloniously steal, take away, alter, falsify, or otherwise avoid any record, writ, process, or other proceedings in any of the courts of the United States, by means whereof any judgment shall be reversed, made void, or not take effect, or if any person shall acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, in any of the courts aforesaid, any recognizance, bail or judgment, in the name or names of any other person or persons not privy or consenting to the same, every such person or persons, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not exceeding seven years, and whipped not exceeding thirty-nine stripes: Provided, nevertheless, That this act shall not extend to the acknowledgment of any judgment or judgments by any attorney or attorneys, duly admitted for any person or persons against whom any such judgment or judgments shall be had or given.

Sec. 16. And be it enacted, That if any person within any of the places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, or upon the high seas, shall take and carry away, with an intent to steal or purloin, the personal goods of another; or of any person or persons, having at any time hereafter the charge or custody of any arms, ordnance, munition, shot, powder, or habilitaments of war, belonging to the United States, or of any victuals provided for the victualing of any soldiers, gunners, marines, or pioneers, shall, for any lucre or gain, or wittingly, advisedly, and of purpose, to hinder or impede the service of the United States, embezzle, purloin, or convey away any of the said arms, ordnance, munition, shot or powder, habilitaments of war, or victuals, that then, and in every of the cases aforesaid, the person or persons so offending, their counsellors, aiders, and abettors, (knowing of, and privy to, the offences aforesaid,) shall, on conviction, be fined not exceeding the fourfold value of the property so stolen, embezzled, or purloined; the one moiety to be paid to the owner of the goods, or the United States, as the case may be, and the other moiety to the informer and prosecutor, and be publicly whipped, not exceeding thirty-nine stripes.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons within any part of the jurisdiction of the United States as aforesaid, shall receive or buy any goods or chattels that shall be feloniously taken or stolen from any other person, knowing the same to be stolen, or shall receive, harbor, or conceal, any felons or thieves, knowing them to be so, he or they, being of either of the said offences legally convicted, shall be liable to the like punishments as in the case of larceny before are prescribed.

Sec. 18. And be it enacted, That if any person shall wilfully and corruptly commit perjury, or shall by any means procure any person to commit corrupt and wilful perjury, on his or her oath or affirmation, in any suit, controversy, matter, or cause, depending in any of the courts of the United States, or in any deposition taken pursuant to the laws of the United States, every person so offending, and being thereof convicted, shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years, and shall stand in the pillory for one hour, and be thereafter rendered incapable of giving testimony in any of the courts of the United States, until such time as the judgment so given against the said offender shall be reversed.

Sec. 19. And be it enacted, That in every perjury or indictment to be prosecuted against any person for wilful and corrupt perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged upon the defendant, and by what court, or before whom the oath or affirmation was taken, (averring such court, or person or persons, to have a competent authority to administer the same,) together with the proper averment or averments, to falsify the matter or matters wherein the perjury or perjuries is or are assigned, without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, either in law or equity, other than as aforesaid, and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court, or person or persons before whom the perjury was committed.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That in every presentment or indictment for subornation of perjury, or for corrupt bargaining or contracting with others to commit wilful and corrupt perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged upon the defendant, without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or proceeding, either in law or equity, and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court, or person or persons before whom the perjury was committed, or was agreed or promised to be committed.

Sec. 21. And be it enacted, That if any person shall, directly or indirectly, give any sum or sums of money, or any other bribe, present, or reward, or any promise, contract, obligation, or security, for the payment or delivery of any money, present or reward, or any other thing to obtain or procure the opinion, judgment, or decree, of any judge or judges of the United States, in any suit, controversy, matter, or cause, depending before him or them, and shall be thereof convicted, such person or persons so giving, promising, contracting, or securing to be given, paid or delivered, any sum or sums of money, present, reward, or other bribe, as aforesaid, and the judge or judges who shall in any wise accept or receive the same, on conviction thereof shall be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the court, and shall forever be disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit, under the United States.

Sec. 22. And be it enacted, That if any person or persons shall knowingly and wilfully obstruct, resist, or oppose, any officer of the United States, in serving, or attempting to serve, or execute, any mesne process, or warrant, or any rule or order of any of the courts of the United States, or any other legal or judicial writ or process whatsoever, or shall assault, beat or wound any officer, or other person duly authorized in serving or executing any writ, rule, order, process, or warrant, aforesaid, every person so knowingly and wilfully offending in the premises, shall, on conviction thereof, be imprisoned not exceeding twelve months, and fined not exceeding three hundred dollars.

Sec. 23. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall, by force, set at liberty, or rescue any person who shall be found guilty of treason, murder, or any other capital crime, or rescue any person convicted of any of the said crimes, going to execution, or during execution, every person so offending, and being thereof convicted, shall suffer death; and if any person shall, by force, set at liberty, or rescue any person who, before conviction, shall stand committed for any of the capital offences aforesaid; or if any person or persons shall, by force, set at liberty, or rescue any person committed for or convicted of any other offence against the United States, every person so offending shall, on conviction, be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, and imprisoned not exceeding one year.

Sec. 24. Provided always, and be it enacted, That no conviction or judgment for any of the offences aforesaid shall work corruption of blood, or any forfeiture of estate.

Sec. 25. And be it enacted, That if any writ or process shall at any time hereafter be sued forth or prosecuted by any person or persons, in any of the courts of the United States, or in any of the courts of a particular State, or by any judge or justice therein respectively, whereby the person of any ambassador, or other public minister of any foreign prince or State, authorized and received as such by the President of the United States, or any domestic or domestic servant of any such ambassador or other public minister, may be arrested or imprisoned, or his or their goods or chattels be distrained, seized, or attached, such writ or process shall be deemed and adjudged to be utterly null and void, to all intents, construction, and purposes, whatsoever.

Sec. 26. And be it enacted, That in case any person or persons shall sue forth, or prosecute any such writ or process, such person or persons, and all attorneys or solicitors prosecuting or soliciting in such case, and all officers executing any such writ or process, being thereof convicted, shall be deemed violators of the laws of nations, and disturbers of the public repose, and imprisoned not exceeding three years, and fined at the discretion of the court.

Sec. 27. Provided, nevertheless, That no citizen or inhabitant of the United States, who shall have contracted debts prior to his entering into the service of any ambassador or other public minister, which debts shall be still due and unpaid, shall have, take, or receive, any benefit of this act; nor shall any person be proceeded against by virtue of this act, for having arrested or sued any other domestic servant of any ambassador or other public minister, unless the name of such servant be first registered in the office of the Secretary of State, and by such Secretary transmitted to the marshal of the district in which Congress shall reside, who shall, upon receipt thereof, affix the same in some public place in his office, whereto all persons may resort and take copies, without fee or reward.

Sec. 28. And be it enacted, That if any person shall violate any safe conduct or passport duly obtained and issued under the authority of the United States, or shall assault, strike, wound, imprison, or in any other manner infract the law of nations, by offering violence to the person of an ambassador or other public minister, such person so offending, on conviction, shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years, and fined at the discretion of the court.

Sec. 29. And be it enacted, That any person who shall be accused and indicted of treason, shall have a copy of the indictment, and a list of the jury and witnesses, to be produced on the trial for proving the said indictment, mentioning the names and places of abode of such witnesses and jurors, delivered unto him at least three entire days before he shall be tried for the same; and in other capital offences, shall have such copy of the indictment, and list of the jury, two entire days at least before the trial: And that every person so accused and indicted for any of the crimes aforesaid, shall also be allowed and admitted to make his full defence by counsel learned in the law; and the court before whom such person shall be tried, or some judge thereof, shall, and they are hereby authorized and required, immediately upon his request, to assign to such person such counsel, not exceeding two, as such person shall desire, to whom such counsel shall have free access at all reasonable hours; and every such person or persons accused or indicted of the crimes aforesaid, shall be allowed and admitted in his said defence to make any proof that he or they can produce, by lawful witness or witnesses, and shall have the like process of the court where he or they shall be tried, to compel his or their witnesses to appear at his or their trial, as is usually granted to compel witnesses to appear on the prosecution against them.

Sec. 30. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons be indicted of treason against the United States, and shall stand mute or refuse to plead, or shall challenge peremptorily above the number of thirty-five of the jury; or if any person or persons be indicted of any other of the offences herein before set forth, for which the punishment is declared to be death, if he or they shall also stand mute, or will not answer to the indictment, or challenge peremptorily above the number of twenty persons of the jury, the court, in any of the cases aforesaid, shall, notwithstanding, proceed to the trial of the person or persons so standing mute or challenging, as if he or they had pleaded not guilty, and render judgment thereon accordingly.

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That the benefit of clergy shall not be used or allowed, upon conviction of any crime, for which, by any statute of the United States, the punishment is or shall be declared to be death.

Sec. 32. And be it further enacted, That no person or persons shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished, for treason, or other capital offence, aforesaid, wilful murder or forgery excepted, unless the indictment for the same shall be found by a grand jury within three years next after the treason or capital offence aforesaid shall be done or committed; nor shall any person be prosecuted, tried, or punished, for any offence not capital, nor for any fine or forfeiture under any penal statute, unless the indictment or information for the same shall be found or instituted within two years from the time of committing the offence, or incurring the fine or forfeiture aforesaid: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall extend to any person or persons fleeing from justice.

Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, That the manner of inflicting the punishment of death shall be by hanging the person convicted by the neck until dead.

Approved, April 30, 1790.

An Act for regulating the Military Establishment of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioned officers hereinafter mentioned, and the number of one thousand two hundred and sixteen non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, shall be raised for the service of the United States, for the period of three years, unless they should previously by law be discharged.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the non-commissioned officers and privates aforesaid, shall, at the time of their enlistments, respectively, be able-bodied men, not under five feet six inches in height, without shoes; nor under the age of eighteen, nor above the age of forty-six years.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the commissioned officers hereinafter mentioned, and the said non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, shall be formed into one regiment of infantry, to consist of three battalions, and one battalion of artillery. The regiment of infantry to be composed of one lieutenant colonel, commandant, three majors, three adjutants, three quartermasters, one paymaster, one surgeon, two surgeons mates, and twelve companies, each of which shall consist of one captain, one lieutenant, one ensign, four sergeants, four corporals, sixty-six privates, and two musicians. The battalion of artillery shall be composed of one major commandant, one adjutant, one quartermaster, one paymaster, one surgeon's mate, and four companies; each of which shall consist of one captain, two lieutenants, four sergeants, four corporals, sixty-six privates, and two musicians: Provided always, That the adjutants, quartermasters, and paymasters, shall be appointed from the line of subalterns of the aforesaid corps, respectively.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States may, from time to time, appoint one or two inspectors, as to him shall seem meet, to inspect the said troops, who shall also muster the same, and each of whom shall receive the like pay and subsistence as a captain, and be allowed ten dollars per month for forage.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the troops aforesaid shall receive for their services the following enumerated monthly rates of pay: Lieutenant colonel commandant, sixty dollars; major commandant of artillery, forty-five dollars; majors, forty dollars; captains, thirty dollars; lieutenants, twenty-two dollars; ensigns, eighteen dollars; sergeants, thirty dollars; surgeons' mates, twenty-four dollars; sergeants, five dollars; corporals, four dollars; privates, three dollars; and in the battalion of artillery, five dollars; musicians, three dollars: Provided always, That the sums hereinafter specified, shall be deducted from the pay of the non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, stipulated as aforesaid, for the purposes of forming a fund for clothing and hospital stores. From the monthly pay of each sergeant and senior musician, there shall be deducted, for uniform clothing, the sum of one dollar and forty cents, and the further sum of ten cents for hospital stores; and from the monthly pay of each corporal, for uniform clothing, one dollar and fifteen cents, and the further sum of ten cents for hospital stores; and from the monthly pay of each private and musician, for uniform clothing, the sum of ninety cents, and the further sum of ten cents for hospital stores.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the subalterns who may be appointed to act as adjutants, shall each receive for the same, in addition to their regimental pay, ten dollars per month; and quarter and paymasters, so appointed, each five dollars per month.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the commissioned officers aforesaid shall receive, for their daily subsistence, the following number of rations of provisions, to wit: Lieutenant colonel commandant, six; a major, four; a captain, three;

a lieutenant, two; an ensign, two; a surgeon, three; a surgeon's mate, two; or money in lieu thereof, at the option of the said officers, at the contract price at the posts, respectively, where the rations shall become due.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the commissioned officers, hereinafter described, shall receive, monthly, the following enumerated sums, instead of forage: Lieutenant colonels commandant, twelve dollars; major commandant of artillery, twelve dollars; and surgeon, each, ten dollars; surgeon's mates, each, six dollars.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That every non-commissioned officer, private, and musician, aforesaid, shall receive annually, the following articles of uniform clothing: One hat or helmet, one coat, one vest, two pair of woollen and two pair of linen overalls, four pair of shoes, four shirts, two pair of socks, one blanket, one stock and clasp, and one pair of buckles.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That every non-commissioned officer, private, and musician, aforesaid, shall receive, daily, the following rations of provisions, or the value thereof: One pound of beef, or three-quarters of a pound of pork, one pound of bread or flour, half a gill of rum, brandy, or whiskey, or the value thereof, at the contract price where the same shall become due, and at the rate of one quart of salt, two quarts of vinegar, two pounds of soap, and one pound of candles, to every hundred rations.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That if any commissioned officer, non-commissioned officer, private, or musician, aforesaid, shall be wounded or disabled while in the line of his duty in the public service, he shall be placed on the list of the invalids of the United States, at such rate of pay, and under such regulations as shall be directed by the President of the United States, for the time being: Provided always, That the rate of compensation for such wounds or disabilities, shall never exceed, for the highest disability, half the monthly pay received by any commissioned officer at the time of being so wounded or disabled; and that the rate of compensation to non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, shall never exceed five dollars per month: And provided also, That all inferior disabilities shall entitle the person so disabled to receive only a sum in proportion to the highest disability.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That every commissioned officer, non-commissioned officer, private, and musician, aforesaid, shall take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation, to wit: "I, A. B. do solemnly swear or affirm, (as the case may be,) to bear true allegiance to the United States of America, and to serve them honestly and faithfully, against all their enemies or opposers whomsoever, and to observe and obey the orders of the President of the United States of America, and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the articles of war."

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, aforesaid, shall be governed by the rules and articles of war, which have been established by the United States in Congress assembled, as far as the same may be applicable to the Constitution of the United States, or by such rules and articles as may hereafter by law be established.

Acts of Congress.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That the "act for recognizing, and adapting to the Constitution of the United States, the establishment of the troops raised under the resolves of the United States in Congress assembled," passed the twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, be, and the same is hereby repealed: Provided always, That the non-commissioned officers and privates, continued and engaged under the aforesaid act of the twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, and who shall decline to re-enlist under the establishment made by this act, shall be discharged whenever the President of the United States shall direct the same: Provided further, That the whole number of non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, in the service of the United States at any one time, either by virtue of this act, or by virtue of the aforesaid act, passed the twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, shall not exceed the number of one thousand two hundred and sixteen.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of aiding the troops now in service, or to be raised by this act, in protecting the inhabitants of the frontiers of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to call into service, from time to time, such part of the militia of the States, respectively, as he may judge necessary for the purpose aforesaid; and that their pay and subsistence, while in service, be the same as the pay and subsistence of the troops above mentioned, and they shall be subject to the rules and articles of war.

Approved, April 30, 1790.

An act to prescribe the mode in which the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings, in each State, shall be authenticated so as to take effect in every other State.

Be it enacted, &c., That the acts of the Legislatures of the several States shall be authenticated by having the seal of their respective States affixed thereto; that the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any State shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form. And the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States, as they have by law or usage in the courts of the State from whence the said records are, or shall be taken.

Approved, May 26, 1790.

An Act to provide for mitigating or remitting the forfeitures and penalties accruing under the revenue laws, in certain cases therein mentioned.

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever any person who now is, or hereafter shall be, liable to a fine, penalty, or forfeiture, or interested in any vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, or other thing which may be subject to seizure and forfeiture, by force of the laws of the United States now existing, or which may hereafter exist, for collecting duties of impost and tonnage, and for regulating the coasting trade, shall prefer his petition to the judge of the district in which such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, may have accrued, truly and particularly setting forth the circumstances of his case, and shall pray that the same may be mitigated or remitted; the said judge shall inquire in a summary manner into the circumstances of the case, first causing reasonable notice to be given to the person or persons claiming such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and to the attorney of the United States for such district, that each may have an opportunity of showing cause against the mitigation or remission thereof; and shall cause the facts which shall appear upon such inquiry to be stated and annexed to the petition, and direct their transmission to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, who shall thereupon have power to mitigate or remit such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, or any part thereof, if in his opinion the same was incurred without wilful negligence or any intention of fraud, and to direct the prosecution, if any shall have been instituted for the recovery thereof, to cease and be discontinued, upon such terms or conditions as he may deem reasonable and just: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect the right or claim of any person to that part of any fine, penalty, or forfeiture, incurred by breach of either of the laws aforesaid, which such person may be entitled to by virtue of the said laws, in cases where a prosecution has been commenced, or information has been given before the passing of this act; the amount of which right and claim shall be assessed and valued by the judge of the district in a summary manner.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue and be in force until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, May 26, 1790.

An Act to continue in force an act passed at the last session of Congress, entitled "An act to regulate processes in the courts of the United States."

Be it enacted, &c., That the act, entitled "An act to regulate processes in the courts of the United States," passed on the twenty-ninth day of September last, shall be, and the same is hereby, continued in force until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, May 26, 1790.

An Act for the government of the territory of the United States south of the river Ohio.

Be it enacted, &c., That the territory of the

Acts of Congress.

United States, south of the river Ohio, for the purposes of temporary government, shall be one district; the inhabitants of which shall enjoy all the privileges, benefits, and advantages, set forth in the ordinance of the late Congress, for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio. And the government of the said territory south of the Ohio shall be similar to that which is now exercised in the territory northwest of the Ohio; except so far as is otherwise provided, in the conditions expressed in an act of Congress of the present session, entitled "An act to accept a cession of the claims of the State of North Carolina to a certain district of Western territory."

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the salaries of the officers which the President of the United States shall nominate, and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, by virtue of this act, shall be the same as those by law established, of similar officers in the government northwest of the river Ohio. And the powers, duties, and emoluments, of a Superintendent of Indian affairs for the southern department, shall be united with those of the Governor.

Approved, May 26, 1790.

An Act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies, during the times therein mentioned.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the passing of this act, the author and authors of any map, chart, book, or books, already printed within these United States, being a citizen or citizens thereof, or resident within the same, his or their executors, administrators, or assigns, who hath or have not transferred to any other person the copy-right of such map, chart, book, or books, share or shares, thereof; and any other person or persons, being a citizen or citizens of these United States, or residents therein, his or their executors, administrators, or assigns, who hath or have purchased or legally acquired the copyright of any such map, chart, book, or books, in order to print, reprint, publish, or vend the same, shall have the sole right and liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, and vending such map, chart, book, or books, for the term of fourteen years from the recording the title thereof in the clerk's office, as is herein after directed. And that the author and authors of any map, chart, book, or books, already made and composed, and not printed or published, or that shall hereafter be made and composed, being a citizen or citizens of these United States, or resident therein, as his or their executors, administrators, or assigns, shall have the sole right and liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, and vending such map, chart, book, or books, for the like term of fourteen years from the time of recording the title thereof in the clerk's office as aforesaid. And if, at the expiration of the said term, the author or authors, or any of them, be living, and a citizen or citizens of these United States, or resident therein, the same exclusive right shall be continued to him or them, his or their executors, administrators, or assigns, for the further term of fourteen years: Provided, he or they shall cause the title thereof to be a second time recorded and published in the same manner as is hereinafter directed, and that within six months before the expiration of the first term of fourteen years aforesaid.

1st Con.—71

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any other person or persons, from and after the recording the title of any map, chart, book, or books, and publishing the same as aforesaid, and within the times limited and granted by this act, shall print, re-print, publish, or import, or cause to be printed, re-printed, published, or imported from any foreign kingdom or State, any copy or copies of such map, chart, book, or books, without the consent of the author or proprietor thereof, first had and obtained in writing, signed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses; or knowing the same to be so printed, re-printed, or imported, shall publish, sell, or expose to sale, any copy of such map, chart, book, or books, without such consent first had and obtained in writing as aforesaid, then such offender or offenders shall forfeit all and every copy or copies of such map, chart, book, or books, and all and every sheet and sheets, being part of the same, or either of them, to the author or proprietor of such map, chart, book, or books, who shall forthwith destroy the same: And every such offender and offenders shall also forfeit and pay the sum of fifty cents for every sheet which shall be found in his or their possession, either printed or printing, published, imported, or exposed to sale, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, the one moiety thereof to the author or proprietor of such map, chart, book, or books, who shall sue for the same, and the other moiety thereof, to and for the use of the United States, to be recovered by action of debt in any court of record in the United States, wherein the same is cognizable: Provided always, That such action be commenced within one year after the cause of action shall arise, and not afterwards.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this act, in cases where any map, chart, book, or books, hath or have been already printed and published, unless he shall first deposit, and in all other cases, unless he shall, before publication, deposit a printed copy of the title of such map, chart, book, or books, in the clerk's office of the district court, where the author or proprietor shall reside: And the clerk of such court is hereby directed and required to record the same forthwith, in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, in the words following, (giving a copy thereof to the said author or proprietor, under the seal of the court, if he shall require the same.) "District of ——— to wit: Be it remembered, That on the ——— day of ———, in the ——— year of the independence of the United States of America, A. B. of the said district hath deposited in this office the title of a map, chart, book, or books, (as the case may be,) the right whereof he claims as author or pro-prior, (as the case may be,) in the words following, to wit: [here insert the title] in conformity to the act of the Congress of the United States, entitled 'An act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies, during the times therein mentioned.' C. D. clerk of the district of _____ For which the said clerk shall be entitled to receive sixty cents from the said author or proprietor, and sixty cents for every copy under seal actually given to such author or proprietor as aforesaid. And such author or proprietor shall, within two months from the date thereof, cause a copy of the said record to be published in one or more of the newspapers printed in the United States, for the space of four weeks.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the author or proprietor of any such map, chart, book, or book, shall, within six months after the publishing thereof, deliver, or cause to be delivered to the Secretary of State a copy of the same, to be preserved in his office.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be construed to extend to prohibit the importation or vending, re-printing or publishing within the United States, of any map, chart, book, or books, written, printed, or published, by any person not a citizen of the United States, in foreign parts or places without the jurisdiction of the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons who shall print or publish any manuscript, without the consent and approbation of the author or proprietor thereof, first had and obtained as aforesaid, (if such author or proprietor be a citizen of, or resident in, these United States,) shall be liable to suffer and pay to the said author or proprietor all damages occasioned by such injury, to be recovered by a special action on the case founded upon this act, in any court having cognizance thereof.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall be sued or prosecuted for any matter, act or thing done under or by virtue of this act, he or they may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence.

Approved, May 31, 1790.

An Act for giving effect to an act, entitled, "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States" within the State of North Carolina.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act, entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," shall have the like force and effect within the State of North Carolina, as elsewhere within the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said State shall be one district, to be called North Carolina district; and there shall be a district court therein, to consist of one judge, who shall reside in the district, and be called a district judge, and shall hold annually four sessions; the first to commence on the first Monday in July next, and the other three sessions progressively on the like Monday of every third calendar month afterwards. The stated district court shall be held at the town of Newbern.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said district shall be, and the same is hereby, annexed to the southern circuit: And there shall be held annually in the said district two circuit courts; the first session of the circuit court shall commence on the eighteenth day of June next; the second session on the eighth day of November next, and the subsequent sessions on the like days of every June and November afterwards, except when any of the days shall happen on a Sunday; and then the session shall commence on the next day following. And the sessions of the said circuit courts shall be held at Newbern.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed to the judge of the said district the yearly compensation of fifteen hundred dollars, to commence from his appointment, and to be paid at the Treasury of the United States in quarterly payments.

Approved, June 4, 1790.

An Act supplemental to the act for establishing the salaries of the executive officers of Government, with their assistants and clerks.

Be it enacted, &c. That the more effectually to do and perform the duties in the Department of State, the Secretary of the said Department be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint an additional clerk in his office, who shall be allowed an equal salary, to be paid in the same manner as is allowed by law to the chief clerk.

Approved, June 4, 1790.

An Act for giving effect to the several acts therein mentioned, in respect to the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

Be it enacted, &c. That the several and respective duties specified and laid in and by the act, entitled "An act for laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States," and in and by the act, entitled "An act imposing duties on tonnage," shall be paid and collected upon all goods, wares, and merchandises, which, after the expiration of five days from the passing of this act, shall be imported into the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, from any foreign port or place, and upon the tonnage of all ships and vessels, which, after the said day, shall be entered within the said State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, subject to the exceptions, qualifications, allowances, and abatements, in the said acts contained or expressed, which acts shall be deemed to have the like force and operation within the said State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, as elsewhere within the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That for the due collection of the said duties, there shall be, in the said State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, two districts, to wit: the district of Newport, and the district of Providence. The district of Newport shall comprehend all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from the west line of the said State, all along the sea-coast, and northward, up the Narraganset bay, as far as the most easterly part of Kinnimicut Point, at high-water mark; and shall include the several towns, harbors, and landing places, at Westerly, Charlestown, South Kingstown, North Kingstown, East Greenwich, and all that part of the town of Warwick southward of the latitude of said Kinnimicut Point; and also the towns, harbors, and landing places, of Barrington, Warren, Bristol, Tiverton, Little Compton, and all the towns, harbors, and landing places, of the island of Rhode Island, Kinnimicut, Prudence, New Shoreham, and every other island and place within the said State, southward of the latitude of the said Kinnimicut Point. The district of Providence shall comprehend all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, within the said State, northward of the latitude of said Kinnimicut Point. The town of Newport shall be the sole port of entry in the said district of Newport; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall be appointed, to reside at the said town of Newport; and North Kingstown, East Greenwich, Barrington, Warren, Bristol, and Pawcatuck river, in Westerly, shall be ports of delivery only; and a surveyor shall be appointed, to reside at each of the ports of North Kingstown, East Greenwich, Warren, Bristol, and Pawcatuck river; and the surveyor to reside at Warren shall be surveyor for the port of Barrington. The town of Providence shall be the sole port of entry in the said district of Providence; and Patuxet, in the same district, shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall be appointed, to reside at Providence, and a surveyor shall be appointed, to reside at Patuxet.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all the regulations, provisions, exceptions, allowances, compensations, directions, authorities, penalties, forfeitures, and other matters whatsoever, contained or expressed in the act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States," and not locally inapplicable, shall have the like force and effect within the said State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, for the collection of the said duties, as elsewhere within the United States, and as if the same were repeated and re-enacted in this present act: Provided always, and be it declared, That the thirtieth section of the said act, and the third section of an act, entitled "An act to suspend part of an act, entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States, and for other purposes," did, by virtue of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, by the said State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, cease to operate in respect to the same.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the act, entitled "An act for registering and clearing vessels, regulating the coasting trade, and for other purposes," shall, after the expiration of five days from the passing of this act, have the like force and operation within the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, as elsewhere within the United States, and as if the several clauses thereof were repeated and re-enacted in this present act.

Approved, June 14, 1790.

An Act for giving effect to an act, entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States" within the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act, entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," shall have the like force and effect within the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, as elsewhere within the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said State shall be one district, to be called Rhode Island district: And there shall be a district court held therein, to consist of one judge, who shall reside in the district, and be called a district judge, and shall hold annually four sessions; the first to commence on the first Monday in August next, and the other three sessions progressively on the like Monday of every third calendar month afterwards. The stated district court shall be held alternately at the towns of Newport and Providence, beginning at the first.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said district shall be, and the same is hereby, annexed to the eastern circuit: And there shall be held annually in the said district two circuit courts; the first session of the circuit court shall commence on the fourth day of December next, the second session on the fourth day of June next, and the subsequent sessions on the like days of every December and June afterwards, except when any of the days shall happen on a Sunday, and then the session shall commence on the day following. And the sessions of the said circuit courts shall be held alternately at the said towns of Newport and Providence, beginning at the last.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed to the judge of the said district, the yearly compensation of eight hundred dollars, to commence from his appointment, and to be paid at the Treasury of the United States, in quarterly payments.

Approved, June 23, 1790.

An Act providing the means of intercourse between the United States and foreign nations.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States shall be, and he hereby is, authorized to draw from the Treasury of the United States a sum not exceeding forty thousand dollars annually, to be paid out of the moneys arising from the duties on imports and tonnage; for the support of such persons as he shall commission to serve the United States in foreign parts, and for the expense incident to the business in which they may be employed: Provided, That exclusive of an outfit, which shall in no case exceed the amount of one year's full salary to the Minister Plenipotentiary, or Chargé des Affaires, to whom the same may be allowed, the President shall not allow to any Minister Plenipotentiary a greater sum than at the rate of nine thousand dollars per annum, as a compensation for all his personal services and other expenses; nor a greater sum for the same than four thousand five hundred dollars per annum to a Chargé des Affaires; nor a greater sum for the same than one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars per annum to the secretary of any Minister Plenipotentiary. And provided also, That the President shall account specifically for all such expenditures of the said money as in his judgment may be made public, and also for the amount of such expenditures as he may think it advisable not to specify, and cause a regular statement and account thereof to be laid before Congress annually, and also lodged in the proper office of the Treasury Department.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue and be in force for the space of two years, and from thence until the end of the next session of Congress thereafter, and no longer.

Approved, July 1, 1790.

An Act for giving effect to an act, entitled "An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States," in respect to the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act passed the present session of Congress, entitled "An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States," shall be deemed to have the like force and operation within the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, as elsewhere within the United States; and all the regulations, provisions, directions, authorities, penalties, and other matters whatsoever, contained or expressed in the said act, and which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the like force and effect within the said State, as if the same were repeated and re-enacted in and by this present act.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the marshal of the district of Rhode Island shall receive, in full compensation for the performance of all the duties and services confided to and enjoined upon him by this act, one hundred dollars.

Approved, July 5, 1790.

An Act to authorize the purchase of a tract of land for the use of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, and he is hereby authorized, to cause to be purchased for the use of the United States, the whole or such part of that tract of land situate in the State of New York, commonly called West Point, as shall be by him judged requisite, for the purpose of such fortifications and garrisons as may be necessary for the defence of the same.

Approved, July 5, 1790.

An act further to provide for the payment of the invalid pensioners of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the military pensions which have been granted and paid by the States, respectively, in pursuance of former acts of the United States in Congress assembled, and such as, by acts passed in the present session of Congress, are, or shall be declared to be due to invalids who were wounded and disabled during the late war, shall be continued and paid by the United States, from the fourth day of March last, for the space of one year, under such regulations as the President of the United States may direct.

Approved, July 16, 1790.

An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That a district of territory, not exceeding ten miles square, to be located as hereafter directed, on the river Potomac, at some place between the mouths of the Eastern Branch and Connocheague, be, and the same is hereby, accepted for the permanent seat of Government of the United States: Provided, nevertheless, That the operation of the laws of the State within such district shall not be affected by this acceptance, until the time fixed for the removal of the Government thereto, and until Congress shall otherwise by law provide.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized to appoint, and by supplying vacancies happening from refusals to act or other causes, to keep in appointment as long as may be necessary, three commissioners, who, or any two of whom, shall, under the direction of the President, survey, and by proper metes and bounds define and limit a district of territory, under the limitations above mentioned; and the district so defined, limited, and located, shall be deemed the district accepted by this act, for the permanent seat of the Government of the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it enacted, That the said commissioners, or any two of them, shall have power to purchase or accept such quantity of land on the eastern side of the said river, within the said district, as the President shall deem proper for the use of the United States, and according to such plans as the President shall approve, the said commissioners, or any two of them, shall, prior to the first Monday in December, in the year one thousand eight hundred, provide suitable buildings for the accommodation of Congress, and of the President, and for the public offices of the Government of the United States.

Sec. 4. And be it enacted, That for defraying the expense of such purchases and buildings, the President of the United States be authorized and requested to accept grants of money.

Sec. 5. And be it enacted, That prior to the first Monday in December next, all offices attached to the seat of Government of the United States, shall be removed to, and until the said first Monday in December, in the year one thousand eight hundred, shall remain at the city of Philadelphia.

delphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, at which place the session of Congress next ensuing the present shall be held.

Sec. 6. And be it enacted, That on the said first Monday in December, in the year one thousand eight hundred, the seat of the Government of the United States shall, by virtue of this act, be transferred to the district and place aforesaid. And all offices attached to the seat of Government shall accordingly be removed thereto by their respective holders, and shall, after the said day, cease to be exercised elsewhere; and that the necessary expense of such removal shall be defrayed out of the duties on imposts and tonnage, of which a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated.

Approved, July 16, 1790.

An Act for the government and regulation of seamen in the merchant service.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the first day of December next, every master or commander of any ship or vessel bound from a port in the United States to any foreign port, or of any ship or vessel of the burden of fifty tons or upwards, bound from a port in one State to a port in any other than an adjoining State, shall, before he proceed on such voyage, make an agreement in writing, or in print, with every seaman or mariner on board such ship or vessel, (except such as shall be apprenticed or servant to himself or owners,) declaring the voyage or voyages, term or terms of time, for which such seamen or mariners shall be shipped. And if any master or commander of such ship or vessel shall carry out any seamen or mariners (except apprentices or servants as aforesaid) without such contract or agreement being first made and signed by the seamen and mariners, such master or commander shall pay to every such seaman or mariner the highest price or wages which shall have been given at the port or place where such seamen or mariner shall have been shipped, for a similar voyage, within three months next before the time of such shipping: Provided, such seaman or mariner shall perform such voyage; or if not, then for such time as he shall continue to do duty on board such ship or vessel; and shall moreover forfeit twenty dollars for every such seaman or mariner, one half to the use of the person prosecuting for the same, the other half to the use of the United States: and such seaman or mariner, not having signed such contract, shall not be bound by the regulations, nor subject to the penalties and forfeitures contained in this act.

Sec. 2. And be it enacted, That at the foot of every such contract, there shall be a memorandum in writing of the day and the hour on which such seaman or mariner, who shall so ship and subscribe, shall render themselves on board, to begin the voyage agreed upon. And if any such seaman or mariner shall neglect to render himself on board the ship or vessel, for which he has shipped, at the time mentioned in such memorandum; and if the master, commander, or other officer of the ship or vessel, shall, on the day on which such neglect happened, make an entry in the log-book of such ship or vessel, of the name of such seaman or mariner, and shall in like manner note the time that he so neglected to render himself, (after the time appointed,) every such seaman or mariner shall forfeit, for every hour which he shall so neglect to render himself, one day's pay, according to the rate of wages agreed upon, to be deducted out of his wages. And if any such seaman or mariner shall wholly neglect to render himself on board of such ship or vessel, or having rendered himself on board, shall afterwards desert and escape, so that the ship or vessel proceed to sea without him, every such seaman or mariner shall forfeit and pay to the master, owner, or consignee, of the said ship or vessel, a sum equal to that which shall have been paid to him by advance at the time of signing the contract, over and besides the sums so advanced, both which sums shall be recoverable in any court, or before any justice or justices of any State, city, town, or county, within the United States, which, by the laws thereof, have cognizance of debts of equal value, against such seaman or mariner, or his surety or sureties, in case he shall have given surety to proceed the voyage.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That if the mate, or first officer under the master, and a majority of the crew of any ship or vessel, bound on a voyage to any foreign port, shall, after the voyage is begun, (and before the ship or vessel shall have left the land,) discover that the said ship or vessel is too leaky, or is otherwise unfit in her crew, body, tackle, apparel, furniture, provisions, or stores, to proceed on the intended voyage, and shall require such unfitness to be inquired into, the master or commander shall, upon the request of the said mate, (or other officer,) and such majority, forthwith proceed to, or stop at the nearest or most convenient port or place where such inquiry can be made, and shall there apply to the judge of the district court, if he shall there reside, or if not, to some justice of the peace of the city, town, or place, taking with him two or more of the said crew who shall have made such request; and thereupon such judge or justice is hereby authorized and required to issue his precept, directed to three persons in the neighborhood, the most skillful in maritime affairs that can be procured, requiring them to repair on board such ship or vessel, and to examine the same, in respect to the defects and insufficiencies complained of, and to make report to him, the said judge or justice, in writing, under their hands, or the hands of two of them, whether in any, or in what respect the said ship or vessel is unfit to proceed on the intended voyage, and what addition of men, provisions, or stores, or what repairs or alterations in the body, tackle, or apparel, will be necessary; and upon such report the said judge or justice shall adjudge and determine, and shall endorse on the said report his judgment, whether the said ship or vessel is fit to proceed on the intended voyage; and if not, whether such repairs can be made, or deficiencies supplied, where the ship or vessel then lays, or whether it be necessary for the said ship or vessel to return to the port from whence she first sailed, to be there refitted, and the master and crew shall in all things conform to the said judgment; and the master or commander shall, in the first instance, pay all the costs of such view, report and judgment, to be taxed and allowed on a fair copy thereof, certified by the said judge or justice. But if the complaint of the said crew shall appear upon the said report and judgment to have been without foundation, then the said master, or the owner or consignee of such ship or vessel, shall deduct the amount thereof, and of reasonable damages for the detention, (to be ascertained by the said judge or justice,) out of the wages growing due to the complaining seamen or mariners. And if, after such judgment, such ship or vessel is fit to proceed on her intended voyage, or after procuring such men, provisions, stores, repairs, or alterations, as may be directed, the said seamen or mariners, or either of them, shall refuse to proceed on the voyage, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit by warrant, under his hand and seal, every such seaman or mariner (who shall so refuse) to the common jail of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until he shall have paid double the sum advanced to him at the time of subscribing the contract for the voyage, together with such reasonable costs as shall be allowed by the said justice, and inserted in the said warrant, and the surety or sureties of such seaman or mariner (in case he or they shall have given any) shall remain liable for such payment; nor shall any such seaman or mariner be discharged upon any writ of habeas corpus or otherwise, until such sum be paid by him or them, or his or their surety or sureties, for want of any form of commitment, or other previous proceedings: Provided, That sufficient matter shall be made to appear, upon the return of such habeas corpus, and an examination then to be had, to detain him for the causes herein before assigned.

Sec. 4. And be it enacted, That if any person shall harbor or secrete any seaman or mariner belonging to any ship or vessel, knowing them to belong thereto, every such person, on conviction thereof before any court in the city, town, or county, where he, she, or they, may reside, shall forfeit and pay ten dollars for every day which he, she, or they, shall so continue to harbor or secrete such seaman or mariner, one half to the use of the person prosecuting for the same, the other half to the use of the United States; and no sum exceeding one dollar shall be recoverable from any seaman or mariner by any one person, for any debt contracted during the time such seaman or mariner shall actually belong to any ship or vessel, until the voyage for which such seaman or mariner engaged shall be ended.

Sec. 5. And be it enacted, That if any seaman or mariner, who shall have subscribed such contract as is herein before described, shall absent himself from on board the ship or vessel in which he shall have so shipped, without leave of the master or officer commanding on board, and the mate, or other officer, having charge of the logbook, shall make an entry therein of the name of such seaman or mariner, on the day on which he shall so absent himself, and if such seaman or mariner shall return to his duty within forty-eight hours, such seaman or mariner shall forfeit three days' pay for every day which he shall so absent himself, to be deducted out of his wages; but if any seaman or mariner shall absent himself for more than forty-eight hours at one time, he shall forfeit all the wages due to him, and all his goods and chattels which were on board the said ship or vessel, or in any store where they may have been lodged at the time of his desertion, to the use of the owners of the ship or vessel, and moreover shall be liable to pay to him or them all damages which he or they may sustain by being obliged to hire other seamen or mariners in his or their place, and such damages shall be recovered with costs, in any court, or before any justice or justices having jurisdiction of the recovery of debts to the value of ten dollars or upwards.

Sec. 6. And be it enacted, That every seaman or mariner shall be entitled to demand and receive from the master or commander of the ship or vessel to which they belong, one-third part of the wages which shall be due to him at every port where such ship or vessel shall unlade and deliver her cargo, before the voyage be ended, unless the contrary be expressly stipulated in the contract; and as soon as the voyage is ended, and the cargo or ballast be fully discharged at the last port of delivery, every seaman or mariner shall be entitled to the wages which shall be then due according to his contract; and if such wages shall not be paid within ten days after such discharge, or if any dispute shall arise between the master and seamen or mariners, touching said wages, it shall be lawful for the judge of the district where the said ship or vessel shall be, or in case his residence be more than three miles from the place, or of his absence from the place of his residence, then, for any judge or justice of the peace, to summon the master of said ship or vessel to appear before him, to show cause why process should not issue against such ship or vessel, her tackle, furniture, and apparel, according to the course of admiralty courts, to answer for the said wages; and if the master shall neglect to appear, or appearing, shall not show that the wages are paid, or otherwise satisfied or forfeited, and if the matter in dispute shall not be forthwith settled, in such case the judge or justice shall certify to the clerk of the court of the district, that there is sufficient cause of complaint whereon to found admiralty process, and thereupon the clerk of such court shall issue process against the said ship or vessel, and the suit shall be proceeded on in the said court, and final judgment be given according to the course of admiralty courts in such cases used; and in such suit all the seamen or mariners (having cause of complaint of the like kind against the same ship or vessel) shall be joined as complainants; and it shall be incumbent on the master or commander to produce the contract and log-book, if required, to ascertain any matters in dispute, otherwise the complainants shall be permitted to state the contents thereof, and the proof of the contrary shall lie on the master or commander; but nothing herein contained shall prevent any seaman or mariner from having or maintaining any action at common law for the recovery of his wages, or from immediate process out of any court having admiralty jurisdiction, where ever any ship or vessel may be found, in case she shall have left the port of delivery where her voyage ended, before payment of the wages, or in case she shall be about to proceed to sea before the end of the ten days next after the delivery of her cargo or ballast.

Sec. 7. And be it enacted, That if any seaman or mariner, who shall have signed a contract to perform a voyage, shall, at any port or place, desert, or shall absent himself from such ship or vessel, without leave of the master, or officer commanding in the absence of the master, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace within the United States, (upon the complaint of the master,) to issue his warrant to apprehend such deserter, and bring him before such justice; and if it shall then appear by due proof that he has signed a contract within the intent and meaning of this act, and that the voyage agreed for is not finished, altered, or the contract otherwise dissolved, and that such seaman or mariner has deserted the ship or vessel, or absented himself without leave, the said justice shall commit him to the house of correction, or common jail of the city, town, or place, there to remain until the said ship or vessel shall be ready to proceed on her voyage, or till the master shall require his discharge, and then to be delivered to the said master, he paying all the cost of such commitment, and deducting the same out of the wages due to such seaman or mariner.

Sec. 8. And be it enacted, That every ship or vessel belonging to a citizen or citizens of the United States, of the burden of one hundred and fifty tons or upwards, navigated by ten or more persons in the whole, and bound on a voyage without the limits of the United States, shall be provided with a chest of medicine, put up by some apothecary of known reputation, and accompanied by directions for administering the same; and the said medicines shall be examined by the same, or some other apothecary, once at least in every year, and supplied with fresh medicines in the place of such as shall have been used or spoiled; and in default of having such medicine chest so provided, and kept fit for use, the master or commander of such ship or vessel shall provide and pay for all such advice, medicine, or attendance of physicians, as any of the crew shall stand in need of in case of sickness, at every port or place where the ship or vessel may touch or trade during the voyage, without any deduction from the wages of such sick seaman or mariner.

Sec. 9. And be it enacted, That every ship or vessel, belonging as aforesaid, bound on a voyage across the Atlantic ocean, shall, at the time of leaving the last port from whence she sails, have on board, well secured under deck, at least sixty gallons of water, one hundred pounds of salted flesh meat, and one hundred pounds of wholesome ship bread, for every person on board such ship or vessel, over and besides such other provisions, stores, and live stock, as shall, by the master or passengers, be put on board, and in like proportion for shorter or longer voyages; and in case the crew of any ship or vessel, which shall not have been so provided, shall be put upon short allowance in water, flesh, or bread, during the voyage, the master or owner of such ship or vessel shall pay to each of the crew one day's wages beyond the wages agreed on for every day they shall be so put to short allowance, to be recovered in the same manner as their stipulated wages.

Approved, July 20, 1790.

An act imposing duties on the tonnage of ships or vessels.

Be it enacted, &c., That upon all ships or vessels which, after the first day of September next, shall be entered in the United States from any foreign port or place, there shall be paid the several and respective duties following, that is to say: On ships or vessels of the United States, at the rate of six cents per ton; on ships or vessels built within the United States after the twentieth day of July last, but belonging wholly or in part to subjects of foreign Powers, at the rate of thirty cents per ton; on other ships or vessels at the rate of fifty cents per ton.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid duty of six cents per ton shall be also paid upon every ship or vessel of the United States, which, after the said first day of September next, shall be entered in a district in one State from a district in another State, other than an adjoining State on the sea-coast, or on a navigable river, having on board goods, wares, and merchandise, taken in one State to be delivered in another State: Provided, That it shall not be paid on any ship or vessel having a license to trade between the different districts of the United States, or to carry on the bank or whale fisheries whilst employed therein, more than once a year.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That upon every ship or vessel not of the United States, which, after the said first day of September next, shall be entered in one district from another district, having on board goods, wares, and merchandise, taken in one district to be delivered in another district, there shall be paid at the rate of fifty cents per ton.

And whereas, it is declared by the twenty-third section of the act, entitled "An act for registering and clearing vessels, regulating the coasting trade, and for other purposes," that if any vessel of the burden of twenty tons or upwards, not having a certificate of registry or enrolment, and a license, shall be found trading between different districts, or be employed in the bank or whale fisheries, every such ship or vessel shall be subject to the same tonnage and fees as foreign ships or vessels," which, from the impracticability in some cases of obtaining licenses in due season, and from misapprehension in others, has operated to the prejudice of individuals. And it being proper that relief should be granted in cases where the strict operation of new laws may have occasioned hardship and inconvenience.

Sec. 4. Be it therefore further enacted, That in all cases in which the said foreign duty shall have been heretofore paid on ships or vessels of the United States, whether registered at the time of payment or afterwards, restitution thereof shall be made, and that no such foreign duty shall hereafter be demanded on the said ships or vessels.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the act, entitled "An act imposing duties on tonnage," shall, after the said first day of September next, be repealed, and shall thenceforth cease to operate, except as to the collection of the duties which shall have accrued prior to the said repeal, for which purpose the said act shall continue in force.

Approved, July 20, 1790.

An act providing for holding a treaty of treaties to establish peace with certain Indian tribes.

Be it enacted, &c., That in addition to the balance unexpended, of the sum of twenty thousand dollars, appropriated by the act entitled "An act providing for the expenses which may attend negotiations or treaties with the Indian tribes, and the appointment of commissioners for managing the same," a further sum, not exceeding twenty thousand dollars, arising from the duties on imports and tonnage, shall be, and the same is hereby appropriated, for defraying the expenses of negotiating and holding a treaty or treaties, and for promoting a friendly intercourse, and preserving peace with the Indian tribes.

Approved, July 22, 1790.

An Act to amend the act for the establishment and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers.

Be it enacted, &c., That all expenses which shall accrue, from and after the fifteenth day of August next, for the necessary support, maintenance, and repairs, of all light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, within the United States, shall continue to be defrayed by the United States, until the first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, notwithstanding such light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, with the lands and tenements thereunto belonging, and the jurisdiction of the same, shall not in the mean time, be ceded to or vested in the United States, by the State or States respectively in which the same may be, and that the said time be further allowed to the States respectively to make such cessions.

Approved, July 22, 1790.

An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes.

Be it enacted, &c., That no person shall be permitted to carry on any trade or intercourse with the Indian tribes, without a license for that pur-citizen or inhabitant of the United States, or of either of the territorial districts of the United States, shall go into any town, settlement, or territory, belonging to any nation or tribe of Indians, and shall there commit any crime upon, or trespass against, the person or property of any peaceable and friendly Indian or Indians, which, if committed within the jurisdiction of any State, or within the jurisdiction of either of the said districts, against a citizen or white inhabitant thereof, would be punishable by the laws of such State or district, such offender or offenders shall be subjected to the same punishment, and shall be proceeded against in the same manner, as if the offence had been committed within the jurisdiction of the State or district to which he or they may belong, against a citizen or white inhabitant thereof.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That for any of the crimes or offences aforesaid, the like proceedings shall be had for apprehending, imprisoning, or bailing, the offender, as the case may be, and for recognising the witnesses for their appearance to testify in the case, and where the offender shall be committed, or the witnesses shall be in a district other than that in which the offence is to be tried, for the removal of the offender and the witnesses, or either of them, as the case may be, to the district in which the trial is to be had, as by the act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, are directed for any crimes or offences against the United States.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That this act shall be in force for the term of two years, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, July 22, 1790.

An Act making provision for the debt of the United States.

Whereas justice, and the support of public credit require that provision should be made for fulfilling the engagements of the United States, in respect of their foreign debt, and for funding their domestic debt upon equitable and satisfactory terms:

Be it enacted, &c., That reserving out of the moneys which have arisen since the last day of December last, past, and which shall hereafter arise from the duties on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels, the yearly sum of six hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be appropriated from time to time, towards the support of the Government of the United States, and their common defence, the residue of the said moneys, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as the same shall be received in each year, next after the sum reserved as aforesaid, shall be, and is hereby appropriated to the payment of the interest which shall from time to time become due on the loans heretofore made by the United States in foreign countries; and also to the payment of interest on such further loans as may be obtained for discharging the arrears of interest thereupon, and the whole or any part of the principal thereof; to continue so appropriated until the said loans, as well as those already made as those already made in virtue of this act, shall be fully satisfied, pursuant to the contrary relating to the same, any law to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to annul or alter any appropriation by law made prior to the passing of this act.

And as new loans are, and will be, necessary for the payment of the aforesaid arrears of interest, and the instalments of the principal of the said foreign debt due, and growing due, and may also be found expedient for effecting an entire alteration in the state of the same:

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be borrowed, on behalf of the United States, a sum or sums, not exceeding in the whole twelve millions of dollars; and that so much of this sum as may be necessary to the discharge of the said arrears and instalments, and (if it can be effected upon terms advantageous to the United States) to the paying off the whole of the said foreign debt, be appropriated solely to those purposes: And the President is moreover further authorized to cause to be made such other contracts respecting the said debt as shall be found for the interest of the said States: Provided nevertheless, That no engagement or contract shall be entered into, which shall preclude the United States from reimbursing any sum or sums borrowed within fifteen years after the same shall have been lent or advanced.

And whereas, it is desirable to adapt the nature of the provision to be made for the domestic debt to the present circumstances of the United States, as far as it shall be found practicable, consistently with good faith and the rights of the creditors, which can only be done by a voluntary loan on their part:

Sec. 3. Be it therefore further enacted, That a loan to the full amount of the said domestic debt be, and the same is hereby proposed; and that books for receiving subscriptions to the said loan be opened at the Treasury of the United States, and by a commissioner to be appointed in each of the said States, on the first day of October next, to continue open until the last day of September following, inclusively; and that the sums which shall be subscribed thereto, be payable in certificates issued for the said debt, according to their specie value, and computing the interest upon such as bear interest to the last day of December next, inclusively; which said certificates shall be of these several descriptions, to wit:

Those issued by the Register of the Treasury
Those issued by the commissioners of loans in the several States, including certificates given pursuant to the act of Congress of the second January, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine, for bills of credit of the several emissions of the twentieth of May, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven, and the eleventh of April, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-eight ;

Those issued by the commissioners for the adjustment of the accounts of the quartermaster, commissary, hospital, clothing, and marine departments ;

Those issued by the commissioners for the adjustment of accounts in the respective States;
Those issued by the late and present paymaster general, or commissioner of army accounts;
Those issued for the payment of interest, commonly called indents of interest;
And in the bills of credit issued by the authority of the United States in Congress assembled, at the rate of one hundred dollars in the said bills, for one dollar in specie.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That for the whole or any part of any sum subscribed to the said loan, by any person or persons, or body politic, which shall be paid in the principal of the said domestic debt, the subscriber or subscribers shall be entitled to a certificate, purporting that the United States owe to the holder or holders thereof, his, her, or their assigna, a sum to be expressed therein, equal to two-thirds of the sum so paid, bearing an interest of six per centum per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and subject to redemption by payments, not exceeding in one year, on account of both principal and interest, the proportion of eight dollars upon a hundred of the sums mentioned in such certificate; and to another certificate, purporting that the United States owe to the holder or holders thereof, his, her, or their assigna, a sum to be expressed therein, equal to the proportion of thirty-three dollars and one-third of a dollar upon a hundred of the sum so paid, which, after the year one thousand eight hundred, shall bear an interest of six per centum per annum, payable quarter yearly, and subject to redemption by payments not exceeding in one year, on account both of the principal and interest, the proportion of eight dollars upon a hundred of the sum mentioned in such certificate: Provided, That it shall not be understood that the United States shall be bound or obliged to redeem in the proportion aforesaid; but it shall be understood only that they have a right so to do.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That for the whole, or any part of any sum subscribed to the said loan, by any person or persons, or body politic, which shall be paid in the interest of the said domestic debt, computed to the said last day of December next, or in the said certificates issued in payment of interest, commonly called indents of interest, the subscriber or subscribers shall be entitled to a certificate, purporting that the United States owe to the holder or holders thereof, his, her, or their assigns, a sum to be specified therein, equal to that by him, her, or them, so paid, bearing an interest of three per centum per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and subject to redemption by payment of the sum specified therein, whenever provision shall be made by law for that purpose.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the stock which shall be created pursuant to this act, shall be transferable only on the books of the Treasury, or of the said commissioners respectively, upon which the credit for the same shall exist at the time of transfer, by the proprietor or proprietors of such stock, his, her, or their attorney; but it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, by special warrant, under his hand and the seal of the Treasury, countersigned by the Comptroller, and registered by the Register, at the request of the respective proprietors, to authorize the transfer of such stock from the books of one commissioner to those of another commissioner, or to those of the Treasury, and from those of the Treasury to those of a commissioner.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the interest upon the said stock, as the same shall become due, shall be payable quarter-yearly: that is to say, one-fourth part thereof on the last day of March; one other fourth part thereof on the last day of June; one other fourth part thereof on the last day of September; and the remaining fourth part thereof on the last day of December in each year, beginning on the last day of March next ensuing; and payment shall be made wheresoever the credit for the said stock shall exist at the time such interest shall become due, that is to say: at the Treasury, if the credit for the same shall then exist on the books of the Treasury, or at the office of the commissioner, upon whose books such credit shall then exist. But if the interest for one quarter shall not be demanded before the expiration of a third quarter, the same shall be afterwards demandable only at the Treasury.

And, as it may happen that some of the creditors of the United States may not think fit to become subscribers to the said loan—

Sec. 9. Be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed in any wise to alter, abridge, or impair, the rights of those creditors of the United States, who shall not subscribe to the said loan, or the contracts upon which their respective claims are founded; but the said contracts and rights shall remain in full force and virtue.

And that such creditors may not be excluded from a participation in the benefit hereby intended to the creditors of the United States in general, while the said proposed loan shall be depending, and until it shall appear from the event thereof what further or other arrangements may be necessary respecting the said domestic debt :

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners who shall be appointed pursuant to this act, shall respectively be entitled to the following yearly salaries, that is to say: The commissioner for the State of New Hampshire, six hundred and fifty dollars; the commissioner for the State of Massachusetts, fifteen hundred dollars; the commissioner for the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, six hundred dollars; the commissioner for the State of Connecticut, one thousand dollars; the commissioner for the State of New York, fifteen hundred dollars; the commissioner for the State of New Jersey, seven hundred dollars; the commissioner for the State of Pennsylvania, fifteen hundred dollars; the commissioner for the State of Delaware, six hundred dollars; the commissioner for the State of Maryland, one thousand dollars; the commissioner for the State of Virginia, fifteen hundred dollars; the commissioner for the State of North Carolina, one thousand dollars; the com-from any public record, act, or document, shall appear, or can be ascertained for any purpose, other than expenditures for services or prosecution of the late war, and the defence of the United States, or for some part thereof during the same:

Sec. 14. Provided also, and be it further enacted, That if the total amount of the sums which shall be subscribed to the said loan in the debt of any State, within the time limited for receiving subscriptions thereto, shall exceed the sum by this act allowed to be subscribed within such State, the certificates and credits granted to the respective subscribers, shall bear such proportion to the sums by them respectively subscribed, as the total amount of the said sums shall bear to the whole sum so allowed to be subscribed in the debt of such State within the same. And every subscriber to the said loan shall, at the time of subscribing, deposit with the commissioner the certificates or notes to be loaned by him.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That for two-thirds of any sum subscribed to the said loan, by any person or persons, or body politic, which shall be paid in the principal and interest of the certificates or notes issued as aforesaid, by the respective States, the subscriber or subscribers shall be entitled to a certificate, purporting that the United States owe to the holder or holders thereof, or his, her, or their assigns, a sum to be expressed therein, equal to two-thirds of the aforesaid two-thirds, bearing an interest of six per centum per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and subject to redemption by payments, not exceeding in one year, on account both of principal and interest, the proportion of eight dollars upon a hundred of the sum mentioned in such certificate; and to another certificate, purporting that the United States owe to the holder or holders thereof, his, her, or their assigns, a sum to be expressed therein, equal to the proportion of thirty-three dollars, and one-third of a dollar upon a hundred of the said two-thirds of such sum so subscribed, which after the year one thousand eight hundred, shall bear an interest of six per centum per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and subject to redemption by payments, not exceeding, in one year, on account both of principal and interest, the proportion of eight dollars upon a hundred of the sum mentioned in such certificate; and that for the remaining third of any sum so subscribed, the subscriber or subscribers shall be entitled to a certificate, purporting that the United States owe to the holder or holders thereof, his, her, or their assigns, a sum to be expressed therein, equal to the said remaining third, bearing an interest of three per cent. per annum, payable quarter-yearly, and subject to redemption by payment of the sum specified therein, whenever provision shall be made by law for that purpose.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That the interest upon the certificates which shall be received in payment of the sums subscribed towards the said loan, shall be computed to the last day of the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, inclusively; and the interest upon the stock which shall be created by virtue of the said loan, shall commence or begin to accrue on the first day of the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, and shall be payable quarter-yearly, at the same time, and in like manner as the interest on the stock to be created by virtue of the loan above proposed in the domestic debt of the United States.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That if the whole sum allowed to be subscribed in the debt or certificates of any State as aforesaid, shall not be subscribed within the time for that purpose limited, such State shall be entitled to receive, and shall receive, from the United States, an interest per centum per annum, upon so much of the said sum as shall not have been so subscribed, equal to that which would have accrued on the deficiency, had the same been subscribed in trust for the non-subscribing creditors of such State, who are holders of certificates or notes, issued on account of services or supplies towards the prosecution of the late war, and the defence of the United States, or of some part thereof, to be paid in like manner as the interest on the stock which may be created by virtue of the said loan, and to continue until there shall be a settlement of accounts between the United States, and the individual States; and in case a balance shall then appear in favor of such State, until provision shall be made for the said balance.

But as certain States have respectively issued their own certificates, in exchange for those of the United States, whereby it might happen that interest might be twice payable on the same sums:

Sec. 18. Be it further enacted, That the payment of interest, whether to States or to individuals, in respect to the debt of any State, by which such exchange shall have been made, shall be suspended, until it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, that certificates issued for that purpose by such State, have been re-exchanged or redeemed, or until those which shall not have been re-exchanged or redeemed, shall be surrendered to the United States.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That so much of the debt of each State as shall be subscribed to the said loan, and the moneys (if any) that shall be advanced to the same pursuant to this act, shall be a charge against such State, in account with the United States.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That the moneys arising under the revenue laws, which have been, or during the present session of Congress may be passed, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be, and are hereby pledged and appropriated for the payment of the interest on the stock which shall be created by the loans aforesaid, pursuant to the provisions of this act, first paying that which shall arise on the stock created by virtue of the said first mentioned loan, to continue so pledged and appropriated, until the final redemption of the said stock, any law to the contrary notwithstanding, subject nevertheless to such reservations and priorities as may be requisite to satisfy the appropriations heretofore made and which, during the present session of Congress, may be made by law, including the sums hereinbefore reserved and appropriated; and to the end that the said moneys may be inviolably applied in conformity to this act, and may never be diverted to any other purpose, an account shall be kept of the receipts and disposition thereof, separate and distinct from the product of any other duties, imposts, excises, and taxes, whatever, except such as may be hereafter laid, to make good any deficiency which may be found in the product thereof, towards satisfying the interest aforesaid.

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That the faith of the United States be, and the same is hereby, pledged, to provide and appropriate hereafter, such additional and permanent funds as may be requisite towards supplying any such deficiency, and making full provision for the payment of the interest which shall accrue on the stock to be created by virtue of the loans aforesaid, in conformity to the terms thereof, respectively, and according to the tenor of the certificates to be granted for the same, pursuant to this act.

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That the proceeds of the sales which shall be made of lands in the western territory, now belonging, or that may hereafter belong, to the United States, shall be, and are hereby, appropriated towards sinking or discharging the debts, for the payment whereof the United States now are, or by virtue of this act may be, holden, and shall be applied solely to that use, until the said debts shall be fully satisfied.

Approved, August 4, 1790.

An Act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels.

Be it enacted, &c., That for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels, there shall be established and appointed, districts, ports, and officers, in manner following, to wit:

The State of New Hampshire shall be one district, to be called the district of Portsmouth, of which the town of Portsmouth shall be the sole port of entry; and the towns of Newcastle, Dover, and Exeter, ports of delivery only; but all ships or vessels bound to or from either of the said ports of delivery, shall first come to, enter, and clear at Portsmouth; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, for the said district, shall be appointed, to reside at Portsmouth.

In the State of Massachusetts shall be twenty districts and ports of entry, to wit: Newburyport, Gloucester, Salem, and Beverly, as one; Marblehead, Boston, and Charlestown, as one; Plymouth, Barnstable, Nantucket, Edgartown, New Bedford, Dighton, York, Biddeford, and Penobscot, as one; Portland, and Falmouth, as one; Bath, Wiscasset, Penobscot, Frenchman's Bay, Machias, and Passamaquoddy. To the district of Newburyport shall be annexed the several towns or landing places of Amesbury, Salisbury, and Haverhill, which shall be ports of delivery only; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, for the district, shall be appointed, to reside at Newburyport. To the district of Gloucester shall be annexed the town of Manchester, as a port of delivery only; and a collector and surveyor shall be appointed, to reside at Gloucester. To the district of Salem and Beverly shall be annexed the towns or landing places of Danvers and Ipswich, as ports of delivery only; and a collector, or naval officer, and surveyor, for the district, shall be appointed to reside at Salem, and a surveyor to reside at each of the towns of Beverly and Ipswich. To the district of Marblehead shall be annexed the town of Lynn, as a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Marblehead. To the district of Boston and Charlestown shall be annexed the towns or landing places of Medford, Cohasset, and Hingham, as ports of delivery only; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall be appointed, to reside at Boston. To the district of Plymouth shall be annexed the several towns or landing places of Scituate, Duxbury, and Kingston, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Plymouth. To the district of Barnstable shall be annexed the several towns or landing places of Sandwich, Falmouth, Harwich, Welfleet, Provincetown, and Chatham, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Barnstable. In the district of Nantucket the port of Sherbourne shall be the sole port of entry and delivery within the same; and a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Sherbourne. In the district of Edgartown a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Edgartown. To the district of New Bedford shall be annexed Westport, Rochester, and Wareham, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at New Bedford. To the district of Dighton shall be annexed Swansea and Freetown, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Dighton. To the district of York shall be annexed Kittery and Berwick, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at York. To the district of Biddeford and Pepperellborough shall be annexed Scarborough, Wells, Kennebunk, and Cape Porpoise, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Biddeford. To the district of Portland and Falmouth shall be annexed North Yarmouth and Brunswick, as ports of delivery only; and a collector and surveyor shall be appointed for the district, to reside at Portland. To the district of Bath shall be annexed Hallowell, Pittstown, and Topsham, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Bath. To the district of Wiscasset shall be annexed Bristol, Boothbay, Warren, Thomaston, and Waldoborough, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Wiscasset. To the district of Penobscot shall be annexed Frankfort, Sedgwick Point, and Deer Island, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Penobscot. To the district of Frenchman's Bay shall be annexed Union River, as a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Frenchman's Bay. For each of the districts of Machias and Passamaquoddy shall be appointed a collector, to reside at the said ports of Machias and Passamaquoddy respectively. The district of Newburyport shall include all the waters and shores from the State of New Hampshire to the north line of Ipswich. The district of Gloucester shall include all the waters and shores in the towns of Gloucester and Manchester. The district of Salem and Beverly shall include all the shores and waters within the towns of Ipswich, Beverly, Salem, and Danvers. The district of Marblehead shall include all the waters and shores within the towns of Marblehead and Lynn. The district of Boston and Charlestown shall include all the waters and shores within the counties of Middlesex and Suffolk. The district of Plymouth shall include all the waters and shores within the county of Plymouth, excepting the towns of Wareham and Rochester. The district of Barnstable shall include all the shores and waters within the county of Barnstable. The district of Nantucket shall include the island of Nantucket. The district of Edgartown shall include all the waters and shores within the county of Duke's county. The district of New Bedford shall include all the waters and shores within the towns of New Bedford, Dartmouth, Westport, Rochester, and Wareham, together with all the islands within the county of Bristol. The district of Dighton shall include all the waters and shores on Taunton river, and in the town of Rehoboth; and the collectors of the several districts within that part of the State of Massachusetts, eastward of New Hampshire, shall agree, as soon as may be, upon a divisional line between their respective districts, and transmit the same to the Comptroller of the Treasury; and such districts so agreed upon, shall include all the shores, waters, and islands within the same. And in case of disagreement between any of the said collectors, concerning such divisional line, the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the same.

In the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations there shall be two districts, to wit: The district of Newport, and the district of Providence. The district of Newport shall comprehend all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from the west line of the said State all along the seacoast, and northward up the Narragansett Bay, as far as the most easterly part of Kinnimicut Point, at high water mark; and shall include the several towns, harbors, and landing places, at Westerley, Charlestown, South Kingstown, North Kingstown, East Greenwich, and all that part of Warwick southward of the latitude of said Kinnimicut Point; and also the towns, harbors, and landing places of Barrington, Warren, Bristol, Tiverton, Little Crompton, and all the towns, harbors, and landing places of the island of Rhode Island; Jamestown, Prudence, New Shoreham, and every other island and place within the said State, southward of the latitude of the said Kinnimicut Point. The district of Providence shall comprehend all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, within the said State, northward of the latitude of Kinnimicut Point. The town of Newport shall be the sole port of entry in the said district of Newport; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall be appointed, to reside at the said town of Newport; and North Kingstown, East Greenwich, Barrington, Warren, Bristol, and Pawcatuck river, in Westerly, shall be ports of delivery only, and a surveyor shall be appointed, to reside at each of the ports of North Kingstown, East Greenwich, Warren, Bristol, and Pawcatuck river, and the surveyor to reside at Warren shall be surveyor for the port of Barrington. The town of Providence shall be the sole port of entry in the said district of Providence, and Patuxet in the same district shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall be appointed, to reside at Providence, and a surveyor shall be appointed to reside at Patuxet.

In the State of Connecticut shall be three districts, to wit: New London, New Haven, and Fairfield. The district of New London shall extend from the east line of the said State of Connecticut, to the west line of the town of Killingsworth, and north to the south line of the State of Massachusetts; and shall also include the several towns or landing places of Norwich, Stonington, Groton, Lyme, Saybrook, Haddam, East Haddam, Middletown, Chatham, Weathersfield, Glastonbury, Hartford, East Hartford, Windsor, East Windsor, and Killingsworth, as ports of delivery only; New London to be the sole port of entry; and a collector and surveyor for the district shall be appointed, to reside at New London; and a surveyor to reside at each of the ports of Stonington and Middletown. The district of New Haven shall extend from the west line of the district of New London, westerly to Ousatumnick river; to which shall be annexed the several towns or landing places of Guilford, Bradford, Milford, and Derby, as ports of delivery only; New Haven to be the sole port of entry; and a collector and surveyor for the district shall be appointed, to reside at New Haven. The district of Fairfield shall include all the ports and places in the said State of Connecticut west of the district of New Haven; to which shall be annexed the several towns or landing places of Norwalk, Stratford, Stamford, and Greenwich, as ports of delivery only; Fairfield to be the sole port of entry, and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Fairfield. and New London, New Haven, and Fairfield, shall severally be ports of entry.

In the State of New York shall be two districts, to wit: Sag Harbor on Nassau or Long Island, and the city of New York, each of which shall be a port of entry. The district of Sag Harbor shall include all bays, harbors, rivers, and shores within the two points of land which are called Oyster Pond Point, and Montauk Point; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Sag Harbor, which shall be the only place of delivery in the said district. The district of the city of New York shall include such part of the coasts, rivers, bays, and harbors of the said State, not included in the district of Sag Harbor; and moreover the several towns or landing places of New Windsor, Newburgh, Poughkeepsie, Esopus, city of Hudson Kinderhook, and Albany, as ports of delivery only; and a naval officer, collector, and surveyor, for the district shall be appointed, to reside in the city of New York; also two surveyors, one to reside at the city of Albany, and the other at the city of Hudson; and all ships or vessels bound to or from any port of delivery within the last named district, shall be obliged to come to, and enter or clear out at the city of New York.

In the State of New Jersey shall be four districts, to wit: Perth Amboy, Burlington, Bridge-town, and Great Egg Harbor, which shall severally be ports of entry. The district of Perth Amboy shall comprehend all that part of the State of New Jersey known by the name of East New Jersey, (that part excepted which is hereafter included in the district of Burlington,) together with all the waters thereof heretofore within the jurisdiction of the said State; in which district the towns or landing places of New Brunswick, Middletown Point, Elizabethtown, and Newark, shall be ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Perth Amboy. The district of Burlington shall comprehend that part of the said State known by the name of West New Jersey, which lies to the eastward and northward of the county of Gloucester, with all the waters thereof heretofore within the jurisdiction of the said State, including the river and inlet of Little Egg Harbor, with the waters emptying into the same, and the seacoast, sound, inlets, and harbors thereof, from Barnegat inlet to Brigantine inlets, in which district the landing places of Lambertton and Little Egg Harbor shall be ports of delivery only, and a collector shall be appointed for the district, to reside at Burlington, and a surveyor at Little Egg Harbor. The district of Bridge-town shall comprehend the counties of Gloucester, Salem, Cumberland, and Cape May, (such part of the counties of Gloucester and Cape May as shall be hereafter included in the district of Great Egg Harbor, excepted,) and all the waters thereof heretofore within the jurisdiction of the said State; and the town of Salem and Port Elizabeth, on Maurice river, shall be ports of delivery only; and a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Bridge-town. The district of Great Egg Harbor shall comprehend the river of Great Egg Harbor, together with all the inlets, bays, sound, rivers, and creeks, along the seacoast, from Brigantine inlet to Cape May; and a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Somers' Point, on the said river of Great Egg Harbor.

The State of Pennsylvania shall be one district, and Philadelphia shall be the sole port of entry and delivery for the same; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, for the district shall be appointed, to reside at the said port of Philadelphia.

The State of Delaware shall be one district, and the borough of Wilmington shall be the port of entry, to which shall be annexed New Castle and Port Penn, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed to reside at the said port of Wilmington.

In the State of Maryland shall be nine districts, to wit: Baltimore, Chester, Oxford, Vienna, Snow Hill, Annapolis, Nottingham, Cedar Point, and Georgetown. The district of Baltimore shall include Patuxet, Susquehanna, and Elk rivers, and all the waters and shores on the west side of Chesapeake Bay, from the mouth of Magetty river to the south side of Elk river, inclusive, in which Havre-de-Grace and Elkton shall be ports of delivery only; and a naval officer, collector, and surveyor, shall be appointed for the said district, to reside at the town of Baltimore, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Chester shall include Chester river, and all the waters and shores on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay, from the south side of Elk river to the north side of the eastern bay and Wye river, exclusive, in which Georgetown, on Susquehanna river, shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Chester, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Oxford shall include all the waters and shores on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay, from the north side of Wye river and the eastern bay, to the south side of Choptank river, inclusive, and Cambridge shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Oxford, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Vienna shall include all the waters and shores on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay, from the south side of Great Choptank river to the south side of Hooper's Strait, Haynes's Point, and Wicomico river, inclusive, and Salisbury shall be the port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Vienna, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Snow Hill shall include all the waters and shores on the sea-coast, from the north line of Virginia to the south line of Delaware, together with all the waters and shores on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay, from the south side of Wicomico river to the south side of Pocomoke river inclusive, so far as the jurisdiction of the said State of Maryland extends, to which Sin-nepuxent shall be a port of delivery for West India produce only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Snow Hill, which shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Annapolis shall include Magetty river, and all the waters and shores from thence to Drum Point, on Patuxet river; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Annapolis, which shall be the sole port of entry and delivery for the same. The district of Nottingham shall include all the waters and shores on the west side of Chesapeake Bay to Drum Point, on the river Patuxent, together with the said river, and all the navigable waters emptying into the same, to which Benedict, Lower Marlborough, Town Creek, and Silvey's Landing, shall be annexed as ports of delivery only; a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Nottingham, and a surveyor at Town creek; and Nottingham shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Cedar Point shall include all the waters of the State of Maryland, from Point Lookout to Pomomkey Creek, inclusive, to which Nanjemoy, Saint Mary's, and Lewellensburg, shall be annexed as a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Cedar Point; also a surveyor to reside at each of the ports of Saint Mary's and Lewellensburg; and Cedar Point shall be the sole port of entry. The district of Georgetown shall include all the waters and shores from Pomomkey creek, on the north side of Potomac river, to the head of the navigable waters of the said river, within the jurisdiction of the State of Maryland, to which Digges's Landing and Carrollsburg shall be annexed as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Georgetown, which shall be the sole port of entry.

In the State of Virginia shall be twelve districts, to wit: Hampton as one port; Norfolk and Portsmouth as one port; Bermuda Hundred and City Point as one port; Yorktown, Tappahannock, Yeocomico river, including Kinsale, Dumfries, including Newport, Alexandria, Folly Landing, Cherry-Stone, South Quay, and Louisville. The authority of the officers at Hampton shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, between the south side of the mouth of York river, along the west shore of Chesapeake bay to Hampton, and thence up James river to the west side of Chickahominy river; and a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Hampton, which shall be the sole port of entry. To the district of Norfolk and Portsmouth shall be annexed Suffolk and Smithfield, as ports of delivery only; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended within a line drawn from Cape Henry to the mouth of James river, and thence up James river to Jordan's Point, and up Elizabeth river to the highest tide water thereof, and Norfolk and Portsmouth shall be the sole port of entry; and a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Norfolk; also a surveyor to reside at each of the ports of Suffolk and Smithfield. To the district of Bermuda Hundred, or City Point, shall be annexed Richmond, Petersburg, and Manchester, as ports of delivery only; and a collector and surveyor shall be appointed, to reside at Bermuda Hundred, or City Point, which shall be the sole port of entry; also a surveyor for Petersburg, to reside thereat, and a surveyor for Richmond and Manchester, to reside at Richmond; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended between Jordan's Point and the highest tide water on James and Appamattox rivers. To the district of Yorktown shall be annexed West Point and Cumberland, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Yorktown, which shall be the sole port of entry; also a surveyor for the two ports of delivery, to reside at West Point; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended between the point forming the south shore of the mouth of Rappahannock river, and the point forming the south shore of the mouth of York river, and thence up said river to West Point, and thence up Pomomkey and Mattapony rivers to the highest navigable waters thereof. To the district of Tappahannock shall be annexed Urbanna, Port Royal, Fredericksburg, and Falmouth, as ports of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Tappahannock, which shall be the sole port of entry; also a surveyor for each of the ports of Urbanna, Port Royal, and Fredericksburg; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended between Smith's Point, at the mouth of Potomac river, and the point forming the south shore of the mouth of Rappahannock river, and thence up the last mentioned river to the highest tide water thereof. The district of Yeocomico river, including Kinsale, shall extend from Smith's Point, on the south side of Potomac river, to Boyd's Hole on the same river, including all the waters, shores, bays, rivers, creeks, harbors, and inlets, along the south shore of Potomac river to Boyd's Hole aforesaid; and Yeocomico, including Kinsale, shall be the sole port of entry, and a collector shall be appointed, to reside on Yeocomico river. The district of Dumfries, including Newport, shall extend from Boyd's Hole to Cockpit Point, on the south side of Potomac river; and a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Dumfries, which shall be the sole port of entry; and the authority of the officers of this district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended between Boyd's Hole and Cockpit Point aforesaid. For the district of Alexandria shall be appointed a collector and surveyor, to reside at Alexandria, which shall be the sole port of entry; and the authority of the officers of the said district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, on the south side of the river Potomac, from the last mentioned Cockpit Point to the highest tide water of the said river. For the district of Folly Landing shall be appointed a collector, who shall reside at Accomack Court-house, and whose authority shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, of the county of Accomack. For the district of Cherry Stone shall be appointed a collector, to reside at Cherry Stone, whose authority shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, comprehended within Northampton county. For the district of South Quay a collector shall be appointed, to reside thereat, whose authority shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, and inlets, in that part of Virginia comprehended within the limits of the said State. For the district of Louisville a collector shall be appointed, to reside thereat, whose authority shall extend over all the waters, shores, and inlets, included between the rapids and the mouth of the Ohio river, on the south side thereof.

In the State of North Carolina shall be five districts; one to be called the district of Wilmington, and to comprehend all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from Little River inlet, inclusive, to New River inlet, inclusive; another to be called the district of Newbern, and to comprehend all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from New River inlet, exclusive, to Ocracoke inlet, inclusive, together with that part of Pamlico sound that lies southward and westward of the shoal projecting from the mouth of Pamlico river towards the Royal Shoal, and southward of the said Royal Shoal. Another to be called the district of Washington, and to comprehend all that part of Pamlico sound not included in the district of Newbern, as far north as the marshes. Another to be called the district of Edenton, and to comprehend all the waters, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from the marshes, inclusive, northward and westward, except those included in the district of Camden. The other to be called the district of Camden, and to comprehend North River, Pasquotank and Little Rivers, and all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, from the junction of Currituck and Albemarle sounds to the north extremity of Back Bay.

That in the district of Wilmington, the town of Wilmington shall be a port of entry and delivery, and there shall be a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, to reside at the said town of Wilmington. That in the district of Newbern, the town of Newbern shall be a port of entry and delivery, and the towns of Beaufort and Swansborough shall be ports of delivery only; and there shall be a collector to reside at Newbern, and a surveyor to reside at Beaufort, and one at Swansborough. That in the district of Washington the town of Washington shall be the sole port of entry and delivery, and there shall be a collector to reside within the town of Edenton, and delivery, and there shall be a port of entry and delivery, and Hertford, Murfreesborough, Princeton, Winton, Bennet's Creek, Plymouth, Windsor, and Skewarkey, ports of delivery; and there shall be a collector to reside at the town of Edenton, and a surveyor at each of the ports of Hertford, Winton, Bennet's Creek, Plymouth, Windsor, and Skewarkey; and one at Murfreesborough, for said port and for Princeton. That all ships or vessels intending to proceed to Plymouth, Windsor, Skewarkey, Winton, Bennet's Creek bridge, Murfreesborough, or Princeton, shall first come to and enter at the port of Edenton. That in the district of Camden, Plankbridge on Sawyer's Creek shall be the port of entry and delivery, and Nixonton, Indiantown, Newbiggin Creek, Currituck Inlet, Pasquotank River bridge, ports of delivery; and there shall be a collector at Plankbridge on Sawyer's Creek, and a surveyor at each of the ports of Nixonton, Indiantown, Currituck inlet, Pasquotank River bridge, and Newbiggin Creek; and that the authority of the officers of each district shall extend over all the waters, shores, bays, harbors, creeks, and inlets, comprehended within such district. Provided, That any vessels coming in at Ocracoke inlet, that may be under the necessity of employing lighters before they pass the Royal Shoal, may be at liberty to enter at any port of entry connected with the waters of said inlet, to which such vessels are bound. And that any vessel coming in at the said inlet in ballast, with the purpose of loading without the Royal Shoal, shall be at liberty to enter at any port of entry connected with the waters of the said inlet.

In the State of South Carolina there shall be three districts, to wit: Georgetown, Charleston, and Beaufort, each of which shall be a port of entry. The district of Georgetown shall include the shores, inlets, and rivers, from the boundary of North Carolina to the point of Cape Romain. The district of Charleston shall include all the shores, inlets, and rivers, from Cape Romain to Combahee river inclusive; and the district of Beaufort shall include the shores, inlets, and rivers from Combahee river to Back river in Georgia, comprehending also the shores, inlets, and harbors formed by the different bars and sea islands lying within each district respectively. At the port of Charleston shall be a collector, naval officer, and surveyor; and a collector at each of the other ports.

In the State of Georgia shall be four districts, to wit: Savannah, Sunbury, Brunswick, and Saint Mary's, each of which shall be a port of entry. The district of Savannah shall include Savannah river, and all the waters, shores, harbors, rivers, creeks, bays, and inlets, from the river to the north point of Ossabaw island, and Great Ogeechee river, inclusive; and a naval officer, collector, and surveyor, shall be appointed for the said district, to reside at Savannah. The district of Sunbury shall comprehend all the waters, shores, harbors, rivers, creeks, bays, and inlets, south of the north point of Ossabaw island and Great Ogeechee river, exclusive, and north of the south point of Sapelo island, inclusive; and a collector shall be appointed to reside at Sunbury. The district of Brunswick shall comprehend all the waters, shores, harbors, rivers, creeks, bays, and inlets, from the south point of Sapelo island, exclusive, to the south point of Jekyll island inclusive; and a collector shall be a port of delivery only; and a collector for the district shall be appointed, to reside at Brunswick. The district of St. Mary's shall comprehend all the waters, shores, harbors, rivers, creeks, bays, and inlets, from the south point of Jekyll island, exclusive, to Saint Mary's river point of Jekyll island, exclusive, to Saint Mary's river inclusive; and a collector for the said district shall be appointed, to reside at Saint Mary's; and in each of the said districts it shall be lawful for the collector to grant a permit to unlade at any port or place within the district, and to appoint or put on board any ship or vessel for which a permit is granted, one or more searchers or inspectors, as may be necessary for the security of the revenue.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful to make entry of any ship or vessel which shall arrive from any foreign port or place within the United States, or of the cargo on board such ship or vessel, elsewhere than at one of the ports of entry hereinbefore established, nor to unlade the said cargo, or any part thereof, elsewhere than at one of the ports of delivery herein established. Provided always, That every port of entry shall be also a port of delivery. And provided further, That none but ships or vessels of the United States shall be admitted to unlade at any other than the ports following, to wit: Portsmouth, in the State of New Hampshire; Portland and Falmouth, New Bedford, Dighton, Salem, and Beverly, Gloucester, Newburyport, Marblehead, Sherburne, Boston, and Charlestown, Plymouth, Bath, Frenchman's Bay, Wiscasset, Machias, and Penobscot, in the State of Massachusetts; Newport and Providence, in the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations; New London and New Haven, in the State of Connecticut; New York, in the State of New York; Perth-Amboy and Burlington, in the State of New Jersey; Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania; Wilmington, Newcastle, and Port Penn, in the State of Delaware; Baltimore, Annapolis, Vienna, Oxford, Georgetown on Potomac, Chestertown, Towncreek, Nottingham, Cedar Point, Digges's Landing, Snowhill, and Carrolsbury, in the State of Maryland; Alexandria, Kingsale, Newport, Tappahannock, Port Royal, Fredericksburg, Urbanna, Yorktown, West Point, Hampton, Bermuda Hundred, City Point, Rock-et's Landing, Norfolk, and Portsmouth, in the State of Virginia; Wilmington, Newbern, Washington, Edenton, and Plankbridge, in the State of North Carolina; Charleston, Georgetown, and Beaufort, in the State of South Carolina; and in Brunswick, Frederica, and Saint Mary's in the State of Georgia; or to make entry in any other district than in one in which they shall be so admitted to unlade. And provided lastly, That no ship or vessel arriving from the Cape of Good Hope, or from any place beyond the same, shall be admitted to make entry at any other than the ports following, to wit: Portsmouth, in the State of New Hampshire; Boston and Charlestown, Newburyport, Salem, and Beverly, Gloucester, Portland, and Falmouth, in the State of Massachusetts; Newport and Providence, in the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations; New London and New Haven, in the State of Connecticut; New York, in the State of New York; Perth-Amboy, in the State of New Jersey; Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania; Wilmington, in the State of Delaware; Baltimore, Annapolis, and Georgetown, in the State of Maryland; Alexandria, Norfolk, and Portsmouth, in the State of Virginia; Wilmington, Newbern, Washington, and Edenton, in the State of North Carolina; Charleston, Georgetown, and Beaufort, in the State of South Carolina; and Sunbury and Savannah, in the State of Georgia: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the master or commander of any ship or vessel from making entry with the collector of any district in which such ship or vessel may be owned, or from which she may have sailed on the voyage from which she shall then have returned.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the master or commander of every ship or vessel bound to a port of delivery only, in any of the following districts, to wit: Portland and Falmouth, Bath, Newburyport, New London, (except the port of Stonington in the said district,) Norfolk and Portsmouth, Bermuda Hundred and City Point, Yorktown or Tappahannock, (except the port of Urbanna in the said district,) and Edenton, shall first come to at the port of entry of such district, with his ship or vessel, and there make report or entry, and pay, or secure to be paid, all legal duties, port fees, and charges, in manner by this act provided, before such ship or vessel shall proceed to her port of delivery; and that any ship or vessel bound to a port of delivery in any district other than those above mentioned, or to either of the ports of Stonington or Urbanna, may first proceed to her port of delivery, and afterwards make report or entry within the time by this act limited.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the master or commander of every ship or vessel, if bound to the district of Nottingham, shall, before he pass by the port of Town Creek, and immediately after his arrival, deposit with the surveyor of the said port, a true manifest of the cargo on board such ship or vessel; if bound to the district of Tappahannock, shall, before he pass by the port of Urbanna, and immediately after his arrival, deposit with the surveyor for that port a like manifest; if bound to the district of Bermuda Hundred or City Point, shall, before he pass by Elizabeth river, and immediately after his arrival, deposit with the collector of the port of Norfolk and Portsmouth, or with the collector of the port of Hampton, a like manifest; and if bound to the district of South Quay, shall, before he pass by the port of Edenton, and immediately after his arrival, deposit with the collector of the port of Edenton a like manifest. And the said surveyors and collectors respectively shall, after registering the manifests, transmit the same, duly certified to have been so deposited, to the officer with whom the entries are to be made. And if the master or commander of any ship or vessel shall neglect or omit to deposit a manifest in manner aforesaid, and as the case shall require, he shall forfeit and pay five hundred dollars, to be recovered with costs of suit, one half to the use of the officer with whom such manifest ought to have been deposited, and the other half to the use of the collector of the district to which the said ship or vessel may be bound. Provided, That if manifests shall have been in either of the said cases previously delivered to any officer of the customs, pursuant to the provision hereinafter to be made in that behalf, the depositing of a manifest as aforesaid shall not be necessary. And provided also, That no master of any ship or vessel which was absent from the United States on the first day of May last, and which hath not since returned within the same, or of any ship or vessel not owned wholly or in part by a citizen or inhabitant of the United States, shall incur the said penalty, if he shall make oath or affirmation that he had no knowledge of or information concerning the regulation herein contained, unless it can be otherwise proved that he had such knowledge or information.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all officers and persons to be appointed pursuant to this act, before they enter upon the duties of their respective offices, shall severally take an oath diligently and faithfully to execute the duties of their said offices respectively, and to use their best endeavors to prevent and detect frauds in relation to the duties imposed by the laws of the United States; which oath, if taken by a collector, may be taken before any magistrate authorized to administer oaths within the district to which he belongs; but if taken by another, shall be taken before the collector of his district, and being certified under the hand and seal of the person by whom the same shall have been administered, shall, within three months thereafter, be transmitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury; in default of taking which oath, the party failing shall forfeit and pay two hundred dollars, to be recovered with costs of suit, in any court of competent jurisdiction, to the use of the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That, the several officers of the customs shall respectively perform the duties following, to wit: at such of the ports to which there shall be appointed a collector, naval officer, and surveyor, the collector shall receive all reports, manifests, and documents, to be made or exhibited on the entry of any ship or vessel, according to the regulations of this act; shall record in books to be kept for that purpose, all such manifests; shall receive the entries of all ships and vessels, and of the goods, wares, and merchandise imported in them; shall, together with the naval officer, where there is one, or alone where there is none, estimate the amount of the duties payable thereupon, endorsing the said amount upon the respective entries; shall receive all moneys paid for duties, and take all bonds for securing the payment thereof; shall grant all permits for the unlading and delivery of goods; shall employ proper persons as weighers, gaugers, measurers, and inspectors at the several ports within his district; and shall provide at the public expense, and with the approbation of the principal officer of the Treasury Department, store-houses for the safe keeping of goods, and such scales, weights, and measures, as may be necessary. The naval officers shall receive copies of all manifests; shall, together with the collector, estimate the duties on all goods, wares, and merchandise subject to duty, keeping a separate record thereof; and shall countersign all permits, clearances, certificates, and debentures, to be granted by the collector. The surveyor shall superintend and direct all inspectors, weighers, measurers, and gaugers within his district; shall visit and inspect the ships or vessels which arrive within his district, and shall have power to put on board each of them one or more inspectors; shall ascertain the proofs of distilled spirits, rating those which shall be of the proof of twenty-four degrees as of Jamaica proof; and shall examine whether the goods imported in any ship or vessel, and the deliveries thereof, are conformable to the entries of such goods and the permits for landing the same; and the said surveyor shall in all cases be subject to the control of the collector. And at such ports to which a collector and surveyor only are assigned, the said collector shall solely execute all the duties in which the co-operation of the naval officer is requisite at the ports where a naval officer shall be appointed, which he shall also do in case of the disability or death of the naval officer. And at the ports to which a collector only is assigned, such collector shall solely execute all the duties in which the co-operation of the naval officer is requisite as aforesaid; and shall also, as far as may be, perform all the duties prescribed to surveyors at the ports where such officers are established. And at ports to which surveyors only are assigned, every such surveyor shall perform all the duties herein before enjoined upon surveyors; and shall also receive and record the copies of all manifests which shall be transmitted to him by the collector; shall record all permits granted by such collector, distinguishing the gauge, weight, measure, and quality of the goods specified therein; and shall take care that no goods be unladed or delivered from any ship or vessel without a proper permit for that purpose. And at such ports of delivery only to which no surveyor is assigned, it shall be lawful for the collector of the district occasionally, and from time to time, to employ a proper person or persons to do the duties of a surveyor, who shall be entitled to the like compensation with inspectors, during the time they shall be employed. And the said collectors, naval officers, and surveyors, shall respectively attend in person at the ports at which they are respectively assigned; and shall keep fair and true accounts and records of all their transactions as officers of the customs, in such manner and form as may be directed by the proper department, or officer having the superintendence of the collection of the revenue of the United States; and shall, at all times, submit their books, papers, and accounts, to the inspection of such persons as may be appointed for that purpose. And the said collectors shall at all times pay to the order of the officer who shall be authorized to direct the payment thereof, the whole of the moneys which they may respectively receive by virtue of this act (such moneys as they are otherwise by this act directed to pay only excepted); and shall also once in every three months, and oftener if they shall be required, transmit their accounts for settlement to the officer or officers whose duty it shall be to make such settlement.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, in cases of occasional and necessary absence, or of sickness, and not otherwise, may respectively exercise and perform their several powers, functions, and duties, by deputy, duly constituted under their hands and seals respectively, for whom in the execution of the trust they shall respectively be answerable.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That in case of the disability or death of a collector, the duties and authorities vested in him shall devolve on his deputy, if any there be at the time of such disability or death, (for whose conduct the estate of such disabled or deceased collector shall be liable;) and in defect of a deputy, the said authorities and duties shall devolve upon the naval officer of the same district, if any there be; and if there be no naval officer, upon the surveyor of the port appointed for the residence of such disabled or deceased collector, if any there be; and if none, upon the surveyor of the port nearest thereto, and within the same district. And in every case of the death or disability of a surveyor, it shall be lawful for the collector of the district to nominate some fit person to perform his duties and exercise his authorities. And the authorities of the person hereby empowered to act in the stead of those who may be disabled or dead, shall continue until successors shall be duly appointed, and ready to enter upon the execution of their respective offices.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the first day of October next, no goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be brought into the United States from any foreign port or place in any ship or vessel belonging in the whole or in part to a citizen or citizens, inhabitant or inhabitants, of the United States, unless the master or person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel shall have on board a manifest or manifests in writing, signed by such master or other person, containing the name or names of the port or ports, place or places, where the goods in such manifest or manifests mentioned, shall have been respectively taken on board, and the port or ports, place or places, within the United States for which the same are respectively consigned or destined, and the name and build of such ship or vessel, and the true admeasurement or tonnage thereof according to the register of the same, together with the name of the master or other person having the command or charge of such ship or vessel, and the port or place to which such ship or vessel truly belongs, and a just and particular account of all the cargo so laden or taken on board, whether in packages or stowed loose, together with the marks and numbers, in words at length, of the said packages respectively, with a description of each, as whether laguer, pipe, butt, puncheon, hoghead, barrel, case, bale, pack, truss, chest, box, bundle, or other cask, or package, describing the same by its usual name or denomination.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That if any goods, wares, or merchandise, shall, after the said first of October next, be imported or brought into the United States in any ship or vessel whatever belonging in the whole or in part to a citizen or citizens, inhabitant, or inhabitants, of the United States, from any foreign port or place, without such manifest or manifests in writing, or shall not be included and described therein, or shall not agree therewith, in every such case the master or other person having the command or charge of such ship or vessel shall forfeit a sum of money equal to the value of such goods, not included in such manifest or manifests: Provided, always, That if it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of the collector, naval officer, and surveyor, or the major part of them, where those offices are established at any port, or to the satisfaction of the collector alone, where either of the other of the said offices is not established, or to the satisfaction of the court in which a trial shall be had concerning such forfeiture, that no part of the cargo of such ship or vessel had been unshipped after it was taken on board, except such as shall have been specified and accounted for in the report of the master or other person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, and that the manifest or manifests had been lost or mislaid, without fraud or collusion, or that the same was or were defaced by accident, or incorrect by mistake, in every such case the forfeiture aforesaid shall not be incurred.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That every master or other person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel belonging in the whole or in part to a citizen or citizens, inhabitant or inhabitants, of the United States, laden with goods as aforesaid, and bound to any port or place in the United States, shall, on his arrival within four leagues of the coast thereof, or within any of the bays, harbors, ports, rivers, creeks, or inlets thereof, upon demand, produce such manifest or manifests in writing, which such master or other person is herein before required to have on board his said ship or vessel, to such officer or officers of the customs, as shall first come on board his said ship or vessel, for his or their inspection, and shall deliver to such officer or officers a true copy or copies thereof, (which copy or copies shall be provided and subscribed by the said master or other person having the command or charge of such ship or vessel;) and that the officer or officers to whom the original manifest or manifests shall have been so produced, shall respectively certify upon the back thereof that the same was or were produced, and the day and year on which the same was or were so produced, and that such copy or copies as aforesaid, was or were to him or them delivered, and shall likewise certify upon the back of such copy or copies the day and year on which the same was or were delivered, and shall forthwith transmit such copy or copies to the respective collectors of the several districts, to which the goods by such manifest or manifests shall appear respectively to be consigned; and that the said master or other person so having the charge or command of any such ship or vessel, shall in like manner produce to the officer or officers of the customs who shall first come on board such ship or vessel upon her arrival within the limits of any district of the United States, in which the cargo or any part thereof is intended to be discharged or landed, for his or their inspection, such manifest or manifests as aforesaid, and shall also deliver to him or them a true copy or copies thereof, (such copy or copies also to be provided and subscribed by the said master or other person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel,) the production of which said manifest or manifests, and the delivery of which said copy or copies thereof shall also be certified by the said officer or officers of the customs who shall so first come on board the said ship or vessel on her arrival within the limits of any such district, upon the back of the said original manifest or manifests, with the particular day and year when such manifest or manifests was or were produced to such officer or officers, and when he or they so received the said copy or copies thereof; and such officer or officers is and are hereby required forthwith to transmit or cause to be transmitted, the said copy or copies of the said manifest or manifests to the collector of that district, and the said master or person having the charge or command of the said ship or vessel shall afterwards produce and deliver the said original manifest or manifests to the said collector. Provided, always, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to require of such master or other person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel, the delivery of more than one copy of each manifest to the officer or officers aforesaid, who shall first come on board of such ship or vessel, within four leagues of the coast of the United States aforesaid, and one other copy to such officer or officers as shall first come on board, within the limits of any district for which the cargo of such ship or vessel, or some part thereof, shall be consigned or destined; or shall be construed to require the delivery of any such copy to any other officer; but it shall be sufficient in respect to any such other officer to produce and show to him the said original manifest or manifests, and the certificate or certificates thereupon.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That if the master or other person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel laden as aforesaid, and bound to any port or place in the United States, shall not upon his arrival within four leagues of the coast thereof, or within the limits of any district thereof, where the cargo of such ship or vessel or any part thereof is intended to be discharged, produce such manifest or manifests in writing to the proper officer or officers upon demand thereof, and also deliver such copy or copies thereof as aforesaid according to the directions of this act in each case, or shall not give an account of the destination of such ship or vessel, which he is hereby required to do, upon request of such officer or officers, or shall give a false account of the said destination, in order to evade the production of the said manifest or manifests, the said master or other person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, shall forfeit for every such refusal, neglect, or offence, a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars. And if such officer or officers first coming on board, in each case within the distance or limits aforesaid, shall neglect or refuse to certify on the back of such manifest or manifests, the production thereof, and the delivery of such copy or copies respectively, as are hereinbefore directed to be delivered to such officer or officers, every such officer, so neglecting or refusing, shall forfeit and pay the sum of five hundred dollars.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That if, after the arrival of any ship or vessel so laden with goods as aforesaid, and bound to the United States, within the limits of any of the districts of the United States, or within four leagues of the coast thereof, any part of the cargo of such ship or vessel shall be unladed for any purpose whatever, from out of such ship or vessel as aforesaid, within the limits or distance aforesaid, before such ship or vessel shall come to the proper place for the discharge of her cargo or some part thereof, and shall be there duly authorized by the proper officer or officers of the customs, to unlade the same, the master or other person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, and the mate or other person next in command, shall respectively forfeit and pay the sum of one thousand dollars; and the goods, wares, and merchandise so unladed and unshipped shall be forfeited and lost, except in the case of some unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress of weather, of which unavoidable accident, necessity, or distress, the master or other person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, shall give notice to, and together with two or more of the mariners on board such ship or vessel shall make proof upon oath before the collector or other chief officer of the customs of the district, within the limits of which such accident, necessity, or distress, shall happen, or before the collector or other chief officer of the first district of the United States within the limits of which such ship or vessel shall afterwards arrive, if the said accident, necessity, or distress shall have happened not within the limits of any district, but within four leagues of the coast of the United States, (which oath the said collector or other chief officer is hereby authorized and required to administer.)

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That if any goods, wares, or merchandise, so unladed from on board of any ship or vessel shall be put or received into any other ship, vessel, or boat, except in the case of such accident, necessity, or distress, as aforesaid, to be notified and proved as aforesaid, the said master or other person having the charge or command of the ship, vessel, or boat, into which the said goods shall be so put and received, and every other person aiding and assisting therein, shall forfeit treble the value of the said goods; and the said ship, boat, or vessel, shall also be forfeited and lost.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That if any ship or vessel which shall have arrived within the limits of any district of the United States from any foreign port or place, shall depart or attempt to depart from the same, unless to proceed on her way to some more interior district to which she may be bound, before report or entry shall have been made by the master or other person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, with the collector of some district of the United States, the said master or other person having such charge or command shall forfeit and pay the sum of four hundred dollars. And it shall be lawful for any collector, naval officer, surveyor, or commander of any of the cutters hereinafter mentioned, to arrest and bring back, or cause to be arrested and brought back, such ship or vessel, to such port of the United States to which it may be most conveniently done. Provided, That it shall be made to appear by the oath of the said master or other person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, and of the person next in command, or other sufficient proof to the satisfaction of the collector of the district within which such ship or vessel shall afterwards come, or to the satisfaction of the court in which the prosecution for such penalty may be had, that the said departure, or attempt to depart, was occasioned by distress of weather, pursuit or duress of enemies, or other necessity, the said penalty shall not be incurred.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That within twenty-four hours after the arrival of any ship or vessel from any port or place, at any port of the United States established by law, at which an officer of the customs resides, or within any harbor, inlet, or creek thereof, if the hours of business at the office of the chief officer of the customs at such port will permit, or as soon thereafter as the said hours will permit, the master or other person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, shall repair to the said office, and shall make report to the said chief officer of the arrival of the said ship or vessel; and within forty-eight hours after such arrival, shall make a further report to the collector of the said district in which such port may be, of the name, burden, and lading of such ship or vessel, whether in packages or stowed loose, and of the particular marks, numbers, and contents of each package, and the place or places, person or persons, to or for which or whom they are respectively consigned or destined, also, of the place or places where she took in her lading, of what country built, from what foreign port or place she last sailed, who was master or commander of her during the voyage, who is at the time of such report master or commander of her, and (if a vessel of the United States) who are owners of her; unless the whole of such information required on the second report as aforesaid, shall have been given at the time of making the first report, in which case it shall not be necessary to make a further report. And in the cases in which the master or person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel hereinbefore required to have on board, at the time of her departure from such foreign port or place for the United States, a manifest or manifest of the lading of such ship or vessel, or of any part thereof, the said master or person having the said charge or command shall, at the time of making the said report, deliver the said manifest or manifests to the collector to whom the said report shall be made, and shall declare to the truth of such manifest or manifests, as the same ought to be, in conformity to the directions of this act. And the said master or person having the charge or command of any such ship or vessel shall in each case declare that no part of her lading, since her departure from the said foreign port or place from which she shall be so reported to have last sailed, has been landed or unladed, or otherwise removed from on board of her, except as he shall then specify, together with the cause, time, place, and manner; and shall further declare that in case he shall afterwards discover or know of any goods, wares, or merchandise, other than those by him then reported, he will forthwith thereafter make report thereof to the said collector: which report and declarations respectively shall be in writing, and signed by the party making the same, and shall be attested by his oath, to the best of his knowledge and belief; and the said collector is hereby authorized and required to administer the same. And if the said master or person having the charge or command of any such ship or vessel shall neglect or omit to make the said reports, or either of them, and declaration or declarations, or to deliver the said manifest or manifests, or to take the said oath, as the case may require, he shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of one thousand dollars.

SEC. 17. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That it shall not be necessary for the master or person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel of war, or of any ship or vessel employed by any Prince or State, as a public packet for the conveyance of letters and despatches, and not permitted by the laws of such Prince or State to be employed in the transportation of goods, wares, or merchandise in the way of trade, to make such report and entry as aforesaid.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the said ship or vessel to proceed with any goods, wares, or merchandise, brought in her, which shall be reported by the said master or other person having the charge or command of the said ship or vessel, to be destined for any foreign port or place from the district within which such ship or vessel shall first arrive, to such foreign port or place, without paying or securing the payment of any duties upon such of the said goods, wares, or merchandise, as shall be actually re-exported in the said ship or vessel accordingly; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding. Provided always, That the said master or person having the charge or command of the said ship or vessel shall first give bond with one or more sureties, in a sum equal to the amount of the duties upon the said goods, wares, and merchandise, as the same shall be estimated by the collector to whom the said report shall be made, to the satisfaction of the said collector, with condition that the said goods, wares, or merchandise, or any part thereof, shall not be landed within the United States, unless due entry thereon shall have been first made, and the duties which bond shall be cancelled in like manner as bonds hereinafter directed to be given for obtaining drawbacks of duties. Provided, nevertheless, That such bond shall not be required in respect to the goods on board of any ship or vessel which shall have put into the United States from necessity, to be made appear in manner hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any ship or vessel in which any goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be brought into the United States from any foreign port or place, to proceed with the same from district to district within the United States, in order to the landing or delivery thereof; and the duties on such of the said goods only as shall be landed in any district, shall be paid or secured to be paid within such district.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That before any ship or vessel shall depart from the district in which she shall first arrive, for another district, with goods, wares, or merchandise, brought in such ship or vessel from a foreign port or place, the duties whereof shall not have been paid or secured, the master or person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel shall obtain from the collector of the district from which she shall be about to depart (who is hereby required to grant the same) a copy of the report made by such master or person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, certified by the said collector, together with a certificate of the quantity and particulars of the goods which shall appear to him to have been landed within his district. And within twenty-four hours after the arrival of such ship or vessel within any other district, the said master or person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel shall make report of entry to or with the collector of such other district, producing and showing the said certified copy of his said first report, together with a certificate from each collector of any other district within which any of the goods, wares, or merchandise, brought in such ship or vessel shall have been before landed, of the quantity and particulars of such of the said goods, wares, and merchandise as shall have been so landed in each district, respectively; except in the State of Georgia, where such report shall be made within forty-eight hours: Provided always, That the master or person having the charge or command of the said ship or vessel shall first give bond with one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the collector of the district within which the said ship or vessel shall first arrive, in a sum equal to the amount of the duties on the residue of the said goods, according to such estimate as the said collector shall form thereof, with condition that the said residue of the said goods shall be duly entered and delivered in such other district or districts of the United States, for which the same shall have been reported to be destined. And the said bond shall be cancelled or discharged by the production of a certificate or certificates from the collector or collectors of the district or districts for which the said goods shall have been reported, testifying the due entry and delivery of the said goods in such district or districts, and upon due proof to the satisfaction of the collector by whom the said bond shall have been taken, that such entry and delivery were prevented by some unavoidable accident or casualty, and that if the whole or any part of the said goods shall not have been lost, that the same has been duly entered and delivered within the United States. And if the master or person having charge or command of any such ship or vessel, shall fail by his neglect or fault to obtain the said copy of his said report from the collector of the district from which he shall be so about to depart, or of any certificate which he ought to obtain as aforesaid, or shall neglect to produce and show the same to the collector of any other district to which the said ship or vessel shall afterwards proceed, within the time for that purpose hereinbefore specified, he shall forfeit and pay for every such neglect or omission, five hundred dollars.

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That the owner or owners, consignee or consignees of any goods, wares, or merchandise, on board of any such ship or vessel, or in case of his, her, or their absence or sickness, his, her, or their known factor or agent, in his, her, or their names, within fifteen days after the report of the master or person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel to the collector of the district for which such goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be destined, shall make entry thereof with the said collector, and shall specify in such entry the particular marks, numbers, and contents, of each package or parcel whereof they shall consist, or if in bulk, the quantity and quality, together with the net prime cost thereof; and shall also produce to the said collector, if any such there be, the original invoice or invoices, or other documents in lieu thereof, and bill or bills of lading; all of which shall be done upon the oath of the person by whom such entry shall be made, according to the best of his or her knowledge and belief; who shall thereby also declare that, if he or she shall afterwards discover or know of any other goods, wares, or merchandise, imported in such ship or vessel, belonging or consigned to the person or persons by whom or on whose behalf such entry shall have been made, he or she will forthwith make known the same, in order to the due entry thereof, and the payment or securing the payment of the duties thereupon: Provided always, That where the particulars of any such goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be unknown, in lieu of the entry hereinbefore directed to be made, an entry thereof shall be made and received, according to the circumstances of the case, the party making the same declaring upon oath all that he or she knows or believes concerning the quantity and particulars of the said goods, and that he or she has no other knowledge or information concerning the same; which entry, as well as the first as the last, shall be made in writing, and shall be subscribed by the party making the same.

And in order to ascertain what articles ought to be exempted from duty, as the sea-stores of a ship or vessel.

SEC. 22. Be it further enacted, That the master or person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, shall particularly specify the said articles in the report to be by him made as aforesaid, designating them as the sea-stores of the said ship or vessel; and in the said oath to be taken by such master or other person, he shall declare that the articles so specified as sea-stores are truly such, and were bona fide put on board the said ship or vessel, for the use of the officers, crew, and passengers thereof, and were not brought and are not intended by way of merchandise, or for sale; whereupon the said articles shall be free from duty: Provided always, That if it shall appear to the collector to whom such report shall be made, together with the naval officer, where there is one, or alone where there is none, that the quantities of the said articles so reported as sea-stores are excessive, it shall be lawful for the said collector, jointly with the said naval officer, or alone, as the case may be, in his or their discretion, to estimate the amount of the duty on such excess; which shall be forthwith paid by the said master or person having the command or charge of the said ship or vessel, to the said collector, on pain of forfeiting the value of such excess. And if any of the said articles shall be landed for the purpose of being sold, or to be otherwise used than as the sea-stores of the ship or vessel in which they were brought, all such as shall be so landed shall be forfeited, and the master or commander of such ship or vessel being privy thereto, shall moreover forfeit and pay treble the value of the articles so landed.

And also to ascertain what articles ought to be exempted from duty, as the clothes, books, household furniture, tools, or implements of the trade or profession of persons arriving within the United States:

SEC. 23. Be it further enacted, That due entry thereof, as of other goods, wares, and merchandise, but separate and distinct from that of any other goods, wares, or merchandise imported from a foreign port or place, shall be made with the collector of the district in which the said articles are intended to be landed by the owner thereof, his or her agent, who shall make oath before the said collector, according to the best of his or her knowledge or belief, touching the person to whom the said articles shall belong, and his calling or occupation, the arrival or expected arrival of the said person within the United States, and that the said articles are truly intended for the use of the said owner solely, or jointly with his or her family, as the case may be, and are not directly or indirectly imported or intended for sale; which oath shall be in writing, endorsed upon the said entry, and subscribed by the party making the same. And in case the said party shall be other than the owner of the said articles, he or she shall give bond with one or more sureties to the satisfaction of the said collector, in a sum equal to what would be the amount of the duties on the said articles if imported subject to duty, with condition that in a certain time therein to be specified, not exceeding one year, a like oath as above directed shall be made by the said owner, and if not made before the said collector, shall be produced to him duly authenticated; whereupon a permit shall and may be granted for landing the said articles. And a copy of every such entry, and of the oath endorsed thereupon, shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for his information.

And whereas, by the letter of the act entitled "An act for laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandises imported into the United States," articles of the growth or manufacture of the United States, exported to foreign countries, and brought back to the United States, are subject to duty on their importation into the said States; and whereas it was not the intention of Congress that they should be so subject to duty:

SEC. 24. Be it therefore further enacted, That in every case in which a duty may have been heretofore paid on goods, wares, or merchandises of the growth or manufacture of the United States, exported to a foreign country, and brought back to the said States, the amount thereof shall be repaid to the person or persons by whom the same shall have been paid, or to his, her, or their representatives; and that in every case in which such duty may have accrued, but may not have been paid, the same be remitted, and that no such duty shall hereafter be demanded. Provided, That the regulations hereinafter prescribed for ascertaining the identity of such goods, wares, or merchandise, be observed and complied with, and that as well in respect to those heretofore imported, as far as may be practicable, as to those hereafter to be imported.

And also to ascertain the identity of articles of the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States, which, having been exported to any foreign port or place, shall be brought back to the said States:

SEC. 25. Be it enacted, &c., That report and entry thereof shall be made as in other cases of goods, wares, or merchandise, imported from a foreign port or place, and proof by oath of the person or persons having knowledge of the facts, shall be made to the satisfaction of the collector of the district, with whom such entry shall be jointly made with the naval officer, if there be a naval officer, or alone, if there be no naval officer, that the said articles had been exported from the United States, as of their growth, product, or manufacture, and of the time when, by whom, in what ship or vessel, and for what port or place they were so exported; and if the said collector shall be other than the collector of the district from which the said articles shall have been exported, a certificate of the latter shall be produced to the former, testifying the exportation thereof, in conformity to the proof aforesaid: whereupon a permit shall and may be granted for landing the same. Provided, That if the said certificate cannot be immediately produced, and if the proof otherwise required shall be made, and if bond shall be given, with one or more sureties to the satisfaction of the collector of the district within which the said articles are intended to be landed, in a sum equal to what the duties would be on the said articles, if they were not of the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States; with condition that the said certificate shall be produced within the term of four months, it shall be lawful for the said collector to grant a permit for the landing of the said articles, in like manner as if the said certificate had been produced.

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That the oaths to be taken upon making of any of the reports or entries aforesaid, whether by the master or other person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel, or of the owner or consignee of any goods, wares, or merchandise, his or her factor or agent, shall be administered by the collector or officer to whom report or entry shall be made, and where there shall be a naval officer, in the presence of such naval officer, who shall attend for that purpose, and shall be reduced to writing, and shall be subscribed by the person administering the same, and by the said naval officer, if any shall be present: and the said collector, jointly with the said naval officer, where there is a naval officer, or alone where there is none, shall, according to the best of his or their judgment or information, make a gross estimate of the amount of the duties on the goods, wares, or merchandise to which the entry of any owner or consignee, his or her factor or agent shall relate, which estimate shall be endorsed upon such entry, and signed by the officer or officers making the same. And the amount of the said duties according to the said estimate, having been first paid or secured, pursuant to the provisions of this act, the said collector shall grant a permit to land the goods, wares, or merchandise, whereof such entry shall have been made, and then and not otherwise it shall be lawful to land the said goods.

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That no goods, wares, or merchandise, brought in any ship or vessel from any foreign port or place, shall be unladen or delivered from such ship or vessel, within the United States, but in open day; that is to say, between the rising and setting of the sun, except by special license from the chief officer of the port for that purpose, nor at any time without a permit from the collector for such unloading or delivery; and if any goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be unladen or delivered from any such ship or vessel, contrary to the directions aforesaid, or any of them, the master or person having the command or charge of such ship or vessel, and every other person who shall knowingly be concerned or aiding therein, or in removing, storing, or otherwise securing the said goods, wares, or merchandise, shall forfeit and pay the sum of four hundred dollars for each offence; and shall be disabled from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, for a term not exceeding seven years; and it shall be the duty of the collector of the district to advertise the names of all such persons in the newspapers, printed in the State in which he resides, within twenty days after each respective conviction. And all goods, wares, or merchandise, so unladen or delivered, shall become forfeited, and may be seized by any of the officers of the customs; and where the value thereof, according to the highest market price of the same, shall amount to four hundred dollars, the vessel, tackle, apparel, and furniture, shall be subject to like seizure and forfeiture.

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That no goods, wares, or merchandise, brought in any ship or vessel from any foreign port or place, requiring to be weighed or gauged in order to ascertain the duties thereupon, shall be removed from any wharf or place upon which the same may be landed or put, before the same shall have been weighed or gauged, by or under the direction of a proper officer for that purpose; and if any such goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be removed from such wharf or place, unless with consent of the proper officer, before the same shall have been weighed or gauged, the same shall be forfeited, and may be seized by any officer of the customs.

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That all goods, wares, or merchandise, of which entry shall have been made, without specification of particulars, shall be conveyed to some warehouse or storehouse, to be designated by the collector, in the care of some proper officer, until the particulars thereof shall be examined and ascertained, agreeably to which the duties thereupon shall be finally adjusted and satisfied. And in every case, if the amount of the duties estimated, or secured to be paid, shall exceed or fall short of the true amount of the duties on the goods, wares, or merchandise imported, as the same shall be finally ascertained, the difference shall be made good, or allowed where there shall be an excess, by return of the money, if paid, or credit on the bond which shall have been given for the same, if not paid; and where there shall be a deficiency, by payment of such deficiency to the said collector.

SEC. 30. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the collector of any district at which any ship or vessel may arrive, and for the surveyor of any port where any such ship or vessel may be, to put and keep on board such ship or vessel, while remaining within such district, or in going from one district to another, one or more inspectors to examine the cargo or contents of such ship or vessel, and to superintend the delivery thereof, or of so much thereof as shall be delivered within the United States, and to perform such other duties according to law as they shall be directed by the said collector or surveyor to perform for the better securing the collection of the duties: Provided, That collectors only shall have power to put on board ships or vessels, inspectors to go from one district to another. And the said inspector or inspectors shall make known to the person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, the duties he or they is or are so to perform; and shall suffer no goods, wares, or merchandise to be landed or unladen from such ship or vessel, without a proper permit for that purpose; and shall enter in a book to be by him or each of them kept, the name or names of the person or persons in whose behalf such permit was granted, together with the particulars therein specified, and the marks, numbers, kinds, and descriptions of the respective packages which shall be unladen pursuant thereto. And the wages or compensation of such inspector or inspectors in going from one district to another, shall be defrayed by the master or person having the charge of the vessel in which they respectively go.

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for all collectors, naval officers, surveyors, inspectors, and the officers of the revenue cutters hereinafter mentioned, to go on board of ships or vessels in any part of the United States, or within four leagues of the coast thereof, if bound to the United States, whether in or out of their respective districts, for the purposes of demanding the manifests aforesaid, and of examining and searching the said ships or vessels; and the said officers respectively shall have free access to the cabin, and every other part of a ship or vessel; and if any box, trunk, chest, cask, or other package, shall be found in the cabin, steerage, or fore-castle of such ship or vessel, or in any other place separate from the residue of the cargo, it shall be the duty of the said officer to take a particular account of every such box, trunk, cask, or package, and the marks, if any there be, and a description thereof; and if he shall judge proper, to put a seal or seals on every such box, chest, trunk, cask, or package; and such account and description shall be by him forwarded to the collector of the district to which such ship or vessel is bound. And if upon her arrival at the port of her entry, the boxes, trunks, chests, casks, or packages so described, or any of them, shall be missing, or if the seals put thereon be broken, the master or commander of such ship or vessel shall forfeit and pay for every such box, trunk, chest, cask, or package so missing, or of which the seals shall be broken, two hundred dollars. And it shall also be lawful for the inspectors who may be put on board of any ship or vessel, to secure after sunset in each evening, the hatches and other communications with the hold of such ship or vessel, with locks or other proper fastenings, which fastenings shall not be opened, broken, or removed until the morning following, or after the rising of the sun, and in presence of the inspector or inspectors by whom the same shall have been affixed, except by special license from the chief officer of the port. And if the said locks or other fastenings, or any of them, shall be broken or removed during the night, or before the said rising of the sun, or without the presence of the said inspector or inspectors, the master or person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel shall forfeit and pay the sum of $200.

Sec. 32. And be it further enacted, That when the delivery of goods, wares, or merchandise from on board of any such ship or vessel at any port shall have been completed, the accounts or entries which shall have been kept or made thereof by the officer or officers who shall have been charged with superintending the said deliveries, shall be reported to the collector of the district, who, together with the naval officer, where there is one, or alone, where there is none, shall compare the said accounts and entries with the entry or entries which shall have been made by the owner or owners, consignee or consignees, his, her, or their factor or agent. And if any difference shall appear, the same shall be noted by endorsement on such entry or entries, specifying the particulars thereof; and if no difference shall appear, it shall be noted by like endorsement, that the deliveries have corresponded with the entry; which endorsement or memorandum shall in each case be subscribed by the officer or officers by whom such comparisons shall have been made, and by the officer or officers under, whose inspection the said deliveries shall have been executed.

Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, That if at the expiration of fifteen working days after the time within which the report of the master or person having the charge or command of any ship or vessel is required to be made to the collector of a district as aforesaid, there shall be found on board any goods, wares, or merchandise, other than shall have been reported for some other district or a foreign port or place the said inspector or inspectors shall take possession thereof, and deliver the same to the order of the collector of the district, taking his receipt therefor, and giving a certificate thereof to the master or person having such charge or command of such ship or vessel, describing the packages and their marks and numbers. And the said goods shall be kept with due care and reasonable care, at the charge and risk of the owner or owners, for a term of nine months; and if within that time no claim be made for the same, the said collector shall procure an appraisal thereof by two or more reputable merchants, to be certified under their hands, and to remain with him, and shall afterwards cause the said goods to be sold at public auction, and retaining the duties and charges thereon, shall pay the overplus, if any there be, into the Treasury of the United States, there to remain for the use of the owner or owners, who shall upon due proof of his, her, or their property, be entitled to receive the same; and the receipt or certificate of the collector shall exonerate the master or commander from all claim of the owner. Provided, That where any entry shall have been duly made of such goods, the same shall not be appraised; and that where such goods are of a perishable nature, they shall be sold forthwith. Provided further, That the said limitation of fifteen days shall not extend to ships or vessels laden with salt or coal; but if the said master or owner of any such ship or vessel requires longer time to discharge her cargo, the wages or compensation of the inspector for every day's attendance exceeding the said fifteen days, shall be paid by the said master or owner. And if by reason of the delivery of a cargo in different districts, more than the said term of fifteen working days shall in the whole be spent therein, the wages or compensation of the inspector or inspectors who may be employed on board any ship or vessel, in respect to which the said term may be so exceeded, shall for every day of such excess be paid by the said master or owner.

Sec. 34. And be it further enacted, That if any package whatever, which shall have been reported as aforesaid, shall be wanting and not found on board such ship or vessel, or if the goods on board the said ship or vessel shall otherwise not agree with the report of the master or other person having the charge or command of any such ship or vessel; in every such case he shall forfeit and pay the sum of five hundred dollars. Provided, nevertheless, That if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the collector, naval officer, and surveyor, or the major part of them, where those officers are established at any port, or to the satisfaction of the collector alone where either of the said other officers is not established, or in case of trial for the said penalty, to the satisfaction of the court, that no part of the cargo of such ship or vessel has been unshipped since it was taken on board, except as shall have been specified in the said report, or that the said disagreement is by accident or mistake; in such case the penalty aforesaid shall not be inflicted.

Sec. 35. And be it further enacted, That the following allowances shall be made for the draughts and tare of the articles subject to duty by weight, that is to say: for draught on any quantity of one hundred weight, or one hundred and twelve pounds, or under, one pound; on any quantity above one, and not exceeding two hundred weight, two pounds; on any quantity above two, and not exceeding three hundred weight, three pounds; on any quantity above three, and not exceeding ten hundred weight, four pounds; on any quantity above ten, and not exceeding eighteen hundred weight, seven pounds; on any quantity above eighteen hundred weight, nine pounds; for tare, on every whole chest of boxes, seventy pounds; on every half-chest, thirty-six pounds; on every quarter-chest, twenty pounds; on every chest of hyson, or other green tea, the gross weight of which shall be seventy pounds or upwards, twenty pounds; on every box of other tea, not less than fifty, or more than seventy pounds gross, eighteen pounds; on all other boxes of tea, according to the invoice thereof; on coffee in bags, two per cent., in bales, three per cent., in casks, twelve per cent.; on pepper, in bales, five per cent., in casks, twelve per cent., on sugars, other than loaf sugar, in casks, twelve per cent., in boxes, fifteen per cent.; on all other goods, according to the invoice thereof: Provided, always, That where the original invoices of any of the said articles are produced, and the tare or tares appear therein, it shall be lawful, with the consent of the importer or importers, consignee or consignees, to estimate the said tare or tares according to such invoice.

Sec. 36. And be it further enacted, That there shall be an allowance for leakage of two per cent. on the quantity which shall appear by the gauge to be contained in any cask of liquors subject to duty by the gallon.

Sec. 37. And be it further enacted, That if any goods, wares, or merchandise, on which duties are payable, shall receive damage during the voyage, or shall not be accompanied with the original invoice of their cost, it shall be lawful for the collector (and upon the request of the party he is required) to appoint one merchant, and the owner or consignee to appoint another, who being sworn or affirmed by the collector, well and truly to appraise such goods, shall appraise and value them accordingly, and the duties upon such goods shall be estimated agreeably to such appraisement or valuation. And in respect to such damaged articles as are charged with a specific duty, by number, weight, or measure, the said appraisers shall certify what in their judgment would have been their value, in case they had not been so damaged, and there shall be an abatement in the duty in proportion to the difference in value: Provided, That if the owner or owners, consignee or consignees, of such goods not accompanied with an original invoice, shall choose to wait the receipt thereof, in such case the said collector shall take into his custody the said goods, and shall keep or cause the same to be kept with due and reasonable care, at the expense and risk of the party or parties, until the said invoice shall arrive, or until the said party or parties shall consent to the valuation thereof.

Sec. 38. And be it further enacted, That if any ship or vessel from any foreign port or place, compelled by distress of weather or other necessity, shall put into any port or place of the United States, not being destined for the same; and if the master or person having charge or command of such ship or vessel, together with the mate or person next in command, shall, within twenty-four hours after her arrival, make protest in the usual form upon oath before a notary public, or other person duly authorized, or before the collector of the district where the said ship or vessel shall so arrive, who is hereby empowered to administer the same, setting forth the cause and circumstances of such distress or necessity, and make report to the said collector, of the said ship or vessel and her cargo, as in other cases. And if it shall be made appear to the said collector, by the certificate of the wardens of the port, or other officers usually charged with, and accustomed to ascertaining the condition of ships and vessels arriving in distress, if any such there be, or by the certificate of any two reputable merchants, to be named for that purpose by the said collector, if no such wardens or other officers there be, that there is a necessity for unloading the said ship or vessel, the said collector shall grant a permit for that purpose, and shall appoint an inspector or inspectors to oversee such unloading. And all goods so unladen shall be stored under the direction of the said collector; who, upon request of the master or other person having charge or command of such ship or vessel, or of the owner thereof, shall grant a license to dispose of such part of the said cargo as may be of a perishable nature, (if any there be,) or as may be necessary to defray the expenses attending such ship or vessel, and her cargo: Provided, That the duties thereupon be first paid. And the said goods, or the remainder thereof, may afterwards be reladen on board the said ship or vessel, and the said ship or vessel may proceed with the same to the place of her destination, free from any other charge than for the storing and safekeeping of the said goods.

Sec. 39. And be it further enacted, That the ad valorem rates of duty upon goods, wares, and merchandise, at the place of importation, shall be estimated by adding twenty per cent. to the actual cost thereof, if imported from the Cape of Good Hope, or from any place beyond the same; and ten per cent. on the actual cost thereof, if imported from any other place or country, exclusive of charges.

Sec. 40. And be it further enacted, That all foreign coins and currencies shall be estimated according to the following rates: each pound sterling of Great Britain, at four dollars and forty-four cents; each livre tournois of France at eighteen cents and a half; each florin or guilder of the United Netherlands, at thirty-nine cents; each mark banco of Hamburg, at thirty-three cents and one-third; each rix dollar of Denmark, at one hundred cents; each rial of plate of Spain, at ten cents; each milree of Portugal, at one dollar and twenty-four cents; each pound sterling of Ireland, at four dollars ten cents; each tale of China, at one dollar forty-eight cents; each pagoda of India, at one dollar ninety-four cents; each rupee of Bengal, at fifty-five cents and a half; and all other denominations of money in value as near as may be to the said rates.

Sec. 41. And be it further enacted, That all duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported, shall be paid, or secured to be paid, before a permit shall be granted for landing the same. And where the amount thereof on goods imported in any ship or vessel, on account of one person only, or of several persons jointly interested, shall not exceed fifty dollars, the same shall be immediately paid; but where the said amount shall exceed fifty dollars, the same may, at the option of the proprietor or proprietors, consignee or consignees, be either immediately paid or secured by bond, with condition for the payment thereof, if accruing upon articles of the produce of the West Indies, in four months; if accruing on Madeira wines, in twelve months; if accruing upon any other goods, wares, or merchandise, other than teas imported from China, in six months; which bond, at the like option of the said proprietor or proprietors, consignee or consignees, shall either include one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the collector of the district where the said duties shall accrue, or shall be accompanied with a deposit in the custody of the said collector, of so much of the said goods, as shall, in his judgment, be a sufficient security for the amount of the duties for which such bond shall have been given, and the charge of safekeeping and sale of the goods so deposited; which deposit shall and may be accepted in lieu of the said surety or sureties, and shall be kept by the said collector, with due and reasonable care, at the expense and risk of the party or parties on whose account the same shall have been made, until the sum specified in such bond shall have become due, at which time, if such sum shall not be paid, so much of the said deposited goods as may be necessary, shall be sold at public sale, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the charges of keeping and sale, shall be applied to the payment of such sum, rendering the overplus and the residue of the said goods, if any there be, to the person or persons by whom such deposit shall have been made, or to his, her, or their representatives: Provided, That no person whose bond for the payment of duties is due and unsatisfied, shall be allowed a future credit for duties, until such bond shall be fully paid or discharged.

Sec. 42. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That all teas imported from China may, at the option of the proprietor or consignee thereof, be deposited in the custody of the collector with whom the same shall be entered, or the duties thereon secured by bond, with one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the collector, with condition for the payment of such duties within twelve months; and in case of depositing such teas, they shall be kept at the charge of the person or persons depositing the same. And the collector shall deliver such teas, or part thereof, from time to time, to the person or persons depositing the same, or to his or their order, on payment of the duties for such part as may be so delivered, and not otherwise; and in case the whole of the duties shall not be paid within eighteen months from the time of the entry made, it shall be the duty of the said collector to sell at public auction so much of the said teas as shall be sufficient to pay the duties then due, together with the charges of sale and safe keeping, and to return the overplus to the person or persons who shall have deposited such teas, or his, her, or their representatives; and for such teas as have been imported from China in the present year, the owner or consignee thereof shall be entitled to deposit the same, or to give bond, payable in like manner, and under like regulations, as are hereinbefore directed for teas which shall hereafter be imported, notwithstanding the duties on such teas may have been already secured to be paid.

Sec. 43. And be it further enacted, That the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of any ship or vessel, shall be paid to the collector by the master or person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, within ten days after his report to the said collector; and before such ship or vessel shall be permitted to clear out; the register of which ship or vessel shall at the time of entry be lodged in the office of the collector, and there remain until such clearance. And if any ship or vessel shall leave, or attempt to leave, any district of the United States, without paying the said duties, the master or person having the charge or command of the same shall forfeit and pay five hundred dollars.

Sec. 44. And be it further enacted, That to ascertain the tonnage of any ship or vessel, the surveyor, or such other person as shall be appointed by the collector of the district to measure the same, shall, if the said ship or vessel be double decked, take the length thereof from the fore part of the main stem to the after part of the stern post above the upper deck; the breadth thereof at the broadest part above the main wales, half of which breadth shall be accounted the depth of such vessel, and shall then deduct from the length three-fifths of the breadth, multiply the remainder by the breadth, and the product by the depth, and shall divide this last product by ninety-five, the quotient whereof shall be deemed the true contents or tonnage of such ship or vessel. And if such ship or vessel be single decked, the said surveyor, or other person shall take the length and breadth as above directed, in respect to a double decked ship or vessel, shall deduct from the said length three-fifths of the breadth, and taking the depth from the under side of the deck plank to the ceiling of the hold, shall multiply and divide as aforesaid, and the quotient shall be deemed the tonnage of such ship or vessel.

Sec. 45. And be it further enacted, That where any bond for the payment of duties shall not be satisfied on the day it becomes due, the collector shall forthwith cause a prosecution to be commenced for the recovery of the money thereon, by action or suit at law, in the proper court having cognizance thereof; and in all cases of insolvency, or where any estate in the hands of executors or administrators shall be insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debt due to the United States, on any such bond, shall be first satisfied.

Sec. 46. And be it further enacted, That if any goods, wares, and merchandise, of which entry shall have been made in the office of a collector, shall not be invoiced according to the actual cost thereof at the place of exportation, with design to evade the duties thereupon, or any part thereof, all such goods, wares, or merchandise, or the value thereof, to be recovered of the person making entry, shall be forfeited. And in every case in which the said collector shall suspect that any such goods, wares, or merchandise are not invoiced at a sum equal to that for which they have usually been sold in the place or country from whence they were imported, it shall be the duty of such collector to take the said goods, wares, and merchandise into his possession, and retain the same with reasonable care, at the risk and expense of the owner or owners, consignee or consignees thereof, until their value at the time and place of importation shall be ascertained by two reputable merchants, to be chosen and appointed as in the case of damaged goods, or goods not accompanied with an invoice; and until the duties arising according to such valuation shall be first paid, or secured to be paid, as required by this act in case of a prosecution for the forfeiture aforesaid, such appraisement shall not be construed to exclude other proof upon the trial, of the actual and real cost of the said goods at the said place of exportation.

Sec. 47. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the collector or other officer of the customs, after entry made of any goods, wares, or merchandise, on suspicion of fraud, to open and examine, in the presence of two or more reputable merchants, any package or packages thereof; and if on examination they should be found to agree with the entries, the officer making such seizure shall cause the same to be repacked, and delivered to the owner or claimant forthwith; and the expense of such examination shall be paid by the said collector or other officer, and allowed in the settlement of his accounts; but if any of the packages so examined shall be found to differ in their contents from the entry, then the goods, wares, or merchandise contained in such package or packages shall be forfeited. Provided, That the said forfeiture shall not be incurred, if it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of the collector and naval officer of the district where the same shall happen, if there be a naval officer, and if there be no naval officer, to the satisfaction of the said collector, or of the court in which a prosecution for the forfeiture shall be had, that such difference proceeded from accident or mistake, and not from an intention to defraud the revenue.

Sec. 48. And be it further enacted, That every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, or other person specially appointed by either of them for that purpose, shall have full power and authority to enter any ship or vessel in which they shall have reason to suspect any goods, wares, or merchandise subject to duty shall be concealed; and therein to search for, seize, and secure any such goods, wares, or merchandise. And if they shall have cause to suspect a concealment thereof in any particular dwelling-house, store, building, or other place, they or either of them shall, upon application on oath to any justice of the peace, be entitled to a warrant to enter such house, store, or other place, (in the day time only,) and there to search for such goods, and if any shall be found, to seize and secure the same for trial; and all such goods, wares, and merchandise, on which the duties shall not have been paid or secured, shall be forfeited.

Sec. 49. And be it further enacted, That all goods, wares, and merchandise which shall be seized by virtue of this act, shall be put into and remain in the custody of the collector or such other person as he shall appoint for that purpose, until such proceedings shall be had as by this act are required, to ascertain whether the same have been forfeited or not; and if it shall be adjudged that they are not forfeited, they shall be forthwith restored to the owner or owners, claimant or claimants thereof. And if any person or persons shall conceal or buy any goods, wares, or merchandise, knowing them to be liable to seizure by this act, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a sum double the value of the goods so concealed or purchased.

Sec. 50. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the several officers of the customs to make seizure of, and secure any ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall be liable to seizure by virtue of this act, as well without as within their respective districts.

Sec. 51. And be it further enacted, That if any officer or other person, executing or aiding and assisting in the seizure of goods, shall be sued or molested for any thing done in virtue of the powers given by this act, or by virtue of a warrant granted by any judge or justice pursuant to law, such officer or other person may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence; and if in such suit the plaintiff be nonsuited, or judgment pass against him, the defendant shall recover double cost; and in actions, suits, or information to be brought, where any seizure shall be made pursuant to this act, if the property be claimed by any person, in every such case the onus probandi shall be upon such claimant. And if any person shall forcibly resist, prevent, or impede any officers of the customs or their deputies, or any person assisting them in the execution of their duty, such person so offending shall for every offence be fined in a sum not exceeding four hundred dollars.

Sec. 52. And be it further enacted, That every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, shall, within three months after he enters upon the execution of his office, give bond with one or more sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States, and payable to the said United States, with condition for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office according to law, that is to say: the collector of Philadelphia, in the sum of sixty thousand dollars; the collector of New York, fifty thousand dollars; the collector of Boston and Charlestown, forty thousand dollars; the collectors of Baltimore and Charleston, thirty thousand dollars each; the collector of Norfolk and Portsmouth, fifteen thousand dollars; the collectors of Portsmouth, in New Hampshire, of Salem and Beverly, in Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, Annapolis, Georgetown in Maryland, Bermuda Hundred and City Point, Alexandria, Wilmington, Newbern and Edenton in the State of North Carolina, Newport and Providence in the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, ten thousand dollars each; the collectors of Newburyport, Gloucester, Marblehead, Plymouth, Nantucket, Portland and Falmouth, New London, New Haven, Fairfield, Perth Amboy, Yorktown, Dumfries, Washington and Camden, Georgetown in South Carolina, Beaufort, and Savannah, each five thousand dollars; and all the other collectors in the sum of two thousand dollars each. The naval officers for the ports of Boston and Charlestown, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Charleston, ten thousand dollars each; and all the other naval officers in the sum of two thousand dollars each. The surveyors of the ports of Boston and Charlestown, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Charleston, five thousand dollars each; and all other surveyors one thousand dollars each; and all other surveyors one thousand dollars each. Which bonds shall be filed in the office of the said comptroller, and be by him severally put in suit for the benefit of the United States, upon any breach of the condition thereof. And as no provision has been heretofore specially made concerning the officers of the customs who may have been heretofore appointed in and for the States of North Carolina and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, the said officers respectively shall, within four months after the passing of this act, give bond with proper surety or sureties, in conformity to the provision aforesaid.

Sec. 53. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed and paid to the collectors, naval officers, and surveyors, to be appointed pursuant to this act, the fees and per centage following, that is to say; to each collector for every entrance of any ship or vessel of one hundred tons' burden or upwards, two dollars and a half; for every clearance of any ship or vessel of one hundred tons' burden and upwards, two dollars and a half; for every entrance of any ship or vessel under the burden of one hundred tons, one dollar and a half; for every clearance of a ship or vessel under one hundred tons' burden, one dollar and a half; for every permit to land goods, twenty cents; for every bond taken officially, forty cents; and for every permit to load goods for exportation, which are entitled to a drawback, thirty cents; for every official certificate, twenty cents; for every bill of health, twenty cents; for every other official document (registers excepted) required by the owner or master of any vessel not before enumerated, twenty cents; and where a naval officer is appointed to the same port, the said fees shall be equally divided between the collector and the said naval officer, the latter paying one-third of the expense of necessary stationery, and the rent of an office to be provided by the collector, at the place assigned for his residence, and as conveniently as may be for the trade of the district; and all fees shall, at the option of the collector, be either received by him or by the naval officer, the party receiving to account monthly with the other for his proportion or share thereof. To each surveyor for the admeasurement of every ship or vessel of one hundred tons and under, one cent per ton; for the admeasurement of every ship or vessel, above one hundred tons, and not exceeding two hundred tons, one hundred and fifty cents; for the admeasurement of every ship or vessel above two hundred tons, two hundred cents; for all other services by this act to be performed by such surveyor, on board any ship or vessel of one hundred tons and upwards, and having on board goods, wares, and merchandise subject to duty, three dollars; for the like services on board any ship or vessel of one hundred tons burden, having on board goods, wares, and merchandise subject to duty, one dollar and a half; on all vessels not having on board goods, wares, and merchandise subject to duty, two-thirds of a dollar; all which fees shall be paid by the master or owner of the ship or vessel in which the said services shall be performed, to the surveyor by whom they shall be performed, if performed by one only for his sole benefit, but if performed by more than one, to him who shall have the first agency, to be divided in equal parts between him and the other or others by whom the said services shall be performed. To each inspector there shall be allowed for every day he shall be actually employed in aid of the customs, a sum not exceeding one dollar and twenty-five cents, to be paid by the collector out of the revenue and charged to the United States. To the measurers, weighers, and gaugers, respectively, to be paid by the collector out of the revenue, for the measurement of every one hundred bushels of grain, thirty cents; for the measurement of every one hundred bushels of salt, forty cents; for the measurement of every one hundred bushels of coal, fifty cents; for the weighing of every one hundred and twelve pounds, two cents; for the gauging and marking of every cask (to be marked in durable characters with his own name and the quantity) eight cents; for computing the contents of, and, if requested by the party, marking cases containing distilled spirits and wines, three cents per case; for counting the number of bottles of cider, beer, ale, or porter, one cent per doz., and in proportion for any greater or less quantity. There shall moreover be allowed to the collectors of the districts of New York and Philadelphia, three-fourths of one per cent. on the amount of all monies by them respectively received on account of duties; and to the collector of each of the other districts by this act established, one per centum on the amount of all moneys by them respectively received on the said account of duties.

And whereas the allowances aforesaid will not afford an adequate compensation to the officers hereinafter mentioned, by reason of the small proportion of business done at the ports to which they respectively belong, although the said officers are necessary to the accommodation of the inhabitants, the facility of commerce, and the security of the revenue: Therefore,

Sec. 54. Be it further enacted, That in addition to the fees and emoluments which shall accrue to the said officers from the provisions aforesaid, they shall severally have and be entitled to the respective allowances following, to wit: the collector of the districts of Saint Mary's, in the State of Georgia, Brunswick, Beaufort, South Quay, Cherrystone, Folly Landing, Annapolis, Yeocomico, Saint Mary's, Oxford, Sagg Harbour, Passamaquoddy, the yearly sum of one hundred dollars each. The collectors of the districts of Sunbury and Penobscot in Massachusetts, the yearly sum of sixty dollars each. The collectors of the districts of Hampton, Snowhill, Bridgetown, Burlington, Frenchman's Bay, and Edgartown, the yearly sum of fifty dollars each. The surveyors of the ports of Fredericksburg, Smithfield, Port Royal, Suffolk, West Point, Richmond, Petersburg, and Little Egg Harbor, the yearly sum of eighty dollars each. The surveyors of the ports of Swansborough, Urbanna, Town Creek, Albany, Hudson, Stonington, East Greenwich, and Gloucester, fifty dollars each.

Sec. 55. And be it further enacted, That every collector, naval officer, and surveyor shall cause to be affixed and constantly kept in some public and conspicuous place of his office, a fair table of the rates of fees and duties demandable by law, and shall give a receipt for the fees he shall receive, specifying the particulars; and in case of failure therein, shall forfeit and pay one hundred dollars, to be recovered with costs, in any court having cognizance thereof, to the use of the informer; and if any officer of the customs shall demand or receive any greater or other fee, compensation or reward, for executing any duty or service required of him by law, he shall forfeit and pay two hundred dollars for each offence, recoverable in manner aforesaid for the use of the party aggrieved.

Sec. 56. And be it further enacted, That the duties and fees to be collected by virtue of this act, shall be payable in gold or silver coin, at the following rates, that is to say: the gold coins of France, England, Spain, and Portugal, and all other gold coins of equal fineness, at eighty-nine cents for every pennyweight; the Mexican dollar at one hundred cents; the crown of France at one dollar and eleven cents; the crown of England at one dollar and eleven cents; all silver coin of equal fineness at one dollar and eleven cents per ounce; and cut silver of equal fineness, at one dollar and six cents per ounce.

Sec. 57. And be it further enacted, That all the drawbacks allowed by law on the exportation of goods, wares, and merchandise imported, shall be paid or allowed by the collector at whose office the said goods, wares, and merchandise were originally entered, and not otherwise, retaining one per centum for the benefit of the United States. And that the allowances on dried and pickled fish of the fisheries of the United States, and on salted provisions of the United States, shall be paid by the collector of the district from which the same shall be exported, without any deduction or abatement.

Sec. 58. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That in order to entitle the exporter or exporters of any goods, wares, or merchandise to the benefit of the said drawbacks or allowances, he or she shall, previous to putting or lading the same on board any ship or vessel for exportation, give twenty-four hours' notice at least to the collector of the district from which the same are about to be exported, of his, her, or their intention to export the same, and of the particulars thereof, and of the casks, cases, chests, boxes, and other packages or parcels containing the same, or of which the same consist, and of their respective marks, numbers, and contents; and if imported articles, of the ship or ships, vessel or vessels, in which the person or persons for or by whom, and the place or places from which they were imported. And in respect to the said imported articles proof shall be made to the satisfaction of the said collector, by the oath of the person or persons (including the said exporter or exporters) through whose hands the said articles shall have passed, according to the best of their knowledge and belief, respecting the due importation of the said articles according to law, and in conformity to such notice of their identity, and of the payment or securing the payment of the duties thereupon. And in respect to the said dried and pickled fish and salted provisions, proof shall be made to the satisfaction of the said collector, according to the circumstances of the case, that the same, if fish, are of the fisheries of the United States; if salted provisions, were salted within the United States. And the said collector shall inspect or cause to be inspected, the goods, wares, or merchandise so notified for exportation; and if they shall be found to correspond with the notice and proof concerning the same, the said collector shall grant a permit for lading the same on board the ship or vessel named in such notice, which lading shall be performed under the superintendence of the officer by whom the same shall have been so inspected. And the said exporter or exporters shall also make oath that the said goods so notified for exportation, and laden on board the said ship or vessel, are truly intended to be exported to the place whereof notice shall have been given, and are not intended to be reloaded within the United States, and shall give bond with one or more sureties to the satisfaction of the said collector, in a sum equal to the amount of the drawback or allowances on such goods, with condition that the said goods, or any part thereof, shall not be reloaded in any port or place within the limits of the United States, as settled by the late treaty of peace.

And provided further, That the said drawbacks or allowances shall not be paid until at least six months after the exportation of the said goods, and until the said exporter or exporters shall produce to the collector with whom such outward entry is made, a certificate in writing of two reputable merchants at the foreign port or place in which the same were landed, together with the oath of the master and mate of the vessel in which they were exported, certifying the delivery thereof. But in case any vessel shall be cast away, or meet with such unavoidable accidents as to prevent the landing such goods, a protest in due form of law, made by the master and mate, or some of the seamen, or in case no such protest can be had, then the oath of the exporter or exporters, or one of them, shall be received in lieu of the other proofs herein directed, unless there shall be good reason to suspect the truth of such oath, in which case it shall and may be lawful for the collector to require such further proof as the nature of the case may demand.

Provided lastly, That no goods, wares, or merchandise imported shall be entitled to a drawback of the duties paid or secured to be paid thereon, unless such duties shall amount to twenty dollars at least; nor unless they shall be exported in the same casks, cases, chests, boxes, or other packages, and from the district of port into which they were originally imported.

Sec. 59. And be it further enacted, That the sums allowed to be paid by law on the exportation of dried or pickled fish, and of salted provisions, shall not be paid unless the same shall amount to three dollars at least upon one entry.

Sec. 60. And be it further enacted, That if any goods, wares, or merchandise, entered for exportation, with intent to draw back the duties, or to obtain any allowance given by law on the exportation thereof, shall be landed in any port or place within the limits of the United States as aforesaid, all such goods, wares, and merchandise shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture, together with the ship or vessel from which such goods shall be landed, and the vessels or boats used in landing the same; and all persons concerned therein shall on indictment and conviction thereof, suffer imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months. And for discovery of frauds, and seizures of goods, wares, and merchandise, reloaded contrary to law, the several officers established by this act shall have the same powers, and in case of seizure the same proceedings shall be had as in case of goods, wares, and merchandise imported contrary to law; and for measuring, weighing, or gauging goods for exportation, the same fees shall be allowed as in like cases upon the importation thereof.

Sec. 61. And be it further enacted, That if any goods, the duties upon which shall have been secured by bond, shall be re-exported by the importer or importers thereof, and if the said bond shall become due before the expiration of the time hereinbefore limited for payment of the drawback upon such goods, it shall be lawful for the collector of the district from which the said goods shall have been exported, to give further credit for so much of the sum due upon such bond as shall be equal to the amount of the said drawback, until the expiration of the said time limited for payment thereof.

And the better to secure the collection of the said duties,

Sec. 62. Be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be empowered to cause to be built and equipped, so many boats or cutters, not exceeding ten, as may be necessary to be employed for the protection of the revenue, the expense whereof shall not exceed ten thousand dollars, which shall be paid out of the product of the duties on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels.

Sec. 63. And be it further enacted, That there shall be to each of the said boats or cutters, one master, and not more than three mates, first, second, and third, four mariners and two boys; and that the compensations and allowances to the said officers, mariners, and boys, respectively, shall be, to the master thirty dollars per month, and the subsistence of a captain in the army of the United States; to a first mate twenty dollars per month; to a second mate sixteen dollars per month; to a third mate fourteen dollars per month; and to every mate the subsistence of a lieutenant in the said army; to each mariner eight dollars per month; to each boy four dollars per month; and to each mariner and boy the same ration of provisions which is or shall be allowed to a soldier in the said army. The said allowance for subsistence to be paid in provisions or money at the contract prices, at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 64. And be it further enacted, That the officers of the said boats or cutters shall be appointed by the President of the United States, and shall respectively be deemed officers of the customs, and shall have power and authority to go on board of every ship or vessel which shall arrive within the United States, or within four leagues of the coast thereof, if bound for the United States, and to search and examine the same and every part thereof, and to demand, receive, and certify the manifests herein before required to be on board of certain ships or vessels, and to affix and put proper fastenings on the hatches and other communications with the holds of ships or vessels, and to remain on board the said ships or vessels until they arrive at their places of destination.

Sec. 65. And be it further enacted, That the collectors of the respective districts may, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Treasury, provide and employ such small open row and sail boats in each district, together with the requisite number of persons to serve in them, as shall be necessary for the use of the surveyors and inspectors in going on board of ships and vessels and otherwise, for the better detection of frauds; the expense of which shall be defrayed out of the product of duties.

Sec. 66. And be it further enacted, That if any officer of the customs shall directly or indirectly take or receive any bribe, reward, or recompense, for conniving, or shall connive at any false entry of any ship or vessel, or of any goods, wares, or merchandise, and shall be thereof convicted, every such officer shall forfeit and pay a sum not less than two hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars for each offence; and any person giving or offering any bribe, recompense, or reward, for any such deception, collusion, or fraud, shall forfeit and pay a sum not less than two hundred, nor more than two thousand dollars for each offence. And in all cases where an oath is by this act required from a master or other person having command of a ship or vessel, or from an owner or consignee of goods, wares, or merchandise, his or her factor or agent, if the person so swearing shall swear falsely, such person shall, on indictment and conviction thereof, be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, in the discretion of the court before whom the conviction shall be had, so as the fine shall not exceed one thousand dollars, and the term of imprisonment shall not exceed twelve months.

Sec. 67. And be it further enacted, That all penalties accruing by any breach of this act shall be sued for and recovered with costs of suit, in the name of the United States of America, in any court proper to try the same, and the trial of any fact which may be put in issue shall be within the judicial district in which any such penalty shall have accrued, and the collector, within whose district the seizure shall be made, is hereby authorized and directed to cause suits for the same to be commenced and prosecuted to effect, and to receive, distribute, and pay the sum or sums recovered, after first deducting all necessary costs and charges, according to law. And that all ships or vessels, goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall become forfeited by virtue of this act, shall be seized, labelled, and prosecuted as aforesaid, in the proper court having cognizance thereof; which court shall cause fourteen days' notice to be given of such seizure and label, by causing the substance of such label, with the order of the court thereon, setting forth the time and place appointed for trial, to be inserted in some newspaper, published near the place of seizure, and also by posting up the same in the most public manner for the space of fourteen days, at or near the place of trial, for which advertisement a sum not exceeding ten dollars shall be paid; and proclamation shall be made in such manner as the court shall direct; and if no person shall appear to claim such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, the same shall be adjudged to be forfeited; but if any person shall appear before such judgment of forfeiture, and claim any such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, and shall give bond to defend the prosecution thereof, and to respond the cost in case he shall not support his claim, the court shall proceed to hear and determine the cause according to law; and upon the prayer of any claimant to the court, that any ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise so seized and prosecuted, or any part thereof should be delivered to such claimant, it shall be lawful for the court to appoint three proper persons to appraise such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, who shall be sworn in open court for the faithful discharge of their duty; and such appraisement shall be made at the expense of the party on whose prayer it is granted; and on the return of such appraisement, if the claimant shall, with one or more sureties, to be approved of by the court, execute a bond in the usual form, to the United States, for the payment of a sum equal to the sum at which the ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, so prayed to be delivered, be appraised, the court shall, by rule, order such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, to be delivered to the said claimant, and the said bond shall be lodged with the proper officer of the court; and if judgment shall pass in favor of the claimant, the court shall cause the said bond to be cancelled; but if judgment shall pass against the claimant, as to the whole or any part of such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, and the claimant shall not within twenty days thereafter, pay into the court the amount of the appraised value of such ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise so condemned, with the costs, the bond shall be put in suit. And when any prosecution shall be commenced on account of the seizure of any ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, and judgment shall be given for the claimant or claimants, if it shall appear to the court before whom such prosecution shall be tried, that there was a reasonable cause of seizure, the same court shall cause a proper certificate or entry to be made thereof, and in such case the claimant shall not be entitled to costs, nor shall the person who made the seizure, or the prosecutor be liable to action, suit, or judgment, on account of such seizure or prosecution. Provided, That the ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise be, after judgment, forthwith returned to such claimant or claimants, his, her, or their agents. And provided, That no action or prosecution shall be maintained in any case under this act, unless the same shall have been commenced within three years next after the penalty or forfeiture was incurred.

Acts of Congress.

Sec. 68. And be it further enacted, That all ships, vessels, goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall be condemned by virtue of this act, shall be sold by the proper officer of the court in which such condemnation shall be had, to the highest bidder at public auction, by order of such court, and at such place as the court may appoint, giving at least fifteen days' notice (except in case of perishable goods) in one or more of the public newspapers of the place where such sale shall be, or if no paper is published in such place, in one or more of the papers published in the nearest place thereto, for which advertising a sum not exceeding five dollars shall be paid.

Sec. 69. And be it further enacted, That all penalties, fines, and forfeitures, recovered by virtue of this act, (and not otherwise appropriated,) shall, after deducting all proper costs and charges, be disposed of as follows: one moiety shall be for the use of the United States, and paid into the Treasury thereof; the other moiety shall be divided into equal parts, and paid to the collector and naval officer of the district and surveyor of the port wherein the same shall have been incurred, or to such of the said officers as there may be in the said district; and in districts where only one of the aforesaid officers shall have been established, the said moiety shall be given to such officer. Provided, nevertheless, That in all cases where such penalties, fines, and forfeitures, shall be recovered in pursuance of information given to such collector by any person other than the naval officer or surveyor of the district, the one half of such moiety shall be given to the informer, and the remainder thereof shall be disposed of between the collector and naval officer and surveyor or surveyors in manner aforesaid.

Sec. 70. And be it further enacted, That no goods, wares, or merchandise, of foreign growth or manufacture, subject to the payment of duties, shall be brought into the United States from any foreign port or place in any other manner than by sea, nor in any ship or vessel of less than thirty tons' burden, except within the district of Louisville, nor shall be landed or unladen at any other place than is by this act directed, under the penalty of seizure and forfeiture of all such vessels, and of the goods, wares, or merchandise brought in, landed, or unladen in any other manner. And all goods, wares, or merchandise brought into the United States by land, contrary to this act, shall be forfeited, together with the carriages, horses, and oxen, that shall be employed in conveying the same. Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to extend to household furniture and clothing belonging to any person or persons actually removing into any part of the United States, for the purpose of becoming an inhabitant or inhabitants thereof.

Sec. 71. And be it further enacted, That all matters by this act directed to be done to or by the collector of a district shall and may be done to and by the person who in the cases specified in this act, is, or may be, authorized to act in the place or stead of the said collector.

Sec. 72. And be it further enacted, That wherever an oath is required by this act, persons consecutiously scrupulous shall be permitted to affirm.

Sec. 73. And be it further enacted, That the master or person having the charge or command of a ship or vessel bound to a foreign port or place, shall deliver to the collector of the district from which such ship or vessel shall be about to depart, a manifest of the cargo on board the same, and shall make oath or affirmation to the truth thereof, whereupon the said collector shall grant a clearance for the said ship or vessel, and her cargo, but without specifying the particulars thereof, unless required by the said master or person having said charge or command. And if any ship or vessel bound to a foreign port or place shall depart on her voyage to such foreign port or place without such clearance, the said master or person having the said charge or command, shall forfeit and pay the sum of two hundred dollars for such offence.

Sec. 74. And be it further enacted, That after the first day of October next, the act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States," and also all other acts or parts of acts coming within the purview of this act, shall be repealed, and thenceforth cease to operate, except as to the continuance of the officers appointed in pursuance of the said act; except also as to the recovery and receipt of such duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels, as shall have accrued, and as to the payment of drawbacks and allowances in lieu thereof, upon the exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, which shall have been imported, and as to the recovery and distribution of fines, penalties, and forfeitures, which shall have been incurred before or upon the said day, subject, nevertheless, to the alterations contained and expressed in this present act.

And whereas by the act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties imposed by law on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States," it was declared that the rule of Russia should be rated at one hundred cents, and by the act entitled "An act to explain and amend an act entitled 'An act for registering and clearing vessels, regulating the coasting trade, and for other purposes,'" that part of the said first mentioned act, which so rated the rule of Russia, was repealed and made null and void; and whereas it is doubted whether the said repeal can operate with respect to duties incurred prior thereto, as was intended by Congress:

Sec. 75. Therefore be it enacted and declared, That the said repeal shall be deemed to operate in respect to all duties which may have arisen or accrued prior thereto.

Acts of Congress.

Approved, August 4, 1790.

An act to continue in force, for a limited time, an act entitled "An act for the temporary establishment of the Post Office."

Be it enacted, &c., That the act passed the last session of Congress, entitled "An act for the temporary establishment of the Post Office," be, and the same hereby is, continued in force until the end of next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, August 4, 1790.

An Act to provide more effectually for the settlement of the accounts between the United States and individual States.

Be it enacted, &c., That a board, to consist of three commissioners be, and hereby is, established to settle the accounts between the United States and the individual States; and the determination of a majority of the said commissioners on the claims submitted to them shall be final and conclusive; and they shall have power to employ such number of clerks as they may find necessary.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said commissioners shall respectively take an oath or affirmation before the Chief Justice of the United States, or one of the associate or district judges, that they will faithfully and impartially execute the duties of their office. And they shall each of them be entitled to receive at the rate of two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars per annum, payable quarterly at the Treasury of the United States for their respective services.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to receive and examine all claims which shall be exhibited to them before the first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, and to determine on all such as shall have accrued for the general or particular defence during the war, and on evidence thereof, according to the principles of general equity (although such claims may not be sanctioned by the resolves of Congress, or supported by regular vouchers) so as to provide for the final settlement of all accounts between the United States and the States individually; but no evidence of a claim heretofore admitted by a commissioner of the United States for any State or District shall be subject to such examination; nor shall the claim of any citizen be admitted as a charge against the United States in the account of any State, unless the same was allowed by such State before the twenty-fourth day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said commissioners to examine and liquidate to specie value, on principles of equity, the credits and debits of the States already on the books of the Treasury for bills of credit subsequent to the eighteenth of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners shall debit each State with all advances which have been, or may be, made to it by the United States, and with the interest thereon to the last day of the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, and shall credit each State for its disbursements and advances on the principles contained in the third section of this act, with interest to the day aforesaid, and having struck the balance due to each State, shall find the aggregate of all the balances, which aggregate shall be apportioned between the States, agreeably to the rule hereinafter given; and the difference between such apportionments and the respective balances shall be carried in a new account to the debit or credit of the States respectively, as the case may be.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the rule for apportioning to the States the aggregate of the balances first above mentioned, shall be the same that is prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the apportionment of representation and direct taxes, and according to the first enumeration which shall be made.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the States who shall have balances placed to their credit on the books of the Treasury of the United States, shall, within twelve months after the same shall have been so accredited, be entitled to have the same funded upon the same terms with the other part of the domestic debt of the United States; but the balances so credited to any State shall not be transferable.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the clerks employed, or to be employed by the said commissioners, shall receive like salaries as clerks employed in the Treasury Department.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the powers of the said commissioners shall continue until the first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, unless the business shall be sooner accomplished.

Approved, August 5, 1790.

An Act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States.

Whereas, by an act, entitled "An act for laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States," divers duties were laid on goods, wares, and merchandise, so imported, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures. And whereas the support of government and the discharge of the said debts render it necessary to increase the said duties:

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the last day of December next, the duties specified and laid in and by the act aforesaid, shall cease and determine; and that upon all goods, wares, and merchandise, (not herein particularly excepted,) which after the said day shall be brought into the United States, from any foreign port or place, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the several respective duties following, that is to say: Madeira wine of the quality of London particular, per gallon, thirty-five cents; other Madeira wine, per gallon, thirty cents; Sherry wine, per gallon, twenty-five cents; other wine, per gallon, twenty cents; distilled spirits, if more than ten per cent. below proof, according to Dycas's hydrometer, per gallon, twelve cents; if more than five, and not more than ten per cent. below proof, according to the same hydrometer, per gallon, twelve and a half cents; if of proof, and not more than five per cent. below proof, according to the same hydrometer, per gallon, thirteen cents; if above proof, but not exceeding twenty per cent. according to the same hydrometer, per gallon, fifteen cents; if of more than twenty, and not more than forty per cent. above proof, according to the same hydrometer, per gallon, twenty cents; if of more than forty per cent. above proof, according to the same hydrometer, per gallon, twenty-five cents; molasses, per gallon, three cents; beer, ale, and porter, in casks, per gallon, five cents; stout, and porter, in bottles, per dozen, twenty cents. Teas from China and India, in ships or vessels of the United States, bohea, per pound, ten cents; souchong and other black teas, per pound, eighteen cents; hyson, per pound, thirty-two cents; other green teas, per pound, twenty cents; teas from Europe, in ships or vessels of the United States, bohea, per pound, twelve cents; souchong and other black teas, per pound, twenty-one cents; hyson, per pound, twenty cents; other green teas, per pound, twenty-four cents; teas from any other place, or in any other ships or vessels, bohea, per pound, fifteen cents; souchong and other black teas, per pound, twenty-seven cents; hyson, per pound, thirty cents; other green teas, per pound, twenty-four cents; coffee, per pound, four cents; cocoa, per pound, one cent; loaf sugar, per pound, five cents; brown sugar, per pound, one cent and a half; other sugar, per pound, two and a half cents; candles of tallow, per pound, two cents; candles of wax or spermaceti, per pound, six cents; cheese, per pound, four cents; soap, per pound, two cents; pepper, per pound, six cents; pimento, per pound, four cents; manufactured tobacco, per pound, six cents; snuff, per pound, ten cents; indigo, per pound, twenty-five cents; cotton, per pound, three cents; nails and spikes, per pound, one cent; bar, and other lead, per pound, one cent; steel, unwrought, per one hundred and twelve pounds, seventy-five cents; hemp, per one hundred and twelve pounds, fifty-four cents; cables, per one hundred and twelve pounds, one hundred cents; tarred cordage, per one hundred and twelve pounds, one hundred cents; untarred cordage, per one hundred and twelve pounds, one hundred and fifty cents; twine and packthread, per one hundred and twelve pounds, three hundred cents; salt, per bushel, twelve cents; malt, per bushel, ten cents; coal, per bushel, three cents; boots, per pair, fifty cents; shoes, slippers, and galoshes, made of leather, per pair, seven cents; shoes and slippers made of silk or stuff, per pair, ten cents; wool and cotton cards, per dozen, fifty cents; playing cards, per pack, ten cents; all China ware, looking-glasses, window and other glass, and all manufactures of glass, (black quart by virtue of this act, shall be returned or discharged in respect to all such goods, wares, or merchandise, whereupon they shall have been so paid, or secured to be paid, as within twelve calendar months after payment made, or security given, shall be exported to any foreign port or place, except one per centum on the amount of the said duties, which shall be retained as an indemnification for whatever expense may have accrued concerning the same.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed and paid on dried and pickled fish, of the fisheries of the United States, and on other provisions salted within the said States, which, after the said last day of December next, shall be exported therefrom to any foreign port or place, in lieu of a drawback of the duty on the salt which shall have been expended thereupon, according to the following rates, namely: dried fish, per quintal, ten cents; pickled fish, and other salted provisions, per barrel, ten cents.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That where duties by this act are imposed, or drawbacks allowed on any specific quantity of goods, wares, and merchandise, the same shall be deemed to apply in proportion to any quantity, more or less, than such specific quantity.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all the duties, which, by virtue of the act, entitled "An act for laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States," accrued between the time specified in the said act for the commencement of the said duties, and the respective times when the collectors entered upon the duties of their respective offices in the several districts, be, and they are, hereby, remitted and discharged, and that in any case in which they may have been paid to the United States, restitution thereof shall be made.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the several duties imposed by this act shall continue to be collected and paid, until the debts and purposes for which they are pledged and appropriated shall be fully discharged: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Legislature of the United States from substituting other duties or taxes of equal value to any or all of the said duties and imposts.

Approved, August 10, 1790.

An Act to enable the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line on Continental establishment, to obtain titles to certain lands lying northwest of the river Ohio, between the Little Miami and Sciota.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act of Congress of the seventeenth of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight, relative to certain locations and surveys made by, or on account of the Virginia troops on Continental establishment, upon lands between the Little Miami and Sciota rivers, northwest of the Ohio be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

And whereas, the agents for such of the troops of the State of Virginia, who served on the Continental establishment in the army of the United States, during the war, have reported to the Executive of the said State, that there is not a sufficiency of good land on the southeasterly side of the river Ohio, according to the act of cession from the said State to the United States, and within the limits assigned by the laws of the said State, to satisfy the said troops for the bounty lands due to them, in conformity to the said laws; to the intent therefore that the difference between what has already been located for the said troops on the southeasterly side of the said river, and the aggregate of what is due to the whole of the said troops, may be located on the northwesterly side of the said river, and between the Sciota and Little Miami rivers, as stipulated by the said State:

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Department of War shall make return to the Executive of the State of Virginia of the names of such of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the line of the said State, who served in the army of the United States, on the Continental establishment, during the late war, and who, in conformity to the laws of the said State, are entitled to bounty lands; and shall also in such return state the aggregate amount in acres due to the said line by the laws aforesaid.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the said agents to locate to and for the use of the said troops, between the rivers Sciota and Little Miami, such a number of acres of good land as shall, together with the number already located between the said two rivers, and the number already located on the southeasterly side of the river Ohio, be equal to the aggregate amount, so to be returned as aforesaid by the Secretary of the Department of War.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said agents, as soon as may be after the locations, surveys, and allotments are made and completed, shall enter in regular order, in a book to be by them provided for that purpose, the bounds of each location and survey between the said two rivers, annexing the name of the officer, non-commissioned officer, or private, originally entitled to each; which entries being certified by the said agents, or the majority of them, to be true entries, the book containing the same shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to cause letters patent to be made out in such words and form as he shall devise and direct, granting to such person so originally entitled to bounty lands, to his use, and to the use of his heirs or assigns, or his or their legal representative or representatives, his, her, or their heirs or assigns, the lands designated in the said entries. Provided always, That before the seal of the United States shall be affixed to such letters patent, the Secretary of the Department of War shall have indorsed thereon that the grantee therein named was originally entitled to such bounty lands, and that he has examined the bounds thereof with the books of entries filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and finds the same truly inserted; and every such letters patent shall be countersigned by the Secretary of State, and a minute of the date thereof, and of the name of the grantee, shall be entered of record in his office, in a book to be specially provided for his purpose.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State, as soon as may be after the letters patent shall be so completed and entered of record, to transmit the same to the Executive of the State of Virginia, to be by them delivered to each grantee; or in case of his death, or that the right of the grantees shall have been legally transferred before such delivery, then to his legal representative or representatives, or to one of them.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That no fees shall be charged for such letters patent and record, to the grantees, their heirs or assigns, or to his or their legal representative or representatives.

Approved, August 10, 1790.

An Act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to finish the light-house on Portland Head, in the District of Maine.

Be it enacted, &c., That there be appropriated and paid out of the moneys arising from the duties on imports and tonnage, a sum not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars, for the purpose of finishing the light-house on Portland Head, in the District of Maine; and that the Secretary of the Treasury, under the directions of the President of the United States, be authorized to cause the said light-house to be finished and completed accordingly.

Approved, August 10, 1790.

An Act to alter the times for holding the Circuit Courts of the United States in the districts of South Carolina and Georgia, and providing that the District court of Pennsylvania shall in future be held at the city of Philadelphia only.

Be it enacted, &c. That the circuit courts of the United States in the districts of South Carolina and Georgia shall for the future be held as follows, to wit: in the district of South Carolina on the twenty-first day of October next, at Charleston, and in each succeeding year at Columbia on the twelfth day of May, and in Charleston on the twenty-fifth day of October; in the district of Georgia, on the fifteenth day of October next, at Augusta, and in each succeeding year at Savannah, on the twenty-fifth day of April, and at Augusta on the fifteenth day of October; except when any of those days shall happen to be Sunday, in which case the court shall be held on the Monday following. And all process that was returnable under the former law at Charleston, on the first day of October next, and at Augusta on the seventeenth day of October, shall now be deemed returnable respectively at Charleston on the twenty-fifth day of October next, and at Augusta on the fifteenth day of October next; any thing in the former law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," as directs that the district court for the district of Pennsylvania shall be held at Yorktown in the said State, be repealed; and that in future the district court for Pennsylvania be held in the city of Philadelphia.

Approved, August 11, 1790.

An Act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of the States of Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

Be it enacted, &c. That the consent of Congress be, and is hereby, declared to the operation of the acts of the several States, hereinafter mentioned, so far as the same relate to the levying a duty on the tonnage of ships and vessels, for the purposes therein mentioned, until the tenth day of January next, that is to say: an act of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, at their session held in January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, entitled "An act to incorporate certain persons, by the name of the River Machine Company, in the town of Providence, and for other purposes therein mentioned;" and also an act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, at their session in April, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, entitled "An act appointing wardens for the port of Baltimore Town, in Baltimore county;" as also another act of the General Assembly of the same State, passed at their session in November, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight, entitled "A supplement to the act entitled 'An act for appointing wardens for the port of Baltimore county,'" and also an act of the State of Georgia, "for levying and appropriating a duty on tonnage for the purpose of clearing the river Savannah, and removing the wrecks and other obstructions therein."

Approved, August 11, 1790.

An act for the relief of disabled soldiers and seamen lately in the service of the United States, and of certain other persons.

Be it enacted, &c., That Stephen Califfe, Jeremiah Ryan, Joseph McGibbon, Samuel Garretson, Ephraim McCoy, Christian Khun, David Steele, Joseph Shutliff, and Daniel Culver, disabled soldiers lately in the service of the United States, be allowed pensions at the rate of five dollars per month from the time their pay in the army respectively ceased. That Christian Wolfe, a disabled soldier, be allowed a pension at the rate of four dollars per month, from the date of his discharge. That Edward Scott, a disabled soldier, be allowed a pension at the rate of three dollars per month from the date of his discharge. That David Weaver and George Schell, disabled soldiers, be each allowed a pension, at the rate of two dollars per month, from the date of their respective discharges. That Seth Boardman, a disabled soldier, be allowed a pension, at the rate of three dollars and one-third of a dollar per month, from the seventeenth day of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-six. That Severinus Koch, a disabled captain of Colonel Jacob Klock's regiment of New York militia, be allowed a pension, at the rate of five dollars per month, from the twentieth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven. That John Younglove, a disabled major of Colonel Lewis Van Woot's regiment of New York militia, be allowed a pension, at the rate of six dollars per month, from the thirtieth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-one. That William White, a disabled private of Col. Williams's regiment of New York militia, be allowed a pension, at the rate of three dollars and one-third of a dollar per month, from the first day of April, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-six. That Jacob Newkirk, a disabled soldier of Colonel John Harper's regiment of New York State troops, be allowed a pension, at the rate of three dollars per month, from the twenty-second day of October, one thousand seven hundred and eighty. That David Poole, a disabled seaman lately in the service of the United States, be allowed a pension of five dollars per month, to commence on the fifth of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That Caleb Brewster, lately a lieutenant, who was wounded and disabled in the service of the United States, be allowed three hundred and forty-eight dollars and fifty-seven cents, the amount of his necessary expenses for sustenance and medical assistance, while dangerously ill of his wounds, including the interest to the first of July, one thousand seven hundred and ninety. And that the said Brewster be allowed a pension equal to his half-pay as a lieutenant from the third of November, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, he first having returned his commutation of half-pay.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That Nathaniel Gove, a disabled lieutenant, lately in the service of the United States, be allowed a pension, at the rate of six dollars and two-thirds of a dollar per month, from the twentieth of May, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-eight, to the first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-six, and that he be allowed at the rate of thirteen dollars and one-third of a dollar per month, from the said first day of July, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-six.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the commissioner of army accounts be authorized and directed to settle the pay and depreciation of the capitulation of the Cedars, as a captain in the line of the army, and that he issue certificates accordingly. That he also issue a certificate to Charles Markley, lately a captain in Armand's corps, for the commutation of his half-pay. That he also settle the accounts of James Derry and Benjamin Hardison, who were made prisoners in Canada, in May, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-six, and forcibly detained in captivity among the Indians, and that he issue certificates for the balance of their pay respectively, to the third of November, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the several pensions mentioned in this act, due or to become due from the fifth of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, shall be paid according to such laws as have been made, or shall be made relative to invalid pensioners; and that the arrears of the said pensions, due before the said fifth day of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, shall be paid in such manner as Congress may hereafter provide for paying the arrears of pensions.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed to Seth Harding, for three months and ten days' services on board the Alliance frigate, during the late war, at the rate of sixty dollars per month, being the pay of a captain, to be paid out of the moneys arising from imports and tonnage.

Approved, August 11, 1790.

An act for the relief of the persons therein mentioned or described.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Register of the Treasury shall, and is hereby required to grant unto Sarah, the widow of the late Major General Earl of Stirling, who died in the service of the United States, a certificate to entitle her to a sum equal to an annuity for seven years' half-pay of a major-general, to commence as from the fourteenth day of January, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, in conformity to the act of the late Congress, passed on the twenty-fourth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty; the amount for which the said certificate is to be granted to be ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury, and on similar principles as other debts of the United States are liquidated and certified.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said register shall grant unto Frances Eleanor Laurens, the orphan daughter of the late Lieutenant-Colonel John Laurens, who was killed whilst in the service of the United States, a certificate to entitle her to a sum equal to an annuity for seven years' half pay of a lieutenant-colonel, to commence as from the twenty-fifth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-two, according to the act of the late Congress of the twenty-fourth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty; the amount for which the said certificate is to be granted to be ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury in manner aforesaid.

And whereas no provision hath heretofore been made for discharging the arrears of pensions due to officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers, who were wounded and disabled whilst in the service of the United States: Therefore,

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That each of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers, who are so wounded and disabled, and who are now placed on the books in the office of the Secretary of the Department of War, as a pensioner or to be so placed in conformity to any law of this Congress, shall receive from the Register of the Treasury, who is hereby required to grant the same, a certificate, to be liquidated and settled in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, for a sum equal to the pension annually due to him, to commence from the time he became entitled thereto, or from the time to which the same had been paid, as the case may be, which shall be ascertained and certified by the said Secretary for the Department of War, and which annuity shall be liquidated to the fourth day of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, from which day the United States have assumed the payment of the pensions certified by the several States. And in case of the death of any person so entitled, the certificate shall pass to his heirs or legal representative or representatives.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the widow or orphan of each officer, non-commissioned officer, or soldier, who was killed or died whilst in the service of the United States, and who is now placed on the books in the office of the said Secretary, as entitled to a pension, by virtue of any act of the said late Congress, or any law of this Congress, and for whom provision has not been made by any State, and to whom any arrears of such pension are due, and which have arisen prior to the said fourth day of March, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, shall receive a certificate therefor in like manner, and on the same principles, as certificates are by this act directed to be given to officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers, who were wounded or disabled as aforesaid.

Approved, August 11, 1790.

An Act making certain appropriations therein mentioned.

Be it enacted, &c., That there be appropriated to the purposes hereinafter mentioned, to be paid out of the moneys arising from the duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels, the following sums, to wit: the sum of thirty-eight thousand eight hundred and ninety-two dollars and seventy-five cents, towards discharging certain debts contracted by Abraham Skinner, late commissary of prisoners, on account of the subsistence of the officers of the late army while in captivity; the sum of forty thousand dollars, towards discharging certain debts contracted by Colonel Timothy Pickens, late quartermaster-general, and which sum was included in the amount of a warrant drawn in his favor by the late superintendent of the finances of the United States, and which warrant was not discharged; the sum of one hundred and four thousand three hundred and twenty-seven dollars and twenty-two cents, for the several purposes specified in an estimate accompanying the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the fifth instant, including one thousand dollars for defraying the expenses of certain establishments for the security of navigation, of the like nature with those mentioned in the act, entitled "An act for the establishment and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers," but not particularly specified therein; the sum of one hundred and eighty-one dollars and forty-two cents, for reimbursing the Secretary at War an advance by him made on account of George Morgan White Eyes, over and above the sum heretofore appropriated on account of the said George Morgan White Eyes; the sum of six hundred and thirty-two dollars and eighty cents, for the services and expenses of Isaac Guion, employed by direction of the President of the United States, in relation to the resolution of Congress of the twenty-sixth of August last; the sum of forty-one dollars and forty-seven cents, for reimbursing the Treasurer of the United States the costs by him paid on a protested bill; the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, for the salary of an interpreter of the French language, employed in the Department of State; the sum of three hundred and twenty-six dollars and six cents, for sundry expenditures by Richard Phillips, on account of the household of the late President of Congress, and for certain unsatisfied claims against the same; the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars, towards compensating the late loan officer of Pennsylvania for his services in relation to the re-exchange of certificates granted by the State of Pennsylvania, in lieu of certificates of the United States; which several sums so included in the said sum of one hundred and four thousand three hundred and twenty-seven dollars and twenty-two cents, are hereby authorized and granted; and the further sum of fifty thousand dollars, towards discharging such demands on the United States, not otherwise provided for, as shall have been ascertained and admitted in due course of settlement at the Treasury, and which are of a nature according to the usage thereof to require payments in specie.

Approved, August 12, 1790.

An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt.

It being desirable by all just and proper means to effect a reduction of the amount of the public debt, and as the application of such surplus of the revenue as may remain after satisfying the purposes for which appropriations shall have been made by law, will not only contribute to that desirable end, but will be beneficial to the creditors of the United States, by raising the price of their stock, and be productive of considerable saving to the United States:

Be it enacted, &c., That all such surplus of the product of the duties on goods, wares, and merchandise imported, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels to the last day of December next, inclusively, as shall remain after satisfying the several purposes for which appropriations shall have been made by law to the end of the present session, shall be applied to the purchase of the debt of the United States, at its market price, if not exceeding the par or true value thereof.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the purchases to be made of the said debt shall be made under the direction of the President of the Senate, the Chief Justice, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General, for the time being; and who, or any three of whom, with the approbation of the President of the United States, shall cause the said purchases to be made in such manner and under such regulations as shall appear to them best calculated to fulfil the intent of this act. Provided, That the same be made openly, and with due regard to the equal benefit of the several States. And provided further, That to avoid all risk or failure, or delay in the payment of interest stipulated to be paid for and during the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, by the act entitled "An act making provision for the debt of the United States," such reservations shall be made of the said surplus as may be necessary to make good the said payments, as they shall respectively become due, in case of deficiency in the amount of the receipts into the Treasury during the said year, on account of the duties on goods, wares, and merchandise imported, and the tonnage of ships or vessels, after the last day of December next.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That accounts of the application of the said moneys shall be rendered for settlement as other public accounts, accompanied with returns of the amount of the said debt purchased therewith, at the end of every quarter of a year, to be computed from the time of commencing the purchases aforesaid; and that a full and exact report of the proceedings of the said five persons, or any three of them, including a statement of the disbursements and purchases made under their direction, specifying the times thereof, the prices at which, and the parties from whom the same may be made, shall be laid before Congress, within the first fourteen days of each session which may ensue the present, during the execution of their said trust.

ACTS OF THE THIRD SESSION OF THE FIRST CONGRESS.

An Act supplementary to the act entitled "An act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States."

Whereas no express provision has been made for extending the act, entitled, "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels," to the collection of the duties imposed by the said "Act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States," doubts concerning the same may arise: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the act, entitled "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States,

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be borrowed, on behalf of the United States, a sum or sums not exceeding the whole two millions of dollars, at an interest not exceeding five per cent., and that the sum or sums so borrowed be also applied to the purchase of the said debt of the United States, under the like direction, in the like manner, and subject to the like regulations and restrictions with the surplus aforesaid: Provided, That out of the interest arising on the debt to be purchased in manner aforesaid, there shall be appropriated and applied a sum not exceeding the rate of eight per centum per annum on account both of principal and interest towards the repayment of the two millions of dollars so to be borrowed.

Approved, August 12, 1790.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in America in Congress assembled, That all treaties made, or which shall be made and promulgated under the authority of the United States shall, from time to time, be published and annexed to their code of laws by the Secretary of State.

Approved, June 14, 1790.

Resolved, &c., That all surveys of lands in the Western Territory, made under the direction of the late geographer, Thomas Hutchins, agreeable to contracts for part of the said lands made with the late Board of Treasury, be returned to and perfected by the Secretary of the Treasury, so as to complete the said contracts; and that the said Secretary be, and is hereby, authorized to direct the making and completing any other surveys that remain to be made, so as to comply on the part of the United States with the several contracts aforesaid, in conformity to the terms thereof.

Approved, August 12, 1790.

and on the tonnage of ships or vessels," doth and shall extend to, and be in force for, the collection of the duties specified and laid in and by the act, entitled "An act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States," as fully and effectually as if every regulation, restriction, penalty, provision, clause, matter, or thing therein contained, had been inserted in and re-enacted by the act last aforesaid.

FRED. A. MUHLENBERG,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

JOHN ADAMS,
Vice President of the United States, and President of the Senate.

APPROVED, December 27, 1790.

GEO. WASHINGTON,
President of the United States.

An Act to provide for the unloading of ships or vessels, in cases of obstruction by ice.

Whereas, it sometimes happens that ships or vessels are obstructed by ice in their passage to the ports of their destination, and it is necessary that provision should be made for unloading such ships or vessels:

Be it enacted, &c., That in all cases where a ship or vessel shall be prevented by ice from getting to the port at which her cargo is intended to be delivered, it shall be lawful for the collector of the district, in which such ship or vessel may be so obstructed, to receive the report and entry of any such ship or vessel, and with the consent of the naval officer (where there is one) to grant a permit or permits for unloading or landing the goods, wares, or merchandise, imported in such ship or vessel at any place within his district, which shall appear to him to be most convenient and proper.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the report and entry of such ship or vessel, and of her cargo, or any part thereof, and all persons concerned therein, shall be under and subject to the same rules, regulations, restrictions, penalties, and provisions, as if the said ship or vessel had arrived at the port of her destination, and had then proceeded to the delivery of her cargo.

Approved, January 7, 1791.

An Act to continue an act, entitled "An act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of the States of Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations," so far as the same respects the States of Georgia, and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act, passed the last session of Congress, entitled "An act, declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of the States of Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations," shall be continued, and is hereby declared to be in full force, so far as the same respects the States of Georgia, and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, for the further term of one year, and from thence to the end of the then next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, January 10, 1791.

An Act declaring the consent of Congress, that a new State be formed within the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and admitted into this Union, by the name of the State of Kentucky.

Whereas, the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Virginia, by an act, entitled "An act concerning the erection of the District of Kentucky into an independent State," passed the eighteenth day of December, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, have consented that the District of Kentucky, within the jurisdiction of the said Commonwealth, and according to its actual boundaries at the time of passing the act aforesaid, should be formed into a new State: and whereas a convention of delegates, chosen by the people of the said District of Kentucky, have pe-tioned Congress to consent that on the first day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, the said District should be formed into a new State, and received into the Union by the name of the State of Kentucky:"

Be it enacted, &c., That the Congress doth consent that the said District of Kentucky, within the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and according to its actual boundaries, on the eighteenth day of December, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, shall, upon the first day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, be formed into a new State, separate from, and independent of, the said Commonwealth of Virginia.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted and declared, That, upon the aforesaid first day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, the said new State, by the name and style of the State of Kentucky, shall be received and admitted into this Union, as a new and entire member of the United States of America.

Approved, February 4, 1791.

An Act declaring the consent of Congress to a certain act of the State of Maryland.

Be it enacted, &c., That the consent of Congress be, and is hereby, granted and declared to the operation of an act of the General Assembly of Maryland, made and passed at a session begun and held at the city of Annapolis, on the first Monday in November last, entitled "An act to levy and collect the duty therein mentioned," until the tenth day of January next, and from thence until the end of the then next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, February 9, 1791.

An Act making appropriations for the support of Government during the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That there be appropriated the several sums, and for the several purposes following, to wit: a sum not exceeding two hundred and ninety-nine thousand two hundred and seventy-six dollars and fifty-three cents, for defraying the expenses of the civil list, as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the statement, number one, accompanying his report to the House of Representatives of the sixth instant, including the contingencies of the several Executive officers, and of the two Houses of Congress, which are hereby authorized and granted: a sum not exceeding fifty thousand seven hundred and fifty-six dollars and fifty-three cents, for satisfying the several objects specified in the statement, number two, accompanying the report aforesaid, all such whereof, as may not have been heretofore provided for by law, being hereby authorized; and a sum not exceeding three hundred and ninety thousand one hundred and ninety-nine dollars and fifty-four cents, for the use of the Department of War, pursuant to the statement, number three, accompanying the report aforesaid, including therein the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, for defraying the expenses of an expedition lately carried on against certain Indian tribes, and the sum of eighty-seven thousand four hundred and sixty-three dollars and sixty cents, being the amount of one year's pensions to invalids, together with the contingencies of the said Department, which are hereby authorized: which several sums shall be paid out of the funds following, namely, the sum of six hundred thousand dollars, which, by the act, entitled "An act making provision for the debt of the United States," is reserved yearly for the support of the Government of the United States and their common defence; the amount of such surpluses as may remain in the Treasury, after satisfying the purposes for which appropriations were made, by the acts respectively, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the present year," passed the twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine; "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety," passed the twenty-sixth day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety; "An act making certain appropriations therein mentioned," passed the twelfth day of August, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, and the product, during the present year, of such duties as shall be laid in the present session of Congress.

Approved, February 11, 1791.

An Act for the admission of the State of Vermont into this Union.

The State of Vermont having petitioned the Congress to be admitted a member of the United States,

Be it enacted, &c., That on the fourth day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, the said State, by the name and style of "the State of Vermont," shall be received and admitted into this Union, as a new and entire member of the United States of America.

Approved, February 18, 1791.

An Act to continue in force, for a limited time, an act passed at the first session of Congress, entitled "An act to regulate processes in the courts of the United States."

Be it enacted, &c., That an act, passed on the twenty-ninth day of September, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, entitled "An act to regulate processes in the courts of the United States," shall be, and the same hereby is, continued in force, until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, February 18, 1791.

An Act regulating the number of Representatives to be chosen by the States of Kentucky and Vermont.

Be it enacted, &c., That until the representatives in Congress shall be apportioned according to an actual enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, the States of Kentucky and Vermont shall each be entitled to choose two representatives.

Approved, February 25, 1791.

An Act to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the United States.

Whereas it is conceived that the establishment of a bank for the United States, upon a foundation sufficiently extensive to answer the purposes intended thereby, and at the same time upon the principles which afford adequate security for an upright and prudent administration thereof, will be very conducive to the successful conducting of the national finances; will tend to give facility to the obtaining of loans, for the use of the Government, in sudden emergencies, and will be productive of considerable advantage to trade and industry in general: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That a Bank of the United States shall be established; the capital stock whereof shall not exceed ten millions of dollars, divided into twenty-five thousand shares, each share being four hundred dollars; and that subscriptions towards constituting the said stock, shall, on the first Monday of April next, be opened at the city of Philadelphia, under the superintendence of such persons, not less than three, as shall be appointed for that purpose by the President of the United States, who is hereby empowered to appoint the said persons accordingly; which subscriptions shall continue open until the whole of the said stock shall have been subscribed.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any person, co-partnership, or body politic, to subscribe for such or so many shares as he, she, or they shall think fit, not exceeding one thousand, except as shall be hereafter directed relatively to the United States; and that the sums respectively subscribed, except on behalf of the United States, shall be payable one-fourth in gold and silver, and three-fourths in that part of the public debt, which, according to the loan proposed in the fourth and fifteenth sections of the act, entitled "An act making provision for the debt of the United States," shall bear an accruing interest, at the time of payment of six per centum per annum, and shall also be payable in four equal parts, in the aforesaid ratio of specie to debt, at the distance of six calendar months from each other; the first whereof shall be paid at time of subscription.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all those who shall become subscribers to the said bank, their successors and assigns, shall be, and are hereby, created and made a corporation and body politic, by the name and style of "The President, Directors, and Company of the Bank of the United States;" and shall so continue until the fourth of March, one thousand eight hundred and eleven: and by that name shall be, and are hereby, made able and capable in law, to have, purchase, receive, possess, enjoy, and retain to them and their successors, lands, rents, tenements, hereditaments, goods, chattels, and effects of what kind, nature, or quality soever, to the amount not exspecifying, in such notice, the object or objects of such meeting.

VII. Every cashier or treasurer, before he enters upon the duties of his office, shall be required to give bond, with two or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the directors, in a sum not less than fifty thousand dollars, with condition for his good behaviour.

VIII. The lands, tenements, and hereditaments which it shall be lawful for the said corporation to hold, shall be only such as shall be requisite for its immediate accommodation in relation to the convenient transacting of its business, and such as shall have been bona fide mortgaged to it by way of security, or conveyed to it in satisfaction of debts previously contracted in the course of its dealings, or purchased at sales upon judgments which shall have been obtained for such debts.

IX. The total amount of the debts which the said corporation shall at any time owe, whether by bond, bill, note, or other contract, shall not exceed the sum of ten millions of dollars, over and above the moneys then actually deposited in the bank for safe-keeping, unless the contracting of any greater debt shall have been previously authorized by a law of the United States. In case of excess, the directors, under whose administration it shall happen, shall be liable for the same, in their natural and private capacities; and an action of debt may, in such case, be brought against them, or any of them, their or any of their heirs, executors, or administrators, in any court of record of the United States, or either of them, by any creditor or creditors of the said corporation, and may be prosecuted to judgment and execution; any condition, covenant, or agreement to the contrary notwithstanding. But this shall not be construed to exempt the said corporation, or the lands, tenements, goods, or chattels of the same, from being also liable for and chargeable with the said excess. Such of the said directors, who may have been absent when the said excess was contracted or created, or who may have dissented from the resolution or act whereby the same was so contracted or created, may respectively exonerate themselves from being so liable, by forthwith giving notice of the fact, and of their absence or dissent, to the President of the United States, and to the stockholders, at a general meeting, which they shall have power to call for that purpose.

X. The said corporation may sell any part of the public debt whereof its stock shall be composed, but shall not be at liberty to purchase any public debt whatsoever; nor shall directly or indirectly deal or trade in anything except bills of exchange, gold or silver bullion, or in the sale of goods really and truly pledged for money lent and not redeemed in due time; or of goods which shall be the produce of its lands. Neither shall the said corporation take more than at the rate of six per centum per annum, for or upon its loans or discounts.

XI. No loan shall be made by the said corporation, for the use or on account of the Government, for the use or on account of the Govern-place may be filled up by a new choice for the remainder of the year.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the directors for the time being shall have power to appoint such officers, clerks, and servants, under whom as shall be necessary for executing the business of the said corporation, and to allow them such compensation, for their services respectively, as shall be reasonable; and shall be capable of exercising such other powers and authorities, for the well governing and ordering of the affairs of the said corporation, as shall be described, fixed, and determined by the laws, regulations, and ordinances of the same.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the following rules, restrictions, limitations, and provisions shall form and be fundamental articles of the constitution of the said corporation, viz:

I. The number of votes to which each stockholder shall be entitled, shall be according to the number of shares he shall hold, in the proportions following: that is to say, for one share, and not more than two shares, one vote; for every two shares above two, and not exceeding ten, one vote; for every four shares above ten, and not exceeding thirty, one vote; for every six shares above thirty, and not exceeding sixty, one vote; for every eight shares above sixty, and not exceeding one hundred, one vote; and for every ten shares above one hundred, one vote; but no person, co-partnership, or body politic, shall be entitled to a greater number than thirty votes. And after the first election, no share or shares shall confer a right of suffrage, which shall not have been holden three calendar months previous to the day of election. Stockholders actually resident within the United States, and none other, may vote in elections by proxy.

II. Not more than three-fourths of the directors in office, exclusive of the president, shall be eligible for the next succeeding year; but the director, who shall be president at the time of an election, may always be re-elected.

III. None but a stockholder, being a citizen of the United States, shall be eligible as a director.

IV. No director shall be entitled to any emolument, unless the same shall have been allowed by the stockholders at a general meeting. The stockholders shall make such compensation to the president, for his extraordinary attendance at the bank, as shall appear to them reasonable.

V. Not less than seven directors shall constitute a board for the transaction of business, of whom the president shall always be one, except in case of sickness, or necessary absence; in which case his place may be supplied by any other director, whom he, by writing under his hand, shall nominate for the purpose.

VI. Any number of stockholders, not less than sixty, who, together, shall be proprietors of two hundred shares or upwards, shall have power at any time to call a general meeting of the stockholders, for purposes relative to the institution, giving at least ten weeks' notice in two public gazettes of the place where the bank is kept, and ceeding in the whole fifteen millions of dollars, including the amount of the capital stock aforesaid; and the same to sell, grant, demise, alien, or dispose of; to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend and be defended, in courts of record, or any other place whatsoever; and also, to make, have, and use a common seal, and the same to break, alter, and renew at their pleasure; and also to ordain, establish, and put in execution, such by-laws, ordinances, and regulations, as shall seem necessary and convenient for the government of the said corporation, not being contrary to law, or to the constitution thereof, (for which purpose general meetings of the stockholders shall and may be called by the directors, and in the manner hereinafter specified,) and generally to do and execute all and singular acts, matters, and things which to them it shall or may appertain to do; subject, nevertheless, to the rules, regulations, restrictions, limitations, and provisions, hereinafter prescribed and declared.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That, for the well ordering of the affairs of the said corporation there shall be twenty-five directors; of whom there shall be an election on the first Monday of January in each year, by the stockholders or proprietors of the capital stock of the said corporation, and by plurality of the votes actually given; and those who shall be duly chosen at any election, shall be capable of serving as directors, by virtue of such choice, until the end or expiration of the Monday of January next ensuing the time of such election, and no longer.

Sec. 5. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That, as soon as the sum of four hundred thousand dollars, in gold and silver, shall have been actually received on account of the subscriptions to the said stock, notice thereof shall be given by the persons under whose superintendence the same shall have been made, in at least two public gazettes printed in the city of Philadelphia: and the said persons shall, at the same time, in like manner, notify a time and place within the said city, at the distance of ninety days from the time of such notification, for proceeding to the election of directors; and it shall be lawful for such election to be then and there made; and the persons, who shall then and there be chosen, shall be the first directors, and shall be capable of serving, by virtue of such choice, until the end or expiration of the Monday in January next ensuing the time of making the same, and shall forthwith thereafter commence the operations of the said bank, at the said city of Philadelphia. And provided further, That, in case it should at any time happen, that an election of directors should not be made upon any day when pursuant to this act it ought to have been made, the said corporation shall not for that cause be deemed to be dissolved; but it shall be lawful, on any other day, to hold and make an election of directors in such manner as shall have been regulated by the laws and ordinances of the said corporation. And provided lastly, That in case of the death, resignation, absence from the United States, or removal of a director by the stockholders, his ment of the United States, to an amount exceeding one hundred thousand dollars, or of any particular State, to an amount exceeding fifty thousand dollars, or of any foreign prince or State, unless previously authorized by a law of the United States.

XII. The stock of the said corporation shall be assignable and transferable, according to such rules as shall be instituted in that behalf, by the laws and ordinances of the same.

XIII. The bills obligatory and of credit, under the seal of the said corporation, which shall be made to any person or persons, shall be assignable by endorsement thereupon, under the hand or hands of such person or persons, and of his, her, or their assignee or assignees, and so as absolutely to transfer and vest the property thereof in each and every assignee or assignees successively, and to enable such assignee or assignees to bring and maintain an action thereupon in his, her, or their own name or names. And bills or notes, which may be issued by order of the said corporation, signed by the president, and countersigned by the principal cashier or treasurer thereof, promising the payment of money to any person or persons, his, her, or their order, or to bearer, though not under the seal of the said corporation, shall be binding and obligatory upon the same, in the like manner, and with the like force and effect, as upon any private person or persons, if issued by him or them, in his, her, or their private or natural capacity or capacities; and shall be assignable and negotiable in like manner as if they were so issued by such private person or persons; that is to say, those which may be payable to any person or persons, his, her, or their order, shall be assignable by endorsement, in like manner, and with the like effect, as foreign bills of exchange now are; and those which are payable to bearer shall be negotiable and assignable by delivery only.

XIV. Half-yearly dividends shall be made of so much of the profits of the bank as shall appear to the directors advisable; and once in every three years the directors shall lay before the stockholders, at a general meeting, for their information, an exact and particular statement of the debts which shall have remained unpaid after the expiration of the original credit, for a period of treble the term of that credit; and of the surplus of profit, if any, after deducting losses and dividends. If there shall be a failure in the payment of any part of any sum, subscribed by any person, co-partnership, or body politic, the party failing shall lose the benefit of any dividend which may have accrued, prior to the time for making such payment, and during the delay of the same.

XV. It shall be lawful for the directors aforesaid, to establish offices whereover they shall think fit within the United States, for the purposes of discount and deposit only, and upon the same terms, and in the same manner, as shall be practised at the bank; and to commit the management of the said offices, and the making of the said discounts, to such persons, under such agreements, and subject to such regulations as they shall deem proper; not being contrary to law, or to the constitution of the bank.

Acts of Congress.

XVI. The officer at the head of the Treasury Department of the United States shall be furnished, from time to time, as often as he may require, not exceeding once a week, with statements of the amount of the capital stock of the said corporation, and of the debts due to the same; of the moneys deposited therein; of the notes in circulation, and of the cash in hand; and shall have a right to inspect such general accounts in the books of the bank as shall relate to the said statements. Provided, That this shall not be construed to imply a right of inspecting the account of any private individual or individuals with the bank.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That if the said corporation, or any person or persons for or to the use of the same, shall deal or trade in buying or selling any goods, wares, merchandise, or commodities whatsoever, contrary to the provisions of this act, all and every person and persons by whom any order or direction for so dealing or trading shall have been given, and all and every person and persons who shall have been concerned as parties or agents therein, shall forfeit and lose treble the value of the goods, wares, merchandise, and commodities, in which such dealing and trade shall have been; one-half thereof to the use of the informer, and the other half thereof to the use of the United States, to be recovered with costs of suit.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That if the said corporation shall advance or lend any sum for the use or on account of the Government of the United States, to an amount exceeding one hundred thousand dollars, or if any particular State to an amount exceeding fifty thousand dollars, or of any foreign Prince or State, (unless previously authorized thereto by a law of the United States,) all and every person and persons, by and with whose order, agreement, consent, approbation, or connivance, such unlawful advance or loan shall have been made, upon conviction thereof, shall forfeit and pay, for every such offense, treble the value or amount of the sum or sums which shall have been so unlawfully advanced or lent; one fifth thereof to the informer, and the residue thereof to the use of the United States, to be disposed of by law and not otherwise.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the bills or notes of the said corporation, originally made payable, or which shall have become payable on demand, in gold and silver coin, shall be receivable in all payments to the United States.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, at any time or times, within eighteen months after the first day of April next, to cause a subscription to be made to the stock of the said corporation, as part of the aforesaid capital stock of ten millions of dollars, on behalf of the United States, to an amount not exceeding two millions of dollars, to be paid out of the moneys which shall be borrowed by virtue of either of the acts, the one entitled "An act making provision for the debt of the United States;" and the other entitled "An act making provision for the redemption of the public debt;" borrowing of the bank an equal sum, to be applied to the purposes for which the said moneys shall have been procured, reimbursable in ten years by equal annual instalments; or at any time sooner, or in any greater proportions than that the Government may think fit.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That no other bank shall be established by any future law of the United States, during the continuance of the corporation hereby created; for which the faith of the United States is hereby pledged.

Approved, February 25, 1791.

An Act supplementary to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the United States."

Be it enacted, &c., That the subscriptions to the stock of the Bank of the United States, as provided by the act entitled "An act to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the United States," shall not be opened until the first Monday in July next.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That so much of the first payment as by the said act is directed to be in the six per cent. certificates of the United States, may be deferred until the first Monday in January next.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no person, corporation, or body politic, except in behalf of the United States, shall, for the space of three months after the said first Monday in July next, subscribe in any one day for more than thirty shares.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every subscriber shall, at the time of subscribing, pay into the hands of the persons who may be appointed to receive the same, the specie proportion required by the said act to be then paid. And if any such subscriber shall fail to make any of the future payments, he shall forfeit the sum so by him first paid, for the use of the corporation.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That such part of the public debt, including the assumed debt, as is funded at an interest of three per cent. may be paid to the Bank in like manner with the debt funded at six per cent., computing the value of the former at one-half the value of the latter, and reserving to the subscribers who shall have paid three per cent. stock, the privilege of redeeming the same with six per cent. stock at the above rate of computation, at any time before the first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three; unless the three per cent. stock shall have been previously disposed of by the directors.

Approved, March 2, 1791.

An Act giving effect to the laws of the United States within the State of Vermont.

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the third day of March next, all the laws of the United States, which are not locally inapplicable, ought to have, and shall have, the same force and effect within the State of Vermont, as elsewhere within the United States.

Acts of Congress.

And to the end that the act, entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," may be duly administered within the said State of Vermont,

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That the said State shall be one district, to be denominated Vermont District; and there shall be a district court therein, to consist of one judge, who shall reside within the said district, and be called a district judge, and shall hold annually four sessions; the first to commence on the first Monday in May next, and the three other sessions progressively on the like Monday of every third calendar month afterwards. The said district court shall be held alternately at the towns of Rutland and Windsor, beginning at the first.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said district shall be, and the same hereby is, annexed to the eastern circuit. And there shall be held annually in the said district one circuit court; the first session shall commence on the seventeenth day of June next, and the subsequent sessions on the like day of June afterwards, except when any of the said days shall happen on a Sunday, and then the session shall commence on the day following; and the said sessions of the said circuit courts shall be held at the town of Bennington.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed to the judge of the said district court the yearly compensation of eight hundred dollars, to commence from the time of his appointment, and to be paid quarterly yearly at the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all the regulations, provisions, directions, authorities, penalties, and other matters whatsoever, (except as herein afterwards is expressly provided,) contained and expressed in and by the act entitled "An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States," shall have the same force and effect within the said State of Vermont, as if the same were, in relation thereto, repeated and re-enacted in and by this present act.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the enumeration of the inhabitants of the said State shall commence on the first Monday of April next, and shall close within five calendar months thereafter.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the marshal of the district of Vermont shall receive in full compensation for all the duties and services confided to, and enjoined upon, him in and by this act, in taking the enumeration aforesaid, two hundred dollars.

And that the act, entitled "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships and vessels," may be carried into effect in the said State of Vermont:

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, That, for the due collection of the said duties, there shall be in the said State of Vermont one district; and a collector shall be appointed, to reside at Allburgh on Lake Champlain, which shall be the only port of entry or delivery within the said district, of any goods, wares, or merchandise, not the growth or manufacture of the United States.

Provided, nevertheless, That the exception contained in the sixty-ninth section of the act last above mentioned, relative to the district of Louisville, shall be, and is hereby, extended to the said port of Allburgh.

Approved, March 2, 1791.

An Act to explain and amend an act, entitled "An act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States."

Be it enacted, &c., That the duty of one cent per pound, laid by the act "making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States," on bar and other lead, shall be deemed and taken to extend to all manufactures wholly of lead, or in which lead is the chief article, which shall hereafter be brought into the United States from any foreign port or place.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the duty of seven and a half per cent. ad valorem, laid by the act aforesaid on chintzes, and colored calicoes, shall be deemed and taken to extend to all printed, stained, and colored goods, or manufactures of cotton or of linen, or of both, which hereafter shall be brought into the United States from any foreign port or place.

Provided always, That nothing in this act shall in any wise affect the true construction or meaning of the act aforesaid in relation to any of the above described articles brought into the United States before the passing of this act.

Approved, March 2, 1791.

An Act fixing the time for the next annual meeting of Congress.

Be it enacted, &c., That, after the third day of March next, the first annual meeting of Congress shall be on the fourth Monday of October next.

Approved, March 2, 1791.

An Act repealing, after the last day of June next, the duties heretofore laid on distilled spirits imported from abroad, and laying others in their stead; and also upon spirits distilled within the United States, and for appropriating the same.

Be it enacted, &c., That, after the last day of June next, the duties laid upon distilled spirits by the act, entitled "An act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States," shall cease; and that upon all distilled spirits which shall be imported into the United States after that day, from any foreign port or place, there shall be paid for every gallon of those following, that is to say: for every gallon of those spirits more than ten per cent. below proof, according to Dicas's hydrometer, twenty cents; for every gallon of those spirits under five, and not more than ten per cent. below proof, according to the same hydrometer, twenty-one cents; for every gallon of those spirits of proof, and not more than five per cent. below proof, according to the same hydrometer, twenty-two cents; for every gallon of those spirits above proof, but not exceeding twenty per cent. according to the same hydrometer, twenty-five cents; for every gallon of those spirits more than twenty, and not more than forty per cent. above proof, according to the same hydrometer, thirty cents; for every gallon of those spirits more than forty per cent. above proof, according to the same hydrometer, forty cents.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said duties shall be collected in the same manner, by the same persons, under the same regulations, and subject to the same forfeitures and other penalties, as those heretofore laid; the act concerning which shall be deemed to be in full force for the collection of the duties herein before imposed, except as to the alterations contained in this act.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said duties, when the amount thereof shall not exceed fifty dollars, shall be immediately paid; but when the said amount shall exceed fifty, and shall not amount to more than five hundred dollars, may, at the option of the proprietor, importer, or consignee, be immediately paid, or secured by bond, with the condition for the payment thereof in four months; and if the amount of the said duties shall exceed five hundred dollars, the same may be immediately paid or secured by bond, with condition for the payment thereof in six months; which bond, in either case, at the like option of the proprietor, importer, or consignee, shall either include one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the collector, or person acting as such, or shall be accompanied with a deposit in the custody of the said collector, or person acting as such, of so much of the said spirits as shall, in his judgment, be a sufficient security for the amount of the duties for which the said bond shall have been given, and the charges of the safe keeping and sale of the spirits so deposited; which deposit shall and may be accepted in lieu of the said surety or sureties, and shall be kept by the said collector, or person acting as such, with due and reasonable care, at the expense and risk of the party or parties on whose account the same shall have been made; and if at the expiration of the time mentioned in the bond for payment of the duties thereby intended to be secured, the same shall not be paid, then the said deposited spirits shall be sold at public sale, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the charges of keeping and sale, shall be applied to the payment of the whole sum of the duties for which such deposit shall have been made, rendering the overplus of the said proceeds, and the residue of the said spirits, if any there be, to the person or persons by whom such deposit shall have been made, or his, her, or their representatives.

Sec. 4. In order to a due collection of the duties imposed by this act, Be it further enacted, That the United States shall be divided into fourteen districts, each consisting of one State, but subject to alterations by the President of the United States, from time to time, by adding to the smaller such portion of the greater as shall in his judgment best tend to secure and facilitate the collection of the revenue; which districts it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to subdivide into surveys of inspection, and the same to alter at his discretion. That the President be authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, a supervisor to each district, and as many inspectors to each survey therein as he shall judge necessary, placing the latter under the direction of the former: Provided always, That it shall and may be lawful for the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, in his discretion, to appoint such and so many officers of the customs to be inspectors in any survey of inspection as he shall deem advisable to employ in the execution of this act. Provided also, That where, in the judgment of the President, a supervisor can discharge the duties of that office, and also that of inspector, he may direct the same. And provided further, That if the appointment of the inspectors of surveys, or any part of them, shall not be made during the present session of Congress, the President may, and he is hereby, empowered to make such appointments during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the supervisors, inspectors, and officers, to be appointed by virtue of this act, and who shall be charged to take bonds for securing the payment of the duties upon spirits distilled within the United States, and with the receipt of moneys in discharge of such duties, shall keep fair and true accounts and records of their transactions in their respective offices, in such manner and form as may be directed by the proper department or officer having the superintendence of the collection of the revenue, and shall at all times submit their books, papers, and accounts, to the inspection of such persons as are or may be appointed for that purpose, and shall at all times pay to the order of the officer, who is or shall be authorized to direct the payment thereof, the whole of the moneys which they may respectively receive by virtue of this act, and shall also once in every three months, or oftener if they shall be required, transmit their accounts for settlement to the officer or officers whose duty it is, or shall be, to make such settlement.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all officers and persons to be appointed pursuant to this act, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, shall take an oath or affirmation diligently and faithfully to execute the duties of their said offices respectively, and to use their best endeavors to prevent and detect frauds, in relation to the duties on spirits imposed by this act, which oath or affirmation may be taken before any magistrate authorized to administer oaths within the district or survey to which he belongs, and being certified under the hand and seal of the magistrate by whom the same shall have been administered, shall, within three months thereafter, be transmitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury, in default of taking which oath or affirmation, the party failing shall forfeit and pay two hundred dollars for the use of the United States, to be recovered with costs of suit.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the supervisor of the revenue for each district shall establish one or more offices within the same, as may be necessary; and in order that the said offices may be publicly known, there shall be painted or written in large legible characters upon some conspicuous part outside and in front of each house, building, or place in which any such office shall be kept, these words, "Office of Inspection," and if any person shall paint or write, or cause to be painted or written, the said words upon any other than such house or building, he or she shall forfeit and pay for so doing one hundred dollars.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That within forty-eight hours after any ship or vessel, having on board any distilled spirits brought in such ship or vessel from any foreign port or place, shall arrive within any port of the United States, whether the same be the first port of arrival of such ship or vessel or not, the master or person having the command or charge thereof, shall report to one of the inspectors of the port at which she shall so arrive, the place from which she last sailed, with her name and burden, and the quantity and kinds of the said spirits on board of her, and the casks, vessels, or cases, containing them, with their marks and numbers, on pain of forfeiting the sum of five hundred dollars.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the collector or other officer, or person acting as collector, with whom entry shall have been made of any of the said spirits, pursuant to the act entitled "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels," shall forthwith after such entry certify and transmit the same, as particularly as it shall have been made with him, to the proper officer of inspection, of the port where it shall be intended to commence the delivery of the spirits so entered, or any part thereof; for which purpose every proprietor, importer, or consignee, making such entry, shall deliver two manifests of the contents, (upon one of which the said certificate shall be given,) and shall at the time thereof declare the port at which the said delivery shall be so intended to be commenced, to the collector or officer with whom the same shall be made. And every permit granted by such collector for the landing of any of the said spirits shall, previous to such landing, be produced to the said officer of inspection, who shall make a minute in some proper book of the contents thereof, and shall endorse thereupon the word "inspected," the time when, and his own name: after which he shall return it to the person by whom it shall have been produced; and then, and not otherwise, it shall be lawful to land the spirits therein specified; and if the said spirits shall be landed without such endorsement upon the permit for that purpose granted, the master or person having charge of the ship or vessel from which the same shall have been so landed, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of five hundred dollars.

1st Cox.—74

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That whenever it shall be intended that any ship or vessel shall proceed with the whole or any part of the spirits which shall have been brought in such ship or vessel from any foreign port or place, from one port in the United States to another port in the said United States, whether in the same or different districts, the master or person having the command or charge of such ship or vessel shall, previous to her departure, apply to the officer of inspection, to whom report was made, for the port from which she is about to depart; for a certificate of the quantity and particulars of such of the said spirits as shall have been certified or reported to him to have been entered as imported in such ship or vessel, and of so much thereof as shall appear to him to have been landed out of her at such port; which certificate the said officer shall forthwith grant. And the master or person having the command or charge of such ship or vessel shall, within twenty-four hours after her arrival at the port to which she shall be bound, deliver the said certificate to the proper officer of inspection of such last mentioned port. And if such ship or vessel shall proceed from one port to another within the United States, with the whole or any part of the spirits brought in her as aforesaid, without having first obtained such certificate; or if, within twenty-four hours after her arrival at such other port, the said certificate shall not be delivered to the proper officer of inspection there, the master or person having the command or charge of the said ship or vessel, shall, in either case forfeit the sum of five hundred dollars; and the spirits on board of her at her said arrival shall be forfeited, and may be seized by any officer of inspection.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That all spirits which shall be imported as aforesaid shall be landed under the inspection of the officer or officers of inspection for the place where the same shall be landed, and not otherwise, on pain of forfeiture thereof, for which purpose the said officer or officers shall, at all reasonable times, attend. Provided, That this shall not be construed to exclude the inspection of the officers of the customs as now established and practised.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That the officers of inspection under whose survey any of the said spirits shall be landed, shall, upon landing thereof, and as soon as the casks, vessels, and cases containing the same shall be gauged or measured, brand, or otherwise mark in durable characters, the several casks, vessels, or cases containing the same, with progressive numbers; and also with the name of the ship or vessel wherein the same was or were imported, and of the port of entry, and with the proof and quantity thereof; together with such other marks, if any other shall be deemed needful, as the respective supervisors of the revenue may direct. And the said officer shall keep a book, wherein he shall enter the name of each vessel in which any of the said spirits shall be so imported, and of the port of entry and delivery, and of the master of such vessel, and of each importer, and the several casks, vessels, and cases containing the same, and the marks of each; and if such officer is not the chief inspector within the survey, he shall, as soon as may be thereafter, make an exact transcript of each entry, and deliver the same to such chief officer, who shall keep a like book for recording the said transcript.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the chief officer of inspection within whose survey any of the said spirits shall be landed, shall give to the proprietor, importer, or consignee thereof, or his or her agent, a certificate to remain with him or her, of the whole quantity of the said spirits which shall have been so landed; which certificate, besides the said quantity, shall specify the name of such proprietor, importer, or consignee, and of the vessel from on board which the said spirits shall have been landed, and of the marks of each cask, vessel, or case containing the same. And the said officer shall deliver to the said proprietor, importer, or consignee, or to his or her agent, a like certificate for each cask, vessel, or case; which shall accompany the same wheresoever it shall be sent, as evidence of its being lawfully imported. And the officer granting the said certificates shall make regular and exact entries in the book to be by him kept as aforesaid, of all spirits for which the same shall be granted, as particularly as therein described. And the said proprietor, importer, or consignee, or his or her agent, upon the sale and delivery of any of the said spirits, shall deliver to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, the certificate or certificates which ought to accompany the same; on pain of forfeiting the sum of fifty dollars for each cask, vessel, or case with which such certificate shall not be delivered.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That upon all spirits which after the said last day of June next shall be distilled within the United States, wholly or in part from molasses, sugar, or other foreign materials, there shall be paid for every gallon of those spirits more than ten per cent, below proof, according to Dica's hydrometer, eleven cents; for every gallon of those spirits under five, and not more than ten per cent, below proof, according to the same hydrometer, twelve cents; for every gallon of those spirits of proof, and not more than five per cent, below proof, according to the same hydrometer, thirteen cents; for every gallon of those spirits above proof, and not exceeding twenty per cent, according to the same hydrometer, fifteen cents; for every gallon of those spirits, more than twenty and not more than forty per cent, above proof, according to the same hydrometer, twenty cents; and for every gallon of those spirits more than forty per cent, above proof, according to the same hydrometer, thirty cents.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That upon all spirits which, after the said last day of June next, shall be distilled within the United States, from any article of the growth or produce of the United States, in any city, town, or village, there shall be paid for their use the duties following, that is to say: for every gallon of those spirits more than ten per cent, below proof, according to Dica's hydrometer, nine cents; for every gallon of those spirits under five, and not more than ten per cent, below proof, according to the same hydrometer, ten cents; for every gallon of those spirits of proof, and not more than five per cent, below proof, according to the same hydrometer, eleven cents; for every gallon of those spirits above proof, but not exceeding twenty per cent, according to the same hydrometer, thirteen cents; for every gallon of those spirits more than twenty, and not more than forty per cent, above proof, according to the same hydrometer, seventeen cents; for every gallon of those spirits more than forty per cent, above proof, according to the same hydrometer, twenty-five cents.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That the said duties on spirits distilled within the United States, shall be collected under the management of the supervisors of the revenue.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That the said duties on spirits distilled within the United States shall be paid or secured previous to the removal thereof from the distilleries at which they are respectively made. And it shall be at the option of the proprietor or proprietors of each distillery, or of his, her, or their agent, having the superintendence thereof, either to pay the said duties previous to such removal, with an abatement at the rate of two cents for every ten gallons, or to secure the payment of the same, by giving bond quarter-yearly, with one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the chief officer of inspection within whose survey such distillery shall be, and in such sum as the said officer shall direct, with condition for the payment of the duties upon all such of the said spirits as shall be removed from such distillery within three months next ensuing the date of the bond, at the expiration of nine months from the said date.

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That the supervisor of each district shall appoint proper officers to have the charge and survey of the distilleries within the same, assigning to each one or more distilleries as he may think proper, who shall attend such distillery at all reasonable times for the execution of the duties by this act enjoined on him.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That previous to the removal of the said spirits from any distillery, the officer within whose charge and survey the same may be, shall brand or otherwise mark each cask containing the same, in durable characters, and with progressive numbers, and with the name of the acting owner or other manager of such distillery, and of the place where the same was situated, and with the quantity therein, to be ascertained by actual gauging, and with the proof thereof. And the duties thereupon having been first paid, or secured, as above provided, the said officer shall grant a certificate for each cask of the said spirits, to accompany the same wheresoever it shall be sent, purporting that the duty thereon hath been paid or secured, as the case may be, and describing each cask by its marks; and shall enter in a book for that purpose to be kept, all the spirits distilled at such distillery, and removed from the same; and the marks of each cask, and the persons for whose use, and the places to which removed, and the time of each removal, and the amount of the duties on the spirits so removed. And if any of the said spirits shall be removed from any such distillery without having been branded or marked as aforesaid, or without such certificate as aforesaid, the same, together with the cask or casks containing, and the horses or cattle, with the carriages, their harness and tackling, and the vessel or boat, with its tackle and apparel employed in removing them, shall be forfeited, and may be seized by any officer of inspection. And the superintendent or manager of such distillery shall also forfeit the full value of the spirits so removed, to be computed at the highest price of the like spirits in the market.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That no spirits shall be removed from any such distillery at any other times than between sun-rising and sun-setting, except by consent and in presence of the officer having the charge and survey thereof, on pain of forfeiture of such spirits, or of the value thereof, at the highest price in the market, to be recovered with costs of suit from the acting owner or manager of such distillery.

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That upon stills which, after the last day of June next, shall be employed in distilling spirits from materials of the growth or production of the United States, in any other place than a city, town, or village, there shall be paid for the use of the United States the yearly duty of sixty cents for every gallon, English wine measure, of the capacity or content of each, and every such still, including the head thereof.

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That the evidence of the employment of the said still shall be, their being erected in stone, brick, or some other manner, whereby they shall be in a condition to be worked.

Sec. 23. And be it further enacted, That the said duties on stills shall be collected under the management of the supervisor in each district, who shall appoint and assign proper officers for the surveys of the said stills and the admeasurement thereof, and the collection of the duties thereupon; and the said duties shall be paid half-yearly, within the first fifteen days of January and July, on demand of the proprietor or proprietors of each still, at his, her, or their dwelling, by the proper officer charged with the survey thereof; and in case of refusal or neglect to pay, the amount of the duties so refused or neglected to be paid, may either be recovered with costs of suit in an action of debt in the name of the supervisor of the district, within which such refusal shall happen, for the use of the United States, or may be levied by distress and sale of goods of the person or persons refusing or neglecting to pay, rendering the overplus (if any there be, after payment of the said amount and the charges of distress and sale) to the said person or persons.

Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That if the proprietor of any such still, finding himself or herself aggrieved by the said rates, shall enter or cause to be entered in a book to be kept for that purpose, from day to day when such still shall be employed, the quantity of spirits distilled therefrom, and the quantity from time to time sold or otherwise disposed of, and to whom and when, and shall produce the said book to the officer of inspection within whose survey such still shall be, and shall make oath or affirmation that the same doth contain, to the best of his or her knowledge and belief, true entries made at their respective dates, of all the spirits distilled within the time to which such entries shall relate, from such still, and of the disposition thereof; and shall also declare upon such oath or affirmation, the quantity of such spirits then remaining on hand, it shall be lawful in every such case for the said officer to whom the said book shall be produced, and he is hereby required to estimate the duties upon such still, according to the quantity so stated to have been actually made therefrom at the rate of nine cents per gallon, which, and no more, shall be paid for the same. Provided, That if the said entries shall be made by any person other than the said proprietor, a like oath or affirmation shall be made by such person.

And the more effectually to prevent the evasion of the duties hereby imposed on spirits distilled within the United States,

Sec. 25. Be it further enacted, That every person who shall be a maker or distiller of spirits from molasses, sugar, or other foreign materials, or from materials the growth and production of the United States, shall write or paint, or cause to be written or painted upon some conspicuous part outside and in front of each house or other building or place made use of, or intended to be made use of by him or her for the distillation or keeping of spirituous liquors, and upon the door or usual entrance of each vault, cellar, or apartment within the same, in which any of the said liquors shall be at any time by him or her distilled, deposited or kept, or intended so to be, the words "Distiller of Spirits," and every such distiller shall, within three days before he or she shall begin to distil therein, make a particular entry in writing, at the nearest office of inspection, if within ten miles thereof, of every such house, building, or place, and of each vault, cellar, and apartment within the same, in which he or she shall intend to carry on the business of distilling, or to keep any spirits by him or her distilled. And if any such distiller shall omit to paint or write, or cause to be painted or written the words aforesaid, in manner aforesaid, upon any such house, or other building or place, or vault, cellar, or apartment thereof, or shall, in case the same be situated within the said distance of ten miles of any office of inspection, omit to make entry thereof as aforesaid, such distiller shall, for every such omission or neglect, forfeit one hundred dollars, and all the spirits which he or she shall keep therein, or the value thereof, to be computed at the highest price of such spirits in the market; to be recovered by action, with costs of suit, in any court proper to try the same, in the name of the supervisor of the district within which such omission or neglect shall be, for the use of the United States: Provided always, and be it further enacted, That the said entry to be made by persons who shall be distillers of spirits, on the first day of July next, shall be made on that day, or within three days thereafter, accompanied (except where the duties hereby imposed are charged on the still) with a true and particular account or inventory of the spirits, on that day and at the time, in every or any house, building or place by him or her entered, and of the casks, cases, and vessels, containing the same, with their marks and numbers, and the quantities and qualities of the spirits therein contained, on pain of forfeiting for neglect to make such entry, or to deliver such account, the sum of one hundred dollars, and all the spirits by him or her had or kept in any such house, building, or place, to be recovered as aforesaid.

Sec. 26. And be it further enacted, That the supervisor of the revenue for the district where, in any house, building, or place shall be situated, whereof entry shall be made as last aforesaid, shall, as soon as may be thereafter, visit and inspect, or cause to be visited and inspected by some proper officer or officers of inspection, every such house or other building or place within his district, and shall take or cause to be taken, an exact account of the spirits therein respectively contained, and shall mark or cause to be marked, in durable characters, the several casks, cases, or vessels containing the same, with progressive numbers, and also with the name of each distiller to whom the same may belong, or in whose custody the same may be, and the quantities, kinds, and proofs of spirits therein contained, and these words, "old stock." And the inspector of each survey shall keep a book, wherein he shall enter the name of every distiller, and the particulars of such old stock in the possession of each, designating the several casks, cases, and vessels containing the same, and their respective quantities, kinds, proofs, and marks, and shall also give a certificate to every such distiller of the quantity and particulars of such old stock in his or her possession, and a separate certificate for each cask, case, or vessel, describing the same, which certificate shall accompany the same, wheresoever it shall be sent, and such distiller, his or her agent or manager, upon the sale and delivery of any of the said spirits, shall deliver to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, the certificate or certificates that ought to accompany the same, on pain of forfeiting fifty dollars for each cask, case, or vessel, with which such certificate shall not be delivered.

Sec. 27. And be it further enacted, That every importer of distilled spirits, who, on the first day of July next, shall have in his or her possession any distilled spirits, shall, within three days thereafter, make due entry thereof with the officer of inspection within whose survey the same shall then be; who shall mark the casks, vessels, or cases, containing such spirits, in like manner as is herein before directed touching such spirits as shall be in the possession of distillers on the first day of July next, and shall grant the like certificates thereof, as for such spirits, which certificates shall accompany the respective casks, cases, and vessels, to which they shall relate, wheresoever they shall be sent, and such importer, his, or her agent, upon the sale and delivery of any of the said spirits, shall deliver to the purchaser or purchasers thereof the certificate or certificates which ought to accompany the same, on pain of forfeiting fifty dollars for each cask, case, or vessel, with which such certificates shall not be delivered. And if any such importer, or importers, shall refuse or neglect to make such entry at the time, and in the manner herein directed, all such spirits as shall not be so entered shall be forfeited, and the importer, or importers, in whose custody the same shall be found, shall, moreover, forfeit the sum equal to the full value thereof, according to the highest price of such spirits in the market.

Sec. 28. And be it further enacted, That, if any cask, case, or vessel, containing distilled spirits, which, by the foregoing provisions of this act, ought to be marked and accompanied with a certificate, shall be found in the possession of any person unaccompanied with such marks and certificate, it shall be presumptive evidence that the same are liable to forfeiture, and it shall be lawful for any officer of inspection to seize them as forfeited; and if, upon the trial, in consequence of such seizure, the owner or claimant of the spirits seized, shall not prove that the same were imported into the United States according to law, or were distilled, as mentioned in the thirteenth and fourteenth sections of this act, and the duties thereupon paid, or were distilled at one of the stills mentioned in the twentieth section of this act, they shall be adjudged to be forfeited.

Sec. 29. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the officers of inspection of each survey, at all times in the day time, upon request, to enter into all and every the houses, storehouses, warehouses, buildings and places, which shall have been entered in manner aforesaid, and by tasting, gauging, or otherwise, to take an account of the quantity, kinds, and proofs, of the said spirits therein contained; and also to take samples thereof, paying for the same the usual price.

Sec. 30. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall rub out or deface any of the marks set upon any cask, vessel, or case, pursuant to the directions of this act, such person or persons shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred dollars.

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That no cask, barrel, keg, vessel, or case, marked as "old stock," shall be made use of by any distiller of spirits, for putting or keeping therein any spirits, other than those which were contained therein when so marked, on pain of forfeiting the sum of one hundred dollars for every cask, barrel, keg, vessel, or case, wherein any such spirits shall be so put or kept; neither shall any such distiller have or keep any distilled spirits in any such cask, barrel, keg, vessel, or case, longer than for the space of one year from the said last day of June next, on pain of forfeiting the said spirits: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to extend to casks or vessels, capable of containing two hundred gallons and upward, and which are not intended to be removed.

Sec. 32. And be it further enacted, That in case any of the said spirits shall be fraudulently deposited, hid, or concealed, in any place whatsoever, with intent to evade the duties thereby imposed upon them, they shall be forfeited. And for the better discovery of any such spirits so fraudulently deposited, hid, or concealed, it shall be lawful for any judge of any court of the United States, or either of them, or for any justice of the peace, upon reasonable cause of suspicion, to be made out to the satisfaction of such judge or justice by the oath or affirmation of any person or persons, by special warrant, or warrants, under their respective hands and seals, to authorize any of the officers of inspection, by day, in the presence of a constable, or other officer of the peace, to enter into all and every such place or places, in which any of the said spirits shall be suspected to be so fraudulently deposited, hid, or concealed, and to seize and carry away any of the said spirits which shall be there found so fraudulently deposited, hid, or concealed, as forfeited.

Sec. 33. And be it further enacted, That after the last day of June next, no spirituous liquors, except gin or cordials in cases, jugs, or bottles, shall be brought from any foreign port or place, in casks of less capacity than fifty gallons, at the least, on pain of forfeiting of the said spirits, and of the ship or vessel in which they shall be brought: Provided always, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to forfeit any spirits for being imported, or brought into the United States, in other casks or vessels than as aforesaid, or the ship or vessel in which they shall be brought, if such spirits shall be for the use of the seamen on board such ship or vessel, and shall not exceed the quantity of four gallons for each seaman.

Sec. 34. And be it further enacted, That in every case in which any of the said spirits shall be forfeited by virtue of this act, the casks, vessels, and cases, containing the same, shall also be forfeited.

Sec. 35. And be it further enacted, That every distiller of spirits, on which the duty is hereby charged by the gallon, shall keep, or cause to be kept, an exact account of the said spirits, which he or she shall sell, send out, or distil, distinguishing their several kinds and proofs; and shall, every day, make a just and true entry in a book, to be kept for that purpose, of the quantities and particulars of the said spirits by him or her sold, sent out or distilled on the preceding day; specifying the marks of the several casks in which they shall be so sold or sent out, and the persons to whom, and for whose use, they shall be so sold or sent out: which said books shall be prepared for the making such entries, and shall be delivered, upon demand, to the said distillers, by the supervisors of the revenue of the several districts, or by such person or persons as they shall, respectively, for that purpose, appoint, and shall be severally returned or delivered at the end of each year, or when the same shall be respectively filled up, (which shall first happen,) to the proper officers of inspection; and the truth of the entries made therein shall be verified, upon the oath or affirmation of the person by whom those entries shall have been made, and as often as the said books shall be furnished, upon like demand, by the proper officers of inspection, to the said distillers, respectively. And the said books shall, from time to time, while in the possession of the said distillers, lie open for the inspection of, and, upon request, shall be shown to, the proper officers of inspection, under whose survey the said distillers shall respectively be, who may take such minutes, memorandums, or transcripts thereof, as they may think fit. And if any such distiller shall neglect or refuse to keep such book or books, or to make such entries therein, or to show the same, upon request, to the proper officer of inspection, or not return the same, according to the directions of this act, he or she shall forfeit, for every such refusal or neglect, the sum of one hundred dollars.

Sec. 36. And be it further enacted, That the penalties by this act imposed on distillers, for neglecting to make report to the inspectors, of their intentions of distilling spirits, or for neglecting to mark the houses, apartments, or vessels to be employed, or for neglecting to enter in books the quantity of spirits distilled, shall not extend to any person who shall employ one still only, and that of a capacity not exceeding fifty gallons, including the still head.

Sec. 37. And be it further enacted, That the several kinds of proof hereinbefore specified, shall, in marking the casks, vessels, and cases, containing any distilled spirits, be distinguished, corresponding with the order in which they are mentioned, by the words "First Proof," "Second Proof," "Third Proof," "Fourth Proof," "Fifth Proof," "Sixth Proof." And that it be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to provide and furnish to the officers of inspection and of the customs, proper instruments for ascertaining the said several proofs.

Sec. 38. And be it further enacted, That in any prosecution or action, which may be brought against any supervisor or other officer of inspection, for any seizure by him made, it shall be necessary for such supervisor or officer, to justify himself, by making it appear that there was probable cause for making the said seizure; upon which, and not otherwise, a verdict shall pass in his favor. And in any such action or prosecution, or in any action or prosecution which may be brought against such supervisor or other officer, for irregular or improper conduct in the execution of his duty, the trial shall be by jury. And in any action for a seizure, in which a verdict shall pass for such officer, the jury shall, nevertheless, assess reasonable damages for any prejudice or waste (according to the true amount in value thereof) which shall be shown, by good proof, to have happened to the spirits seized, in consequence of such seizure; and also for the detention of the same, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, on the true value of the said spirits at the time of such seizure, from that time to the time of restoration thereof; which shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That no damages shall be assessed when the seizure was made for want of the proper certificate or certificates, or by reason of a refusal to show any officer of inspection, upon his request, the spirits in any entered house, building, or place: And provided, also, That if it shall appear from the verdict of the jury, that any such prejudice or waste was sustained by the negligence of the officer, he shall be responsible therefor to the United States.

Sec. 39. And be it further enacted, That if any supervisor, or other officer of inspection, in any criminal prosecution against him, shall be convicted of oppression or extortion in the execution of his office, he shall be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned not exceeding six months, or both, at the discretion of the court; and shall also forfeit his office.

Sec. 40. And be it further enacted, That no fee shall be taken for any certificate to be issued or granted pursuant to this act.

Sec. 41. And be it further enacted, That if any of the said supervisors, or other officers of inspection, shall neglect to perform any of the duties hereby enjoined upon them, respectively, according to the true intent and meaning of this act, whereby any person or persons shall be injured or suffer damage, such person or persons shall and may have an action, founded upon this act, against such supervisors, or other officers, and shall recover full damages for the same, together with costs of suit.

Sec. 42. And be it further enacted, That any action or suit to be brought against any person or persons, for any thing by him or them done in pursuance of this act, shall be commenced within three months next after the matter or thing done, and, unless brought in a court of the United States, shall be laid in the county in which the cause of action shall have arisen; and the defendant or defendants in any such action or suit, may plead the general issue, and, on the trial thereof, give this act and the special matter in evidence; and if a verdict shall pass for the defendant or defendants, or the plaintiff or plaintiffs become nonsuited, or discontinued his, her, or their action or prosecution, or judgment shall be given against such plaintiff or plaintiffs, upon demurrer or otherwise, then such defendant or defendants shall have costs awarded to him, her, or them, against such plaintiff or plaintiffs.

And in order that persons who may have incurred any of the penalties of this act, without wilful negligence, or intention of fraud, may be relieved from such penalties.

Sec. 43. Be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the judge of the district within which such penalty or forfeiture shall have been incurred, at any time within one year after the last day of June next, upon petition of the party who shall have incurred the same, to inquire, in a summary way, into the circumstances of the case, first causing reasonable notice to be given to the person or persons claiming such penalty or forfeiture, and to the attorney of such district; to the end that each may have an opportunity of showing cause against the mitigation or remission thereof; and shall cause the facts, which shall appear upon such inquiry, to be stated and annexed to the petition, and direct their transmission to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, who shall thereupon have power to mitigate or remit such penalty or forfeiture, if it shall appear to him that such penalty or forfeiture was incurred without wilful negligence, or any design or intention of fraud, and to cause any spirits which may have been seized, to be restored to the proprietor or proprietors, upon such terms and conditions as shall appear to him reasonable.

Sec. 44. And be it further enacted, That the one-half of all penalties and forfeitures incurred by virtue of this act, except as above provided, shall be for the benefit of the person or persons who shall make a seizure, or who shall first discover the matter or thing whereby the same shall have been incurred, and the other half to the use of the United States. And such penalty and forfeiture shall be recoverable, with costs of suit, by action of debt, in the name of the person or persons entitled thereto, or by information, in the name of the United States of America; and it shall be the duty of the attorney of the district wherein such penalty or forfeiture may have been incurred, upon application to him, to institute or bring such information accordingly: Provided always, That no officer of inspection other than chief officer or officers of a survey, shall be entitled to the benefit of any forfeiture, unless notice of the seizure by him made, shall be by him given, within forty-eight hours next after such seizure to the said chief officer or officers; but, in such case, the United States shall have the entire benefit of such forfeiture.

Sec. 45. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall counterfeit or forge, or cause to be counterfeited or forged, any of the certificates hereinbefore directed to be given, or shall knowingly or willingly accept or receive any false or untrue certificate, with any of the said spirits, or shall fraudulently alter or erase any such certificate after the same shall be given, or knowingly or willingly publish or make use of such certificate so counterfeited, forged, false, untrue, altered, or erased, every person so offending, shall, for each and every offence, forfeit and pay the sum of five hundred dollars.

Sec. 46. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons that shall be convicted of wilfully taking a false oath or affirmation, in any of the cases in which oaths or affirmations are required to be taken by virtue of this act, shall be liable to the pains and penalties to which persons are liable for wilful and corrupt perjury.

Sec. 47. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall give, or to offer to give, any bribe, recompense, or reward whatsoever, to any supervisor, or other officer of inspection of the revenue, in order to corrupt, persuade, or prevail upon, such officer, either to do any act or acts contrary to his duty in the execution of this act, or to neglect or omit to do any act or thing which he ought to do in the execution of this act, or to connive at, or to conceal, any fraud or frauds relating to the duties hereby imposed on any of the said spirits, or not to discover the same, every such person or persons shall, for such offence, whether the same offer or proposal be accepted or not, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding five hundred dollars.

Sec. 48. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall forcibly obstruct or hinder any supervisor, or other officer of inspection, in the execution of this act, or of any of the powers or authorities hereby vested in him, or shall forcibly rescue, or cause to be rescued, any of the said spirits, after the same shall have been seized by any such supervisor, or other officer, or shall attempt or endeavor so to do, all and every person and persons so offending, shall, for every such offence, for which no other penalty is particularly provided by this act, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding two hundred dollars.

Sec. 49. And be it further enacted, That if any such supervisor, or other officer, shall enter into any collusion with any person or persons, for violating or evading any of the provisions of this act, or the duties hereby imposed, or shall fraudulently concur in the delivery of any of the said spirits, out of any house, building, or place, wherein the same are deposited, without payment, or security for the payment, of the duties thereupon, or shall falsely or fraudulently mark any cask, case, or vessel, contrary to any of the said provisions, or shall embezzle the public money, or otherwise be guilty of fraud in his office, such supervisor, or other officer, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of one thousand dollars, and, upon conviction of any of the said offences, shall forfeit his office, and shall be disqualified for holding any other office under the United States.

Sec. 50. And be it further enacted, That in every case in which an oath or affirmation is required by virtue of this act, it shall be lawful for the supervisors of the revenue, or any of them, or their lawful deputy, or the lawful deputy of one of them, where not more than one in a district, to administer and take such oath or affirmation. And that wherever there are more than one supervisor for one district, a majority of them may execute all and any of the powers and authorities hereby vested in the supervisors of the revenue: Provided, That this shall not be construed to make a majority necessary in any case in which, according to the nature of the appointment or service, and the true intent of this act, the authority is or ought to be several.

And for the encouragement of the export trade of the United States:

Sec. 51. Be it further enacted, That if any of the said spirits (whereupon any of the duties imposed by this act shall have been paid or secured to be paid) shall, after the last day of June next, be exported from the United States, to any foreign port or place, there shall be an allowance to the exporter or exporters thereof, by way of drawback, equal to the duties thereupon, according to the rates in each case by this act imposed, deducting therefrom half a cent per gallon, and adding to the allowance upon spirits distilled within the United States from molasses, which shall be so exported, three cents per gallon, as an equivalent for the duty laid upon molasses by the said act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States: Provided always, That the said allowance shall not be made, unless the said exporter or exporters shall observe the regulations hereinafter prescribed: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter the provisions in the said former act, concerning drawbacks or allowances in nature thereof, upon spirits imported prior to the first day of July next.

Sec. 52. And be it further enacted, That in order to entitle the said exporter or exporters to the benefit of the said allowances, he, she, or they, shall, previous to putting or lading any of the said spirits on board of any ship or vessel for exportation, give twenty-four hours' notice at the least, to the proper officer of inspection of the port from which the said spirits shall be intended to be exported, of his, her, or their intention to export the same, and of the number of casks, vessels, and so intended to be exported, and of the respective marks thereof, and of the place or places where the said spirits shall be then deposited, and of the place to which, and ship or vessel in which they shall be so intended to be exported; whereupon it shall be the duty of the said officer to inspect, by himself or deputy, the casks, vessels, and cases, so noticed for exportation, and the quantities, kinds, and proofs, of the spirits therein, together with the certificates which ought to accompany the same, according to the directions of this act, which shall be produced to him for that purpose; and if he shall find that the said casks, vessels, and cases, have the proper marks, according to the directions of this act, and that the spirits therein correspond with the said certificates, he shall thereupon brand each cask, vessel, or case, with the word "exportations," and that the said spirits shall, after such inspection, be laden on board the same ship or vessel, of which notice shall have been given, and in the presence of the same officer who shall have examined the same, and whose duty it shall be to attend for that purpose. And after the said spirits shall be laden on board such ship or vessel, the certificates aforesaid shall be delivered to the said officer, who shall certify, to the collector of the said district, the amount and particulars of the spirits so exported, and shall also deliver the said certificates, which shall have been by him received, to the said collector, which shall be a voucher to him for payment of the said allowance.

Sec. 53. Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, That the said allowance shall not be made, unless the said exporter or exporters shall make oath, or affirmation, that the said spirits so noticed for exportation, and laden on board such ship or vessel, are truly intended to be exported to the place whereof notice shall have been given, and are not intended to be reloaded within the United States; and that he or she doth verily believe that the duties thereupon charged by this act, have been duly paid, or secured to be paid; and shall also give bond to the collector, with two sureties, one of whom shall be the master, or other person having the command or charge of the ship or vessel, in which the said spirits shall be intended to be exported; the other, such sufficient person as shall be approved by the said collector, in the full value, in the judgment of the said collector, of the said spirits so intended to be exported, with the condition that the said spirits, (the dangers of the seas and enemies excepted) shall be really and truly exported to, and landed in, some port or place without the limits of the United States, and that the said spirits shall not be unshipped from on board of the said ship or vessel, whereupon the same shall have been laden for exportation, within the said limits, or any ports or harbors of the United States, or reloaded in any other part of the same, (shipwreck or other unavoidable accident excepted).

Sec. 54. Provided also, and be it further enacted, That the said allowance shall not be paid until six months after the said spirits shall have been so exported: And provided also, That whenever the owner of any ship or vessel, on board of which any such spirits are laden for exportation, shall make known to the collector, previous to the departure of such ship or vessel from the port where such spirits are laden, that such ship or vessel is not going to proceed the voyage intended, or the voyage is altered, it shall be lawful for the collector to grant a permit for the relanding the same.

Sec. 55. And be it further enacted, That if any of the said spirits, after the same shall have been shipped for exportation, shall be unshipped for any purpose whatever, either within the limits of any part of the United States, or within four leagues of the coast thereof, or shall be reloaded within the United States, from on board the ship or vessel wherein the same shall have been laden for exportation, unless the voyage shall not be proceeded on, or shall be altered as aforesaid, or unless, in case of necessity or distress, to save the ship and goods from perishing, which shall be immediately made known to the principal officer of the customs, residing at the port nearest to which such ship or vessel shall be at the time such necessity or distress shall arise, then, not only the spirits so unshipped, together with the casks, vessels, and cases, containing the same, but also the ship or vessel in or on board which the same shall have been so shipped or laden, together with her guns, furniture, ammunition, tackle, and apparel; and also the ship, vessel, or boat, into which the said spirits shall be unshipped or put, after the unshipping thereof, together with her guns, furniture, ammunition, tackle, and apparel, shall be forfeited, and may be seized by any officer of the customs, or of inspection.

Sec. 56. And be it further enacted, That the said allowance shall not be made when the said spirits shall be exported in any other than a ship or vessel of the burden of thirty tons and upwards, to be ascertained to the satisfaction of the collector of the district from which the same shall be intended to be exported.

Sec. 57. And be it further enacted, That the bonds to be given as aforesaid, shall and may be discharged by producing, within one year from the respective dates thereof, (if the same be shipped to any part of Europe or America, and within two years if shipped to any part of Asia or Africa, and if the delivery of the spirits in respect to which the same shall have been given, be at any place where a consul or other agent of the United States resides,) a certificate of such consul or agent, or if there be no such consul or agent, then a certificate of any two known and reputable American merchants, residing at the said place; and if there be not two such merchants residing at the said place, then a certificate of any other two reputable merchants, testifying the delivery of the said spirits at the said place. Which certificate shall, in each case, be confirmed by the oath or affirmation of the master and mate, or other like officer, of the vessel in which the said spirits shall have been exported; and when such certificate shall be from any other than a consul or agent, or merchants of the United States, it shall be a part of the said oath or affirmation, that there were not, upon diligent inquiry, to be found two merchants of the United States at the said place: Provided always, That in the case of death, the oath or affirmation of the party dying shall not be deemed necessary: And provided further, That the said oath or affirmation, taken before the chief civil magistrate of the place of the said delivery, and certified under his hand and seal, shall be of the same validity as if taken before a person qualified to administer oaths within the United States; or such bonds shall and may be discharged upon proof that the spirits so exported, were taken by enemies, or perished in the sea, or destroyed by fire; the examination and proof of the same being left to the judgment and proof of the collector of the customs, naval officer, and chief officer of inspection, or any two of them, of the place from which such spirits shall have been exported. And in cases where the certificates herein directed cannot be obtained, the exporter or exporters of such spirits shall, nevertheless, be permitted to offer such other proof, as to the delivery of the said spirits without the limits of the United States, as he or they may have; and if the same shall be deemed sufficient by the said collector, he shall allow the same, except when the drawback to be allowed shall amount to one hundred dollars or upwards; in all which cases the proofs aforesaid shall be referred to the Comptroller of the Treasury, whose decision thereon shall be final.

Sec. 58. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the President of the United States, from time to time, to make such allowances to the said supervisors, inspectors, and to the deputies and officers by them to be appointed and employed, for their respective services in the execution of this act, to be paid out of the product of the said duties, as he shall deem reasonable and proper: Provided always, That the aggregate amount of the allowances to all the said supervisors, inspectors, and other officers, shall not exceed seven per cent. of the whole product of the duties arising from the spirits distilled within the United States: And provided also, That such allowance shall not exceed the annual amount of forty-five thousand dollars, until the same shall be further ascertained by law.

Sec. 59. And be it further enacted, That this act shall commence and take effect as to all matters therein contained, in respect to which no special commencement is hereby provided, (except the districts and surveys,) from and immediately after the last day of June next.

Sec. 60. And be it further enacted, That the nett product of the duties herein before specified, which shall be raised, levied, and collected, by virtue of this act, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be, and is hereby, pledged and appropriated for the payment of the interest of the several and respective loans which had been made in foreign countries, prior to the fourth day of August last; and, also, upon all and every the loan and loans which have been and shall be made and obtained pursuant to the act, entitled "An act making provision for the debt of the United States," and according to the true intent and meaning of the said act, and of the several provisions and engagements therein contained, and expressed, and subject to the like priorities and reservations as are made and contained in and by the said act, in respect to the moneys therein appropriated, and subject to this further reservation, that is to say: of the nett amount or product, during the present year, of the duties laid by this act, in addition to those heretofore laid upon spirits imported into the United States from any foreign port or place, and of the duties laid by this act on spirits distilled within the United States, and on stills; to be disposed of towards such purposes for which appropriations shall be made during the present session. And to the end that the said moneys may be inviolably applied in conformity to the appropriation hereby made, and may never be diverted to any other purpose, until the final redemption or reimbursement of the loans or sums for the payment of the interest whereof they are appropriated, an account shall be kept of the receipts and disposition thereof, separate and distinct from the product of any other duties, impost, excise, and taxes, whatsoever, except those heretofore laid and appropriated to the same purposes.

Sec. 61. And be it further enacted, That the unappropriated surplus, if any there shall be, of the revenue arising under this act, at the end of this and every succeeding year, shall be applied to the reduction of the public debt, in like manner as is directed by the act, entitled "An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt," and provided by the act, entitled "An act making provision for the debt of the United States," unless the said surplus, or any part thereof, shall be required for the public exigencies of the United States, and shall, by special acts of Congress, be appropriated thereto.

Sec. 62. And be it further enacted, That the several duties imposed by this act shall continue to be collected and paid, until the debts and purposes for which they are pledged and appropriated shall be fully discharged and satisfied, and no longer: Provided always, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Legislature of the United States from substituting other duties or taxes, of equal value to all or any of the said duties and imposts.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An Act making an appropriation for the purpose therein mentioned.

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose of effecting a recognition of the treaty of the United States, with the new Emperor of Morocco, there be, and hereby is, appropriated a sum not exceeding twenty thousand dollars, to be paid out of the moneys which, prior to the first day of January next, shall arise from the duties imposed upon spirits distilled within the United States, and from stills, by the act, entitled "An act repealing, after the last day of June next, the duties heretofore laid upon distilled spirits imported from abroad, and laying others in their stead, and also upon spirits distilled within the United States, and for appropriating the same," together with the excess of duties which may arise from the duties imposed by the said act on imported spirits, beyond those which would have arisen by the act, entitled "An act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States." And the President is hereby authorized to take on loan the whole sum by this act appropriated, or so much thereof as he may judge requisite, at an interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, and the fund established for the above mentioned appropriation is hereby pledged for the re-payment of the principal and interest of any loan to be obtained in manner aforesaid, and in case of any deficiency in the said fund, the faith of the United States is hereby also pledged to make good such deficiency.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An Act to amend "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States."

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the act, entitled "An act for establishing the temporary and permanent seat of the Government of the United States," as requires that the whole of the district of territory, not exceeding ten miles square, to be located on the river Potomac, for the permanent seat of the Government of the United States, shall be located above the mouth of the Eastern Branch, be, and is hereby, repealed; and that it shall be lawful for the President to make any part of the territory below the said limit, and above the mouth of Hunting Creek, a part of the said district, so as to include a convenient part of the Eastern Branch, and of the lands lying on the lower side thereof, and also the town of Alexandria; and the territory so to be included shall form a part of the district not exceeding ten miles square, for the permanent seat of the Government of the United States, in like manner, and to all intents and purposes, as if the same had been within the purview of the above recited act: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize the erection of the public buildings otherwise than on the Maryland side of the river Potomac, as required by the aforesaid act.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act supplemental to the "Act establishing the Treasury Department," and for a further compensation to certain officers.

Be it enacted, &c., That the eighth section of the act, entitled "An act to establish the Treasury Department," passed the second day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, shall be, and the same is hereby, extended to all and every of the clerks employed in the Treasury Department, as fully and effectually as if they, and every of them, were specially named therein, except as to the penalty in such section mentioned, which, in case of any such clerk offending against the provisions of the said section, shall be five hundred dollars, and removal from office.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That each and every clerk, and other officer already appointed in any of the departments of the United States, (and who have not, since their appointment, taken the oath or affirmation hereafter mentioned,) shall, within fifteen days after the passing of this act, and those who shall hereafter be appointed, shall, before they enter upon the duties of such appointment, take an oath of affirmation, before one of the justices of the Supreme Court, or one of the judges of a district court of the United States, to support the Constitution of the United States, and also an oath or affirmation, well and faithfully to execute the trust committed to him; which oaths or affirmations, subscribed by such clerk, and certified by the person administering the same, shall be filed in the office of the person employing such clerk.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the principal in any of the offices of the United States, who is authorized by law to appoint clerks under him; to allow to each clerk such compensation for his services as he shall, in the opinion of such officer, deserve for the same: Provided, That the whole sum to be expended for clerks in any such office (except the chief clerk) shall not exceed a sum equal to five hundred dollars per annum for every clerk employed therein.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That there shall be allowed for one year, commencing with the passing of this act, to the register, two hundred and fifty dollars; and to the auditor, the comptroller of the Treasury, and the attorney general, four hundred dollars each, in addition to their respective salaries, and to be paid in the same manner.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act relative to the six dollar of Denmark.

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of an act, entitled "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels," as hath rated the six dollar of Denmark at one hundred cents, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and that this repeal shall be deemed to operate in respect to all duties which have already arisen or accrued, as well as to such as shall hereafter arise or accrue.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An Act in addition to an act, entitled "An act for establishing the salaries of the executive officers of Government, with their assistants and clerks."

Be it enacted, &c., That, from and after the passing of this act, there shall be allowed to the chief clerk of the auditor, the annual sum of two hundred dollars, in addition to the salary allowed to him by the act, entitled "An act establishing the salaries of the executive officers of Government, with their assistants and clerks," to be paid at the Treasury of the United States, in quarterly payments, and from like appropriations as may be assigned for the payment of the other salaries mentioned in the above recited act.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there be allowed to the clerks employed in the several offices attached to the seat of Government, in addition to their respective salaries, their reasonable and necessary expenses, incurred by the removal of Congress from the city of New York to the city of Philadelphia.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be allowed to the assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to his salary for one year, commencing with the passing of this act, four hundred dollars, to be paid in the same manner as his salary.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act for making compensation to the commissioners of loans, for extraordinary expenses.

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of loans in the several States shall be allowed, in the settlement of their accounts, such sums as shall appear to have been necessarily expended by them in the purchase of stationery for the use of their several offices, from the commencement of the same to the first day of October next.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners of loans in the several States shall be allowed, in the settlement of their several accounts, such sums as they shall have necessarily expended for the hire of clerks to assist in executing the duties of their several offices, from the commencement of the same to the first day of October next.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act providing compensations for the officers of the Judicial Courts of the United States, and for jurors and witnesses, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c., That there be allowed to the several officers following, in addition to the fees (except mileage to the marshals) to which they are otherwise by law entitled, and also to jurors and witnesses, in the Courts of the United States, the following respective compensations, that is to say: To the attorney of the United States for the district, for his expenses and time in travelling from the place of his abode to any court of the United States, on which his attendance shall be requisite, at the rate of ten cents per mile going, and the same allowance for returning; to the clerk of the district court, for attending in the district or circuit court, five dollars per day, and the like compensation for travelling as is above allowed to the attorney for the district; to the clerk of the supreme court, for attending in court, eight dollars per day; to the marshal of the district, for attending the supreme, circuit, or district courts, five dollars per day; for summoning a grand jury, three dollars; and for summoning a petit jury, two dollars; and for serving and returning a writ, five cents per mile for his necessary travel; to the grand and petit jurors, each, fifty cents per day for attending in court, and for travelling, at the rate of fifty cents for every ten miles from their respective places of abode to the place where the court is held, and the like allowance for returning; to witnesses, summoned on the part of the United States, or in behalf of any prisoner to be tried for any capital offence in any of the courts thereof, the same compensation as is above allowed to grand and petit jurors. That the several officers above specified shall be deemed to have been entitled to the above respective compensations, from the time of their respective appointments; and that the grand and petit jurors and witnesses, who have heretofore attended, shall also be deemed entitled to the above compensation, in like manner as those who shall hereafter attend. That there shall also be paid to the marshal the amount of the expense for fuel, candles, and other reasonable contingencies for holding a court, as hath accrued, or shall accrue; and the compensations to the grand and petit jurors, and witnesses, shall be included in the account of, and paid to, the marshal, to the use of, and be by him accordingly paid over to, the several persons entitled to the same; and the accounts of the several officers for the compensations aforesaid, (except mileage to the marshal for the service of writs in civil causes,) having been previously examined and certified by the judge of the district, shall be passed in the usual manner at, and the amount thereof paid out of, the Treasury of the United States. And a sum, arising from the fines and forfeitures to the United States, and equal to the amount thereof, is hereby appropriated for the payment of the above accounts.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That instead of the provisions in that respect heretofore made, of the first session of the circuit courts in the Eastern circuit, after the passing of this act, shall commence at the times following, that is to say: In New York district on the fifth, and in Connecticut district on the twenty-fifth, days of April next; in Massachusetts district on the twelfth, and in New Hampshire district on the twenty-fourth, days of May next; and in Rhode Island district on the seventh day of June next; and the subsequent sessions in the respective districts, on the like days of every sixth calendar month thereafter, except when any of those days shall happen on a Sunday, and then the sessions shall commence on the next day following. And the sessions of the said circuit court shall be held in New Hampshire district, at Portsmouth and Exeter, alternately, beginning at the first, in Massachusetts district, at Boston; in Rhode Island district, at Newport and Providence, alternately, beginning at the first, in Connecticut district, at Hartford and New Haven, alternately, beginning at the last; and in New York district, at the city of New York only.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the passing of this act, instead of the provisions in the act for that purpose, the sessions of the circuit court for the district of Virginia shall be holden in the city of Richmond only.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue in force until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An Act to continue in force, for a limited time, an act, entitled "An act for the temporary establishment of the Post Office."

Be it enacted, &c., That the act passed the first session of Congress, entitled "An act for the temporary establishment of the Post Office," be, and the same is hereby continued in full force until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all letters to and from the Treasurer, Comptroller, and Auditor, of the Treasury, and the Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, on public service, shall be received and conveyed by the post, free of postage.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to extend the carrying the mail from ty or parties applying for the same, secured to be paid, in manner following: that is to say, the said party or parties shall give bond, with one or more surety or sureties, to the satisfaction of the said inspector, in double the amount of the duties upon the quantity of teas in each case to be delivered, with condition for the payment of the said duties, if the same shall not exceed one hundred dollars in four months; or, if the same shall exceed one hundred dollars, and shall not exceed five hundred dollars, in eight months; or, if the same shall exceed five hundred dollars, in twelve months. Provided always, That the time to be allowed for the payment of the duties upon any parcel of teas to be delivered, shall not be such as to extend the credit for such duties beyond the term of two years, originally allowed upon the depositing of the said teas.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if the duties on any parcel of teas which shall have been deposited as aforesaid, shall not have been paid, or secured to be paid, in manner last specified, within the term of two years, according to the condition of the obligation to be given to the collector of the district within which the same shall have been landed, it shall be the duty of the said collector to cause so much of the said teas as may be necessary, to be sold at public auction, and retaining the sum which shall not have been so paid or secured of the said duties, together with the expenses of safe-keeping and sale of the said teas, shall return the overplus, if any, to the owner or owners thereof, his, her, or their agent, or lawful representative.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the bonds which have been or shall be directed to be given, by this or any other act, for moneys or duties to be paid or performed to the United States, shall be taken in the name of the United States of America, unless special direction shall have been given to take them in some other name. And the bonds to be taken as aforesaid, by any inspector of the revenue, shall be delivered by him forthwith to the collector of the district within which the teas, to which they may relate, shall have been landed, in order to the collection of the moneys therein specified. And the permits which shall have been granted by such inspector, for the delivery of any teas out of any storehouse wherein they shall have been deposited, shall be received by such collector towards satisfying any bond which shall have been, in the first instance, taken by the said collector, touching the said teas; which permits shall, therefore, specify the amount of the duties which shall have been paid or secured upon the teas to be delivered in virtue thereof, and the name of the ship or vessel in which they shall have been imported, and of the importer or importers thereof.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all teas, which, after the first day of April next, shall be imported into the United States from any foreign port or place, shall be landed under the care of the inspectors of the revenue for the ports where the same shall be respectively landed; and, for that purpose, every permit which shall be act, which limits the rate of interest to five per centum per annum: And whereas it is expedient that the said doubt be removed: Be it enacted, &c., That the loan aforesaid shall be deemed and construed to be within the true intent and meaning of the said act, entitled "An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt," and that any further loan, to the extent of the principal sum authorized to be borrowed by the said act, the interest whereof shall be five per centum per annum, and the charges whereof shall not exceed the said rate of four and a half per centum, shall, in like manner, be deemed and construed to be within the true intent and meaning of the said act.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act making further provision for the collection of the duties by law imposed on teas, and to prolong the term for the payment of the duties on wines.

Whereas it is conceived that the following regulations concerning teas may be conducive both to the accommodation of the importers thereof, and to the security of the revenue: Be it enacted, &c., That, in addition to the provisions contained in the fortieth and forty-first sections of the act, entitled "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels," as they regard the payment, or securing the payment of the duties on teas, it shall be lawful for every importer of teas, if he or she shall elect so to do, to give his or her bond to the collector of the district in which any of the said teas shall be landed, in double the amount of the duties thereupon, with condition for the payment of the said duties in two years from the date of such bond; which bond shall be accepted by such collector, without surety, upon the terms following: that is to say, the teas, for the duties whereof the said bond shall be accepted, shall be deposited at the expense and risk of the said importer, in one or more storehouse or storehouses, as the case may require, to be agreed upon between the said importer and the inspector, or other officer of inspection of the revenue, for the port where the said teas shall be landed; and upon every such storehouse the said inspector or officer of inspection shall cause to be affixed two locks, the key of one of which locks shall be kept by such importer, his or her agent, and the key of the other of which locks shall be kept by the said inspector, or by such other person as he shall depute and appoint in that behalf, whose duty it shall be to attend, at all reasonable times, for the purpose of delivering the said teas, of the said storehouse or storehouses; but no delivery shall be made of any of the said teas without a permit in writing, under the hand of the said inspector or officer of inspection. And in order to the obtaining of such permit, it shall be necessary that the duties upon the teas, for which the same shall be required, be first paid, or, at the option of the par-

Albany, in the State of New York, to Bennington, in the State of Vermont. Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act to continue in force the act therein mentioned, and to make further provision for the payment of pensions to invalids, and for the support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act, entitled "An act to provide for mitigating or remitting the forfeitures and penalties, accruing under the revenue laws, in certain cases therein mentioned," shall be, and is hereby, continued in force until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the yearly pensions which have been allowed by or in pursuance of any act or law of the United States, to persons who were wounded and disabled during the late war, shall, for the space of one year from the fourth day of March next, be paid out of the Treasury of the United States under such regulations as the President of the United States may direct.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all expenses which shall accrue from the first day of July next, inclusively, for the necessary support, maintenance, and repairs of all light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, shall continue to be defrayed by the United States, until the first day of July, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, notwithstanding such light-houses, beacons, buoys, or public piers, with the lands and tenements thereunto belonging, and the jurisdiction of the same, shall not in the mean time, be ceded to or vested in the United States, by the State or States, respectively, in which the same may be, and that the said time be further allowed to the States, respectively, to make such cession: Provided, That nothing in the said act shall be construed to limit or restrain the power of the President of the United States, to grant pardons for offences against the United States.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act supplementary to the act making provision for the reduction of the public debt.

Whereas it hath been made known to Congress that the President of the United States, in consequence of "An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt," hath caused a certain loan to be made in Holland, on account of the United States, to the amount of three millions of florins, bearing an interest of five per centum per annum, and reimbursable in six yearly instalments, commencing in the year one thousand eight hundred, and ending in the year one thousand eight hundred and six, or at any time sooner, in whole or in part, at the option of the United States:

And whereas it hath been also stated to Congress, that the charges upon the said loan have amounted to four and a half per centum, whereby a doubt hath arisen, whether the said loan be within the meaning of the said last mentioned granted by any collector for landing the same, shall, prior to such landing, be produced to the said inspector, who, by an endorsement thereupon under his own hand, shall signify the production thereof to him, and the time when; after which, and not otherwise, it shall be lawful to land the teas mentioned in such permit. And the said inspector shall make an entry of all such permits, and of the contents thereof; and each chest, box, or package, containing any teas, shall be marked by the officer under whose immediate inspection the same shall be landed, in legible and durable characters, with progressive numbers, and with the name of the vessel in which the same shall have been imported. And the said officer shall grant a certificate for each such chest, box, or package, specifying therein the name or names of the importer or importers, the ship or vessel in which the same shall have been imported, and the number thereof, to accompany the same whenever it shall be sent.

And whereas, for the payment of the duties accruing on Madeira wines, and which may be secured by bond, the term of twelve months is allowed; and it is proper to extend, in like manner, the payment of the duties accruing on other wines: Be it enacted, &c., That, for the payment of the duties on other than Madeira wines, and which shall be secured by bond, such bond shall be taken with condition for the payment of the duties in twelve months, in like manner as by law is directed for the payment of the duties on Madeira wines.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act for granting lands to the inhabitants and settlers at Vincennes, and the Illinois country, in the territory northwest of the Ohio, and for confirming them in their possessions.

Be it enacted, &c., That four hundred acres of land be given to each of those persons, who, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, were heads of families at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, on the Mississippi, and who, since that time, have removed from one of the said places to the other. And the Governor of the territory northwest of the Ohio is hereby directed to cause the same to be laid out for them, at their own expense, either at Vincennes or in the Illinois country, as they shall severally elect.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted and declared, That the heads of families at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, who afterwards removed without the limits of the said territory, are, notwithstanding, entitled to the donation of four hundred acres of land made by the resolution of Congress of the twenty-ninth of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight; and the Governor of the said territory, upon application to him for that purpose is hereby directed to cause the same to be laid out for such heads of families, or their heirs, and shall also cause to be laid off and confirmed to such persons, ty or parties applying for the same, secured to be paid, in manner following: that is to say, the said party or parties shall give bond, with one or more surety or sureties, to the satisfaction of the said inspector, in double the amount of the duties upon the quantity of teas in each case to be delivered, with condition for the payment of the said duties, if the same shall not exceed one hundred dollars in four months; or, if the same shall exceed one hundred dollars, and shall not exceed five hundred dollars, in eight months; or, if the same shall exceed five hundred dollars, in twelve months. Provided always, That the time to be allowed for the payment of the duties upon any parcel of teas to be delivered, shall not be such as to extend the credit for such duties beyond the term of two years, originally allowed upon the depositing of the said teas.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if the duties on any parcel of teas which shall have been deposited as aforesaid, shall not have been paid, or secured to be paid, in manner last specified, within the term of two years, according to the condition of the obligation to be given to the collector of the district within which the same shall have been landed, it shall be the duty of the said collector to cause so much of the said teas as may be necessary, to be sold at public auction, and retaining the sum which shall not have been so paid or secured of the said duties, together with the expenses of safe-keeping and sale of the said teas, shall return the overplus, if any, to the owner or owners thereof, his, her, or their agent, or lawful representative.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the bonds which have been or shall be directed to be given, by this or any other act, for moneys or duties to be paid or performed to the United States, shall be taken in the name of the United States of America, unless special direction shall have been given to take them in some other name. And the bonds to be taken as aforesaid, by any inspector of the revenue, shall be delivered by him forthwith to the collector of the district within which the teas, to which they may relate, shall have been landed, in order to the collection of the moneys therein specified. And the permits which shall have been granted by such inspector, for the delivery of any teas out of any storehouse wherein they shall have been deposited, shall be received by such collector towards satisfying any bond which shall have been, in the first instance, taken by the said collector, touching the said teas; which permits shall, therefore, specify the amount of the duties which shall have been paid or secured upon the teas to be delivered in virtue thereof, and the name of the ship or vessel in which they shall have been imported, and of the importer or importers thereof.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all teas, which, after the first day of April next, shall be imported into the United States from any foreign port or place, shall be landed under the care of the inspectors of the revenue for the ports where the same shall be respectively landed; and, for that purpose, every permit which shall be

act, which limits the rate of interest to five per centum per annum: And whereas it is expedient that the said doubt be removed: Be it enacted, &c., That the loan aforesaid shall be deemed and construed to be within the true intent and meaning of the said act, entitled "An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt," and that any further loan, to the extent of the principal sum authorized to be borrowed by the said act, the interest whereof shall be five per centum per annum, and the charges whereof shall not exceed the said rate of four and a half per centum, shall, in like manner, be deemed and construed to be within the true intent and meaning of the said act.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act making further provision for the collection of the duties by law imposed on teas, and to prolong the term for the payment of the duties on wines.

Whereas it is conceived that the following regulations concerning teas may be conducive both to the accommodation of the importers thereof, and to the security of the revenue: Be it enacted, &c., That, in addition to the provisions contained in the fortieth and forty-first sections of the act, entitled "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels," as they regard the payment, or securing the payment of the duties on teas, it shall be lawful for every importer of teas, if he or she shall elect so to do, to give his or her bond to the collector of the district in which any of the said teas shall be landed, in double the amount of the duties thereupon, with condition for the payment of the said duties in two years from the date of such bond; which bond shall be accepted by such collector, without surety, upon the terms following: that is to say, the teas, for the duties whereof the said bond shall be accepted, shall be deposited at the expense and risk of the said importer, in one or more storehouse or storehouses, as the case may require, to be agreed upon between the said importer and the inspector, or other officer of inspection of the revenue, for the port where the said teas shall be landed; and upon every such storehouse the said inspector or officer of inspection shall cause to be affixed two locks, the key of one of which locks shall be kept by such importer, his or her agent, and the key of the other of which locks shall be kept by the said inspector, or by such other person as he shall depute and appoint in that behalf, whose duty it shall be to attend, at all reasonable times, for the purpose of delivering the said teas, of the said storehouse or storehouses; but no delivery shall be made of any of the said teas without a permit in writing, under the hand of the said inspector or officer of inspection. And in order to the obtaining of such permit, it shall be necessary that the duties upon the teas, for which the same shall be required, be first paid, or, at the option of the par-

Albany, in the State of New York, to Bennington, in the State of Vermont. Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act to continue in force the act therein mentioned, and to make further provision for the payment of pensions to invalids, and for the support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers.

Be it enacted, &c., That the act, entitled "An act to provide for mitigating or remitting the forfeitures and penalties, accruing under the revenue laws, in certain cases therein mentioned," shall be, and is hereby, continued in force until the end of the next session of Congress, and no longer.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the yearly pensions which have been allowed by or in pursuance of any act or law of the United States, to persons who were wounded and disabled during the late war, shall, for the space of one year from the fourth day of March next, be paid out of the Treasury of the United States under such regulations as the President of the United States may direct.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all expenses which shall accrue from the first day of July next, inclusively, for the necessary support, maintenance, and repairs of all light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, shall continue to be defrayed by the United States, until the first day of July, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, notwithstanding such light-houses, beacons, buoys, or public piers, with the lands and tenements thereunto belonging, and the jurisdiction of the same, shall not in the mean time, be ceded to or vested in the United States, by the State or States, respectively, in which the same may be, and that the said time be further allowed to the States, respectively, to make such cession: Provided, That nothing in the said act shall be construed to limit or restrain the power of the President of the United States, to grant pardons for offences against the United States.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act supplementary to the act making provision for the reduction of the public debt.

Whereas it hath been made known to Congress that the President of the United States, in consequence of "An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt," hath caused a certain loan to be made in Holland, on account of the United States, to the amount of three millions of florins, bearing an interest of five per centum per annum, and reimbursable in six yearly instalments, commencing in the year one thousand eight hundred, and ending in the year one thousand eight hundred and six, or at any time sooner, in whole or in part, at the option of the United States:

And whereas it hath been also stated to Congress, that the charges upon the said loan have amounted to four and a half per centum, whereby a doubt hath arisen, whether the said loan be within the meaning of the said last mentioned

granted by any collector for landing the same, shall, prior to such landing, be produced to the said inspector, who, by an endorsement thereupon under his own hand, shall signify the production thereof to him, and the time when; after which, and not otherwise, it shall be lawful to land the teas mentioned in such permit. And the said inspector shall make an entry of all such permits, and of the contents thereof; and each chest, box, or package, containing any teas, shall be marked by the officer under whose immediate inspection the same shall be landed, in legible and durable characters, with progressive numbers, and with the name of the vessel in which the same shall have been imported. And the said officer shall grant a certificate for each such chest, box, or package, specifying therein the name or names of the importer or importers, the ship or vessel in which the same shall have been imported, and the number thereof, to accompany the same whenever it shall be sent.

And whereas, for the payment of the duties accruing on Madeira wines, and which may be secured by bond, the term of twelve months is allowed; and it is proper to extend, in like manner, the payment of the duties accruing on other wines: Be it enacted, &c., That, for the payment of the duties on other than Madeira wines, and which shall be secured by bond, such bond shall be taken with condition for the payment of the duties in twelve months, in like manner as by law is directed for the payment of the duties on Madeira wines.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act for granting lands to the inhabitants and settlers at Vincennes, and the Illinois country, in the territory northwest of the Ohio, and for confirming them in their possessions.

Be it enacted, &c., That four hundred acres of land be given to each of those persons, who, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, were heads of families at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, on the Mississippi, and who, since that time, have removed from one of the said places to the other. And the Governor of the territory northwest of the Ohio is hereby directed to cause the same to be laid out for them, at their own expense, either at Vincennes or in the Illinois country, as they shall severally elect.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted and declared, That the heads of families at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, who afterwards removed without the limits of the said territory, are, notwithstanding, entitled to the donation of four hundred acres of land made by the resolution of Congress of the twenty-ninth of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight; and the Governor of the said territory, upon application to him for that purpose is hereby directed to cause the same to be laid out for such heads of families, or their heirs, and shall also cause to be laid off and confirmed to such persons, the several tracts of land which they may have possessed, and which, before the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty-three, may have been allotted to them according to the laws and usages of the Government under which they had respectively settled: Provided, nevertheless, That if such persons, or their heirs, do not return and occupy the said lands within five years, such lands shall be considered as forfeited to the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That one hundred and fifty acres of land, heretofore in possession of the Piankeshaw Indians, and now under actual improvement, and constituting a part of the village of Vincennes, be given to the persons who are severally in possession of the said land.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That where lands have been actually improved and cultivated at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, under a supposed grant of the same, by any commandant or court claiming authority to make such grant, the Governor of the said territory be, and he hereby is, empowered to confirm to the persons who made such improvements, their heirs or assigns, the lands supposed to have been granted as aforesaid, or such parts thereof as he, in his discretion, may judge reasonable, not exceeding to any one person four hundred acres.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That a tract of land, containing about five thousand four hundred acres, which, for many years, has been fenced and used by the inhabitants of Vincennes as a common, also a tract of land including the villages of Cohos and Prairie du Pont, and heretofore used by the inhabitants of the said village as a common, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated to the use of the inhabitants of Vincennes, and of the said village, respectively, to be used by them as a common, until otherwise disposed of by law.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Governor of the said territory be authorized to make a grant of land, not exceeding one hundred acres, to each person who hath not obtained any donation of land from the United States, and who, on the first day of August, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, was enrolled in the militia at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, and has done militia duty, the said land to be laid out at the expense of the grantees, and in such form and place as the said Governor shall direct: Provided, nevertheless, That no claim founded upon purchase or otherwise, shall be admitted within a tract of land heretofore occupied by the Kaskaskia nation of Indians, and including by their village, which is hereby appropriated to the use of the said Indians.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That two lots of land, heretofore in the occupation of the priests at Cahokia, and situated near that village, be, and the same is hereby, granted in fee to P. Gibault; and that a tract of land at Kaskaskia, formerly occupied by the Jesuits, be laid off and confirmed to St. Jam Beauvais, who claims the same in virtue of a purchase thereof.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act of Congress of the twenty-eighth of August, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight, as refers to the locations of certain tracts of land directed to be run out and reserved for donations, to the ancient settlers in the Illinois country, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the Governor of the said territory is directed to lay out the same, agreeably to the act of Congress of the twentieth of June, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

An act for raising and adding another regiment to the military establishment of the United States, and for making further provision for the protection of the frontiers.

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be raised an additional regiment of infantry, which, exclusive of the commissioned officers, shall consist of nine hundred and twelve non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said regiment shall be organized in the same manner as the regiment of infantry described in the act entitled "An act for regulating the military establishment of the United States."

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the troops aforesaid, by this act to be raised, including the officers, shall receive the same pay and allowances, be subject to the same rules and regulations, and be engaged for the like term, and upon the same conditions, in all respects, excepting the bounty hereinafter mentioned, as are stipulated for the troops of the United States, in the before-mentioned act.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That each non-commissioned officer, private, and musician, who has enlisted, or shall enlist, pursuant to the act aforesaid, or who shall enlist pursuant to this act, shall be entitled to receive six dollars as a bounty.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That in case the President of the United States should deem the employment of a major-general, brigadier-general, a quartermaster, and chaplain, or either of them, essential to the public interest, that he be, and he hereby is, empowered, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the same accordingly. And a major-general, so appointed, may choose his aid-de-camp, and a brigadier-general his brigade major, from the captains or subalterns of the line: Provided always, That the major-general and brigadier-general so to be appointed, shall, respectively, continue in pay during such term only as the President of the United States, in his discretion, shall deem it requisite for the public service.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That in case a major-general, brigadier-general, quartermaster, aid-de-camp, brigade major, and chaplain, should be appointed, their pay and allowances shall be, respectively, as herein mentioned. The major-general shall be entitled to one hundred and twenty-five dollars, monthly pay, twenty dollars allowance for forage, monthly, and for daily subsistence fifteen rations, or money in lieu thereof, at the contract price; the brigadier-general shall be entitled to ninety-four dollars, monthly pay, with sixteen dollars allowance for forage, monthly, and for daily subsistence twelve rations, or money in lieu thereof, at the contract price; that the quartermaster shall be entitled to the same pay, rations, and forage, as the lieutenant colonel commandant of a regiment; that the aid-de-camp be entitled, including all allowances, to the same pay, rations, and forage, as a major of a regiment; that the brigade major be entitled, including all allowances, to the same pay, rations, and forage, as a major of a regiment; that the chaplain be entitled to fifty dollars per month, including pay, rations, and forage.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That if, in the opinion of the President, it shall be conducive to the good of the service, to engage a body of militia to serve as cavalry, they furnishing their own horses, arms, and provisions, it shall be lawful for him to offer such allowances, to encourage their engaging in the service, for such time, and on such terms, as he shall deem it expedient to prescribe.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That if the President should be of opinion that it will be conducive to the public service to employ troops enlisted under the denomination of levies, in addition to, or in place of, the militia which, in virtue of the powers vested in him by law, he is authorized to call into the service of the United States, it shall be lawful for him to raise, for a term not exceeding six months, (to be discharged sooner if the public service will permit,) a corps, not exceeding two thousand non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, with a suitable number of commissioned officers. And in case it shall appear probable to the President that the regiment directed to be raised by the aforesaid act, and by this act, will not be completed in time to prosecute such military operations as exigencies may require, it shall be lawful for the President to make a substitute for the deficiency, by raising such further number of levies, or by calling into the service of the United States such a body of militia as shall be equal thereto.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he hereby is, empowered to organize the said levies, and alone to appoint the commissioned officers thereof, in the manner he may judge proper.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, of the militia, or said corps, be subject to the rules and articles of war; and they shall be entitled to the same pay, rations, and forage, and in case of wounds or disability in the line of their duty, to the same compensation as the troops of the United States.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, of the said corps of levies, shall be entitled to receive such proportional quantity of clothing, as their time of service shall bear to the annual allowance of clothing to the troops of the United States, subject, however, to a proportional deduction from their pay.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That each of the non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, of the said levies, shall be entitled to receive three dollars as a bounty.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That in case the nature of the service upon which the troops of the United States may be employed, should require a greater number of surgeon's mates than are provided for in the before-mentioned act, the President of the United States may engage, from time to time, such additional number of surgeon's mates as he shall judge necessary.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That the commissioned officers, who shall be employed to recruit men for the said regiments, shall be entitled to receive, for every recruit who shall be duly enlisted and mustered, the sum of two dollars.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That, for defraying the expense, for one year, of the additional regiment to be raised by virtue of this act; for defraying the expense, for a like term, of the officers mentioned in the seventh section of this act; for defraying the expense of the said militia horse, militia foot, and levies, which may be called into, or engaged for, the service of the United States, pursuant to this act; for defraying the expense of such surgeon's mates as may be appointed pursuant to the fifteenth section of this act; for defraying the expense of recruiting the said two regiments; and for defraying the expense of any military posts which the President shall judge expedient and proper to establish, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, a sum not exceeding three hundred and twelve thousand six hundred and eighty-six dollars and twenty cents, to be paid out of the moneys which, prior to the first day of January next, shall arise from the duties imposed upon spirits distilled within the United States, and from stills, by the act, entitled "An act repealing, after the last day of June next, the duties heretofore laid upon distilled spirits imported from abroad, and laying others in their stead; and also upon spirits distilled within the United States, and for appropriating the same," together with the excess of duties which may arise from the duties imposed by the said act on imported spirits, beyond those which would have arisen by the act, entitled "An act making farther provision for the payment of the debts of the United States."

And to the end that the public service may not be impeded for want of necessary means:

Sec. 16. Be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President to take on loan the whole sum by this act appropriated, at an interest thereof as he may judge requisite, or so much not exceeding six per centum per annum; and the fund established for the above-mentioned appropriation is hereby pledged for the repayment of the principal and interest of any loan to be obtained in manner aforesaid; and in case of any deficiency in the said fund, the faith of the United States is hereby also pledged to make good such deficiency.

Acts of Congress.

Whereas Congress did, by a resolution of the twenty-third day of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, recommend to the several States to pass laws, making it expressly the duty of the keepers of their jails, to receive and safe keep therein, all prisoners committed under the authority of the United States, in order, therefore, to ensure the administration of justice:

Resolved, &c., That in case any State shall not have complied with the said recommendation, the marshal in such State, under the direction of the judge of the district, be authorized to hire a convenient place to serve as a temporary jail, and to make the necessary provision for the safe keeping of prisoners committed under the authority of the United States, until permanent provision shall be made by law for that purpose; and the said marshal shall be allowed his reasonable expenses incurred for the above purposes, to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Approved, March 3, 1791.

INDEX

TO THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIRST CONGRESS.

SENATE.

A.		Page.	Adjournment—	Page.
FIRST SESSION.
Absent members, circulars addressed to, requesting immediate attendance	-	15	report of the committee	994
Accounts between the United States and the individual States, bill from the House for the settlement of	-	52	resolution proposing to adjourn on the 27th July laid on the table	1011
passed	-	55	resolution proposing 10th August received	1026
Acts and records, bill for the safe-keeping of, received	-	73	concurrent in	1029 passed	-	75	repealed, and 12th August fixed on	1232
amendments concurred in	-	77	adjournment of the session	1034
Acts of Congress, a committee appointed to report a mode of communicating them to the several States	-	44	Algers and Tunis, the plan of a truce between the United States and these Regencies presented	937 report of the committee	-	44	plan sent to the House	940 concurred in	-	45	Answer to the President's Speech, committee appointed to prepare it	934
Adams, John, elected Vice President	-	17	the Answer reported and adopted	936
Address of the Vice President on taking the Chair of the Senate	-	23	President's reply thereto	937 of the President of the United States on taking the oath of office	-	27	Appropriations, bill making, for the service of the present year, received	955
Adjournment, resolution to adjourn on the 22d September received	-	71	passed with amendments	957 concurred in	-	72	bill making certain, therein named, received	1032 postponed to the 26th September	-	84	amended and passed	1033
further postponed	-	88	Army accounts, resolution providing for the salaries of clerks in the office of the Commissioners of Army Accounts received from the House	1013
to first Monday in January next	-	94	concurred in	1018
Amendments, resolution respecting amendments made in committee	-	55	Arrears of pay, resolution requesting the President to transmit to the Executives of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia, a list of the officers, &c., of the lines of said States who are entitled to arrears of pay for services in the years 1782 and 1783, received	975
(See Constitution.)	-	31	amended and agreed to	977
Answer to the President's Speech	-	38	THIRD SESSION.
reply thereto	-	87	Address of the President at the opening of the session	1728
Appropriation, bill making appropriations for the service of the present year	-	92	committee appointed to prepare an Answer thereto	1731
passed	-	991	Answer reported and adopted	1733
Accounts between the United States and the individual States, a bill for the settlement of them received	-	1005	President's reply thereto	1734
passed with amendments	-	1009	Adjournment	1782 committee of conference appointed	-	1017	Algers, resolution authorizing the President to take measures for releasing the American prisoners at	1753
report of the committee	-	969	Appropriations, bill making, for the services of the present year, received	1763
Acts, records, &c., a bill to prescribe the mode in which the public acts, &c., in each State, shall be authenticated, so as to take effect in every other State, received	-	970	passed	1764
passed	-	932	bill making, for the purposes therein mentioned, received	1774
Address of the President at the opening of the session	-	984	passed	1775
Adjournment, resolution for appointment of a committee to report on the business necessary to be done previous to adjournment	-	984	Army, promotions and appointments	1785
	-		Attorney General, resolution proposing an appropriation to enable him to defray certain necessary expenses	1765
1st CON—A

Senate Proceedings.

	Page.	Page.
B.
FIRST SESSION.
Barton, William, appointed a Judge for the Western Territory declines the appointment	64	71, 72
SECOND SESSION.
Bailey, Francis, petition of, in relation to his newly-invented method of making types, presented and referred	78	74, 76
referred to the Secretary of the Treasury	943	85
his report thereon	949	89
a bill from the House vesting in him the exclusive privilege of making and vending his punches, &c., received	950
consideration thereof postponed until the bill to promote the progress of the useful arts be brought in	951	87
referred to the committee on the latter bill	955	51
report of the committee	959	53
Bland, Colonel Theodorick, member of the House, from Virginia, resolution for attending his funeral	982	54
Business of last session, a committee appointed to report thereon	938
report of the committee	939
Balances due the United States, this subject postponed to the next session of Congress	1772	54
Blair, Rev. Dr., appointed Chaplain to the House	1733	54
THIRD SESSION.
Bank of the United States, report of the Secretary of the Treasury, containing his plan for a National Bank, received	1738	73
committee appointed to take said plan into consideration	1739	81
bill for establishing the Bank reported	1741
considered	1745
passed	1748
concurrence of the House	1753
supplementary bill received	1764
ordered to the third reading	1765
considered and passed	1769
C.
FIRST SESSION.
Chaplains appointed	24
Chaplains, a committee appointed to report on the manner of electing	18
report of the committee	19
City Hall (N. Y.) tendered for the accommodation of Congress	18 accepted	19
a report respecting it	47
Congress, committee appointed to report a mode of communication between the two Houses	20
report of the committee	23
bill to alter the time for the next meeting of, received	85
third reading of the bill	88
Constitution, committee appointed to report a mode of carrying into execution the second paragraph of the 3d section of the 1st article	34
report of the committee	35
consideration of the report	36
resolution providing that a copy of the Constitution be prefixed to the publication of the acts of Congress concurred in	49

Senate Proceedings.

	Page.	Page.
THIRD SESSION.
Carrying trade, memorial paying regulations for the encouragement of this trade to Europe, laid on the table	1758
Chaplain appointed	1731
Coins, weights, and measures, report from the Secretary of State on this subject received	1738
referred to committee	1740
report of the committee adopted	1772
(See Foreign Coins .)
Commissioners of Loans, bill making compensation to, for extra expenses, received	1773
committed	1775
ordered to third reading	1776
amended and passed	1777
the House recede from their disagreement to the amendment	1780
Congress, joint committee appointed to report what time will be proper for the commencement of the next session	1759
report made and laid over	1750
a bill to alter the time for the next meeting of, received	1756
third reading negatived	1762
a bill fixing the time for the next annual meeting of, received	1766
passed	1770
Consuls, a committee appointed on that part of the President's Speech which relates to the appointment of consuls	1735
bill in relation to, reported	1744
recommitted	1745
amended, and again reported	1750
passed	1751
amendments of the House disagreed to	1755
D.
FIRST SESSION.
District Attorneys nominated	86
Doorkeeper elected	18
Duties, a bill for laying duties on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, received	38
amended and concurred in	46
engrossed bill imposing duties on tonnage, received	42
concurred in	46
a bill to regulate the collection of the duties on the tonnage of ships, and on goods, wares, &c., imported into the United States received	50
passed	52
a bill to amend said act, received	82
non-concurred in	91
a bill to suspend the operation of part of an act imposing duties on tonnage, received	78
amended and concurred in	79
amendments concurred in by the House	79
SECOND SESSION.
Debt of the United States, a bill making provision for the debt of the United States, received	982
reported	989
considered	990
ordered to third reading	991
again considered	1013, 1015
passed	1016

	Page.	Page.
Debt of the United States—
a resolution of the House on the amendments, considered	1020, 1021
bill making further provision for the debt of the United States, received	1013
amended and passed	1026
amendments concurred in	1028
bill making provision for the reduction of the public debt, received	1031
passed	1032
amendments concurred in	1033
Delaware, message announcing that this State has ratified all the amendments to the Constitution, except the first	952
De Poiery, Mons., message in relation to his services in the American army, and nominating him a captain by brevet	981
nominations confirmed	982
Dobson, Thomas, his letter proposing to present to the Senate the volumes of his edition of the Encyclopedia, as they are published	071
Doors of the Senate, a proposition to open them whilst in legislative session	967
negatived	968
Duties, a bill further to suspend part of an act to regulate the collection of duties on the tonnage of ships, and on goods, wares, &c., received	962
the bill amended and passed	963
bill to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties on goods, wares, &c., and on the tonnage of ships, received	1013
bill passed	1019
(See Tonnage .)
THIRD SESSION.
Debt of the United States, a bill supplementary to the act making provision for the payment, reported and passed	1735
report from the Commissioners under the act of last session	1736
a bill to explain and amend the act for payment of the debts of the United States, received	1762
passed	1766
a bill supplementary to the act for reduction of the public debt, received	1774
passed	1780
Distilled Spirits, memorial from the College of Physicians, praying that such heavy duties may be laid on distilled spirits as will restrain their intemperate use	1740
petition from inhabitants of Lancaster against the excise on spirits	1751
a bill from the House repealing the duties heretofore laid, and laying others in their stead, received	1751
committed	1753
amendments reported	1754
bill recommitted	1756
committee of conference appointed	1764
consideration of their report	1771
Doors of the Senate, motion for opening them when in legislative session	1766
negatived	1768
Duties, a bill making provision for the collection of duties on teas, and to extend the time for the payment of duties on wines, received	1776
passed	1777

Senate Proceedings.

	Page.		Page.
E.		Forfeitures, a bill to provide for the mitigation or remission of forfeitures accruing under the revenue laws -	968
FIRST SESSION.	55	passed with amendments -	970
Enrolled bills, joint committee appointed on Executive officers, a bill to establish their salaries, and those of their assistants and clerks, received -	73	Franklin, Benjamin, a letter from him read -	947
passed -	75
SECOND SESSION.
Eastern Boundary, a message from the President on this subject -	944	Fisheries, report from the Secretary of State on the subject of the -	1754
a report thereon -	953	Foreign coins, a bill received concerning the rate of -	1771
consideration of the report -	957	committed -	1772
Ely, Dr. John, a bill allowing him compensation for attendance on prisoners of the United States -	969	reported and passed -	1773
Enrolled bills, committee on, appointed -	943	the debt due them, received -	1756
European Powers in America, a committee appointed to report a plan for the regulation of the trade between the United States and these countries -	947	bill rejected -	1764
additions to the committee -	950, 966	France, a letter from the King of -	1747
Executive Officers, a bill to establish their salaries, and those of their assistants and clerks, received -	967	report of the Secretary of State on a complaint of the French Government in relation to an extra tonnage on their vessels, referred to a committee -	1748
passed -	980	a resolution relative to the 5th article of the treaty with -	1771
Exportation of goods, a bill to prevent the exportation of goods not duly inspected -	959	a bill for carrying into effect the convention between France and the United States -	1782 passed -	960	Franklin, Benjamin, a letter from the President of the Commonwealth of Paris, and sundry copies of the Civic Eulogy pronounced by Fauchet on Dr. Franklin, received -	1732
THIRD SESSION.		sent to the House -	1733
Executive Journal, motion directing the Secretary to furnish to the members such extracts as they may desire -	1748	the Senate invited to attend the eulogium to be delivered on, before the American Philosophical Society -	1770
motion amended and concurred in -	1749
Executive Officers, a bill in addition to the act for establishing their salaries -	1775
passed with amendments -	1778
amendments concurred in -	1780
Exports, Secretary of the Treasury called upon for a statement of -	1758
Extra session called -	1781, 1782
F.
FIRST SESSION.
Fishbourn, Col. Benjamin, message in relation to his nomination as naval officer at Savannah -	59
Foreign Affairs, a bill to establish the Department of, received -	47
amended and passed -	50
SECOND SESSION.
Fines and forfeitures, a bill for the mitigation or remission of, in certain cases, received -	952
passed with an amendment -	956
the amendment disagreed to, and a committee of conference appointed -	958
report of the committee -	961
Fitch, John, his petition relative to improvements in the mode of applying steam for propelling boats -	1002
Foreign intercourse, a bill received from the House providing the means of -	967
amended and concurred in -	978
amendments disagreed to, and a conference appointed -	980 report of the committee agreed to -	992
amendments agreed to -	993

Senate Proceedings.

	Page.		Page.
Indians—		Judiciary—
a bill to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indians -	992	the bill passed with amendments -	988
amended and passed -	1005	committee appointed to bring in a bill to regulate processes in the courts of the United States -	938
a message on the subject of a treaty with the Creek Indians -	1024	a bill to continue in force the act of the last session to regulate processes in the courts of the United States -	965 secret article to be inserted in said treaty -	1025	passed -	966 treaty with the Creeks ratified -	1036
Inspection. (See Collectors and Exportation.)
Invalid officers, a bill to authorize the issuing of certificates to a certain description of -	970
bill non-concurred in -	1004
		THIRD SESSION.
India trade, memorial from certain merchants, praying for encouragement and protection in this trade -	1749	Johnson, Samuel W., (Conn.), resignation of -	1786
Indiana, motion for a committee to confer with the President on the proper measures to bring about a peace with the Wabash and Miami -	1772	Judiciary, a bill making compensation to the officers of the judicial courts -	1773
consideration thereof postponed -	1781	committed -	1776
		reported and passed -	1778
		a resolution making temporary provision for the safe keeping of prisoners, under the laws of the United States, concurred in -	1782
		a bill to continue in force the act to regulate processes in the courts of the United States, received -	1756
		passed -	1757
		K.
		THIRD SESSION.
Journal, a report relative to the printing and publication of it -	38	Kentucky, message from the President, communicating sundry papers on the subject of the admission of this State into the Union -	1731
a committee appointed to revise the Journal previous to its publication -	39	a report in favor of her admission -	1742
Journals of the late Congress, a resolution for furnishing members with a set of them -	42	a bill for that purpose reported -	1745 concurred in -	46	passed -	1745
printed copies of the Journals to be sent to the Executives and the Legislatures of the several States, at the end of every session -	93	a bill regulating the number of her Representatives reported -	1756
		passed -	1757
		L.
Judiciary, a committee appointed to bring in a bill for organizing the -	18
a bill to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States, reported -	46
recommitted -	49
passed -	50
a bill to regulate processes in the courts of the United States -	80
ordered to be engrossed -	82
all the amendments of the House except the first, concurred in -	88 committee of conference on the amendment disagreed to -	89
their report -	91
House concurred in the amendment -	92
a bill for allowing certain compensation to the Judges of the Supreme and other courts, and to the Attorney General -	83
passed -	84
resolution recommending the State Legislatures to make regulations for receiving and safe-keeping prisoners, under the laws of the United States -	83
concurred in -	84
message of the President making nominations for judges, attorneys, &c., for United States courts -	86
		SECOND SESSION.
Judiciary, committee appointed to bring in a bill in addition to the act to establish the courts of the United States -	937

Senate Proceedings.

Page.	Page.
Light-houses— bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to finish the light-house on Portland Head, received - - - - - 1026	Message of the President— on the subject of the ratification of Indian treaties - - - - - 80
passed - - - - - 1028	report on the subject of the last message - - - - - 82
Loan, a resolution submitted for loaning to the United States twenty-two millions of dol- lars in the certificates issued by the respec- tive States, for services and supplies during the late war - - - - - 988	transmitting the copy of a letter from the Go- vernor of Rhode Island - - - - - 88
committed - - - - - 1003	announcing the decease of the Dauphin of France - - - - - 92 report made - - - - - 1005	in reply to the committee appointed to inform him of the intended recess - - - - - 92 considered - - - - - 1006, 1009	making nominations - - - - - 60, 63, 65, 78, 86, 90 report, and the bill making provision for the deb, committed - - - - - 1011 reported, report adopted, recommended, and a new bill reported - - - - - 1012	SECOND SESSION.
	Maryland, amendments to the Constitution rati- fied by the Legislature of - - - - - 939, 988
THIRD SESSION.	Georgia, and Rhode Island. (See Congress.)
Land, a bill for granting lands to the inhabitants of Vincennes and Illinois, and for confir- ming them in their possessions, reported - - - - - 1744	Message of the President at the opening of the ses- sion - - - - - 932
passed - - - - - 1745	transmitting a copy of the ratification of the Constitution by North Carolina - - - - - 935
amendments referred to committee - - - - - 1776	in relation to a treaty with the Creeks - - - - - 936 reported and agreed to - - - - - 1777	transmitting a statement of the Southwestern frontiers and of the Indian department - - - - - 936
a bill to establish offices for granting lands in territory of the United States, received - - - - - 1758	transmitting a plan for the arrangement of the militia - - - - - 938 committed - - - - - 1762	transmitting the ratification of the amend- ments to the constitution by Maryland - - - - - 939
reported, and the subject postponed to the next session - - - - - 1774	transmitting a copy of the act of the State of Rhode Island calling a Convention to take into consideration the Constitution of the United States - - - - - 941
Laurens, Colonel Henry, his petition praying compensation for 10,000 bushels of rice supplied to the army: also, interest on the compensation granted to the late Colonel Laurens whilst Minister to France - - - - - 1741	transmitting a copy of the act of North Car- olina ceding to the United States a por- tion of her western territory - - - - - 942
Laws of the United States, a committee appointed to examine them and report such as have expired or are about to expire - - - - - 1773	transmitting a copy of the resolve of the Le- gisature of Massachusetts in relation to the eastern boundary line - - - - - 948 report - - - - - 1775	transmitting copies of certain acts of the Le- gisature of New York - - - - - 961
Library of Philadelphia offer to the members of both Houses the free use of their books - - - - - 1747	announcing that Rhode Island has ratified the Constitution - - - - - 981, 989
Light-houses, a bill for the support of light houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, passed - - - - - 1781	in relation to the services of Monsieur De Poetry in the American army - - - - - 931
Loan, a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, explaining the terms of the loan negotiated in Holland - - - - - 1767	making nominations for military appoint- ments - - - - - 982 announcing that North Carolina has ratified the amendments to the Constitution - - - - - 987
FIRST SESSION.	announcing that Rhode Island has ratified the amendments - - - - - 999
Mathews, James, elected doorkeeper - - - - - 18	in relation to the treaty with the Creek In- dians - - - - - 1024, 1027
Maxwell, Cornelius, appointed messenger - - - - - 18	transmitting a copy of the said treaty - - - - - 1029
Members of both Houses, a bill for the compensa- tion of - - - - - 61	in relation to the Creek and Cherokee In- dians - - - - - 1033 passed - - - - - 73	making nominations - - - - - 944, 945, 960, 967, 978, 984, 1003, 1027
Message of the President on the subject of the dis- putes with certain powerful Indian tribes - - - - - 58	Military Establishment, a bill for regulating it, re- ceived - - - - - 959
in relation to the nomination of Colonel Fish- burn as naval officer for the port of Sa- vannah - - - - - 61	committed - - - - - 960
in relation to the troops of the United States informing the Senate of his intention to meet them for the purpose of advising with them in relation to the treaty with the Southern Indians - - - - - 65	reported - - - - - 962
announcing hostilities with the Wabash In- dians, and suggesting the expediency of making some temporary provision for call- ing forth the militia - - - - - 80	reported and passed - - - - - 964
	Morris, Robert, a memorial from him in relation to the settlement of his accounts as Super- intendent of Finance, read and referred - - - - - 943 report thereon - - - - - 946

Senate Proceedings.

Page.	Page.
Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island, a bill to continue in force the act of last session de- claring the assent of Congress to certain acts of these States - - - - - 1736	bill for a, reported resolution for establishing one - - - - - 1773
recommitted - - - - - 1740	concurrent in - - - - - 1776
reported and passed - - - - - 1743
Maryland, bill declaring the assent of Congress to a certain act of this State - - - - - 1752	N.
passed - - - - - 1753	FIRST SESSION.
Mediterranean trade, that part of the President's speech relating to this trade, referred to a select committee - - - - - 1735	Newspapers, a report as to what newspapers the members shall receive at the public ex- pense - - - - - 43
report laid on the table - - - - - 1744	New York, classification of the Senators from this State - - - - - 54
recommitted - - - - - 1753	SECOND SESSION.
Message of the President communicating sundry documents in relation to the admission of Kentucky into the Union - - - - - 1731	Naturalization, a bill to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, received - - - - - 952
transmitting official communications relative to the expedition against the Indians north- west of the Ohio - - - - - 1734	Navy of the United States, memorial from officers of the late navy, praying that the same emoluments may be granted to them that were granted to the officers of the Conti- nental army, laid on the table - - - - - 958
in relation to certain grants of lands north- west of the Ohio - - - - - 1740	Newspapers, order for supplying the Senators with them - - - - - 938
accompanying a report from the Secretary of State in relation to American citizens in captivity in Algiers - - - - - 1740	New Hampshire, amendments to the Constitution ratified by this State - - - - - 988 on the subject of an appropriation - - - - - 1746	New Jersey, amendments to the Constitution rati- fied by - - - - - 1027 enclosing a letter from the King of France - - - - - 1749	New York, revised laws of this State presented to Congress - - - - - 937
in relation to the location of the seat of Gov- ernment - - - - - 1750	amendments to the Constitution ratified by this State - - - - - 962
transmitting a decree of the National Assem- bly of France - - - - - 1750	New York City, thanks of Congress voted to the Corporation, for the accommodation pro- vided by them - - - - - 1024
in relation to recent depredations on the fron- tiers - - - - - 1751	letter from the Vice President to the Mayor of New York - - - - - 1035
with documents relative to the admission of Vermont into the Union - - - - - 1755	Nominations and confirmations 946, 960, 967, 978, 984, 1023, 1024, 1027, 1031, 1032
on the subject of conferences with Great Bri- tain respecting the treaty of peace - - - - - 1758	North Carolina, the Constitution ratified by this State - - - - - 935
transmitting a report from the Governor of the Northwestern Territory - - - - - 1759	a bill for giving effect to the several acts therein mentioned in relation to this State, received and passed - - - - - 940
on the aspect of affairs in Europe - - - - - 1760	classification of the Senators from a copy of the act of this State ceding to the United States a portion of her western ter- ritory, received - - - - - 942
announcing his intention of taking measures for the ransom of the American prisoners at Algiers - - - - - 1763	a report upon that subject - - - - - 948
enclosing a report from the Secretary of War in relation to the appointment of Brigadier Generals in Ohio - - - - - 1763	a bill to accept the cession reported - - - - - 951
in relation to the appointment of a Consul for the port of Poole, (England) - - - - - 1765	passed - - - - - 952
calling an extra session of the Senate making nominations of Federal officers for the State of Vermont - - - - - 1783	nomination of Federal officers for this State - - - - - 944 announcing his having distinguished the United States, in pursuance of the act laying du- ties on spirits - - - - - 1784	the nominations confirmed - - - - - 945
nominating officers for the new regiment - - - - - 1785	the bill giving effect to the acts therein men- tioned in relation to this State, reported - - - - - 967
making nominations, 1735, 1739, 1765	passed - - - - - 969
Military Establishment, a bill for adding another regiment to the establishment, for the pro- tection of the frontiers, received - - - - - 1757	a conference appointed on the disagreement of the two Houses on amendments to the bill - - - - - 972
amended - - - - - 1759	report of the committee - - - - - 976 considered and passed - - - - - 1761	bill giving effect in this State to the Judi- ciary act, received - - - - - 977 appointment of the officers - - - - - 1785	the judicial officers nominated - - - - - 980 report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the establishment of a mint, received and committed - - - - - 1754	amendments to the Constitution ratified by this State - - - - - 987

Senate Proceedings.
Page.	Page.
THIRD SESSION.
National Bank, plan of the Secretary of the Treasury for creating one, received -	1738
bill for establishing the Bank reported -	1739
passed -	1741
(See Bank of the United States .)	1748
Newspapers, order for supplying the Senators with them -	1734
Nominations and confirmations -	1735, 1736, 1739, 1740, 1742, 1762, 1765, 1769, 1785
O.
FIRST SESSION.
Oath administered to the Senators -	44
Oaths, a bill to regulate the time and manner of administering them -	26
passed -	31
Otis, Samuel Alyn, elected Secretary of the Senate -	18
SECOND SESSION.
Officers, a bill for the relief of a certain description of officers therein mentioned, received -	965
rejected -	966
THIRD SESSION.
Officers, promotions and appointments of officers in the army -	1785
P.
FIRST SESSION.
Philadelphia, use of public buildings in, tendered to Congress -	83
Pensioners, bill for the payment of invalid pensioners, received -	88
passed -	91
Post Office, a resolution that it be conducted for the present on the rules prescribed by the late Congress -	78
a bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, reported -	78
passed -	80
President pro tem. elected -	1758
President of the United States, votes of the Electors -	17 committee appointed to make arrangements for his report -	18
wait upon him -	19
of the United States, committee appointed to wait upon him -	20 report as to the time and place of administering the oath to him -	24, 25
takes the oath, and delivers an address to the two Houses -	26, 27 attended divine service in St. Paul's Chapel, accompanied by the Vice President, and the Members of the two Houses -	29 attends the Senate for the purpose of consulting on the subject of Indian affairs -	66 committee appointed to wait upon and inform him of the intended recess -	90
President's Message. (See Message .) President's Speech. (See Address .)
President and Vice President, a bill for the compensation of these officers received -	56 concurred in, with amendments -	76
amendments disagreed to by the House -	77
the House adhere to the disagreement -	80

Senate Proceedings.
Page.	Page.
FIRST SESSION.
Report of the committee respecting the ceremony of receiving the President of the United States for governing the two Houses in cases of conference -	19
for the government of the Senate -	19
respecting communications between the two Houses -	20
joint rules on the mode of passing bills -	23
SECOND SESSION.
Regulations for conducting business between the two Houses -	987
Report on the petition of Francis Bailey -	949
Rhode Island, Message of the President communicating a copy of the act of this State, calling a convention to take into consideration the Constitution of the United States -	941
a committee appointed to report what measures it will be proper for Congress to take respecting this State -	966
report of the committee -	970
consideration of the report -	972
a bill reported to prevent goods being brought from this State into the United States -	973
the bill recommitted -	975
reported with additional clauses -	976
message announcing that this State has ratified the Constitution -	981
a bill for giving effect to the acts therein mentioned respecting this State, received from the House -	983
passed -	986
a bill giving effect in this State to the Judiciary act -	984
attendance of the Senators from this State -	993
classification of them -	994
amendments to the Constitution ratified -	999
THIRD SESSION.
Revolutionary services, a bill from the House to provide for the widows and orphans of officers who lost their lives in the late war -	1774
postponed to the next session -	1780
Salaries of Executive officers. (See Executive Officers .)
Seal of the United States. (See Acta , &c.)
Seal of Government, memorial from New Jersey, praying that it may be established on the Delaware -	66
a draught of ten miles square, including Lancaster, presented, and other places mentioned as proper situations for it -	71
a bill to establish the seat of Government -	84
amendments proposed -	85, 8
further consideration postponed to the next session -	92
Senators classified agreeably to the Constitution, of the late Congress, committee appointed to confer with a committee of the House relative to the disposition to be made of the papers in the office of the Secretary of the late Congress -	36
report of the committee laid over -	18

Senate Proceedings.
Page.	Page.
Secretary of Foreign Affairs, his opinions respecting the Convention with France, -	53
Secretary of the Senate elected -	18
oath administered to him -	44
Short, William, appointed Minister to France in place of Mr. Jefferson -	48
SECOND SESSION.
Seamen, a bill for the regulation and government of seamen in the merchant service -	994
passed -	1004
Seal of Government, a bill to establish the permanent seal of Government introduced -	980
report on the bill -	985
consideration of the bill -	994, 997, 1000
bill ordered to be engrossed -	1001
passed -	1002
Senate, a proposition to open the doors of the Senate when in legislative session -	967
negated -	968
Soldiers and seamen, a bill for the relief of disabled soldiers and seamen -	1019
passed -	1027
South Carolina, amendments to the Constitution ratified by this State -	961 a bill for altering the time for holding certain courts in South Carolina and Georgia -	1028
passed -	1030
Stirling, Lord, petition of his widow praying the adjustment of her husband's claim -	991
a bill for adjusting the claim -	1026
passed -	1028
Steuben, Baron, a bill for finally adjusting and satisfying his claims -	971
passed -	979
THIRD SESSION.
Sandy Hook, an act of the State of New Jersey vesting in the United States jurisdiction of a lot of land, on which are erected a light-house and other public buildings, laid on the table -	1741
Seat of Government, message from the President respecting its location -	1750
bill to amend the act establishing the seat of Government -	1759
consideration of the bill -	1768
passed -	1770
Senate, motion to open the doors when in legislative session -	1766
negated -	1768
Ships and vessels. (See Vessels .) Spirits. (See Distilled Spirits .)
Surgeons, memorial from sundry surgeons, &c., praying to be allowed for the depreciation of their pay, laid on the table -	1747
T.
FIRST SESSION.
Territory northwest of the Ohio, a bill for the government of -	51
passed -	58
Thanksgiving, resolution from the House appointing a joint committee to request the President to recommend a day of public thanksgiving and prayer -	88
resolution concurred in -	90

Senate Proceedings.

Titles, committees appointed to report what titles should be annexed to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States -	24
report laid over -	31
disagreed to -	33, 34, 35, 36
Trade with the West Indies, committee appointed to report a system for the regulation of the trade between this country and other Powers in North America, and with the West Indies -	46
report of the committee -	57
Treasury Department, bill for establishing it -	48
Troops of the United States, message from the President respecting them -	55
a bill to recognize and adapt to the Constitution the troops raised under the resolves of Congress -	61
passed -	85
Territory south of the Ohio, a bill for the government of -	91
Tonnage, a bill imposing duties on the tonnage of ships and vessels -	92
passed -	1006
Tracy, Nathaniel, his petition, praying the enactment of a law for the relief of unfortunate merchants, laid on the table -	956
Treasurer of the United States, statements of his accounts -	994, 1023
Treaties, resolution that all treaties entered into be published with the acts of Congress -	982
THIRD SESSION.
Texas, duties on. (See Duties.)
Treasury Department, a proposition for increasing the salaries of the officers of the Department -	1766
a bill supplementary to the act for establishing the Department -	1768
passed -	1771
U.
SECOND SESSION.
Useful Arts, a bill to promote the progress of useful arts -	954
passed with amendments -	960
amendments concurred in -	961
V.
FIRST SESSION.
Vessels, a bill for registering and clearing vessels, received -	58
passed -	71
a bill to explain and amend the said act, received -	85
passed with amendments -	91
amendments concurred in -	92
Vice President of the United States, examination of the votes for -	17
a committee appointed to settle the manner of receiving him -	19
a committee appointed to wait upon him -	20
his address on taking the chair of the Senate takes the oath -	22
on the passage of said bill -	44
THIRD SESSION.
Vessels not to clear out without proper manifests. (See Collectors.)
Virginia line, a bill to enable the officers and soldiers of, to obtain titles to certain lands lying northwest of the Ohio -	1015
reported, &c. -	1017
recommitted -	1019
amendments and passed -	1028
amendments concurred in -	1030
Virginia and North and South Carolina. (See Articles of pay.)
THIRD SESSION.
Vermont, a bill for admitting this State into the Union -	1755
passed -	1757
a bill regulating the number of her representatives -	1756
passed -	1757
a bill to give effect in this State to the laws of the United States -	1762
passed -	1763
message of the President nominating the Federal officers of this State -	1783
the nominations confirmed -	1785
W.
War Department, a bill for establishing it -	48
passed -	56
Washington, George, elected President of the United States -	17
SECOND SESSION.
West Point, a bill to authorize the purchase of West Point -	993
passed -	994
THIRD SESSION.
Wabash and Miami Indians, a committee appointed to communicate with the President on the proper measures to bring about a peace with them -	1773
White, Right Rev. Dr., elected Chaplain -	1731
Widows and orphans, a bill for making compensation to certain widows and orphans, received -	1774
bill postponed to the next session -	1780
Wines, duties on imported. (See Duties.)
FIRST SESSION.
Yeas and nays, on the bill to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States -	50 on a motion to recede from an amendment to the bill to establish the Treasury Department -	71 on a motion to amend one of the proposed amendments to the Constitution -	74
on an amendment to the bill for allowing compensation to the members of both Houses on sundry motions relative to the bill to establish the seat of Government -	85, 86, 87
on the passage of said bill -	89
SECOND SESSION.
Yeas and nays, on the bill to prevent goods being brought from Rhode Island into the United States -	974
on the passage of said bill -	976

Senate Proceedings.

Yeas and Nays—	Page.
on the report of a committee in favor of the claims of Baron Steuben -	979 on a proposition for holding the next session of Congress in Philadelphia -	985 on sundry questions relative to the bill for establishing the permanent seat of Government -	985, 996, 997, 998, 1000, 1001
on the passage of said bill -	1002
on the proposition for holding the next session of Congress in Baltimore -	989 on sundry questions relative to the bill making provision for the payment of the public debt, 991, 1013, 1014, 1015, 1016, 1020, 1021, 1022 on the bill to authorize the purchase of land at West Point -	993, 994 on the report on the subject of the proposed loan -	1009, 1010, 1011, 1012 on the Creek Treaty -	1031, 1032, 1036
THIRD SESSION.
Yeas and nays, on the resolution declaring it inexpedient to alter the act making provision for the payment of the public debt -	1739
on limiting the term of the incorporation of the Bank of the United States -	1745
on other questions on the Bank bill -	1748
on granting leave to bring in a bill to amend the act for establishing the permanent Seat of Government -	1759
on postponing the consideration of the said bill -	1759, 1768 on the bill for raising an additional regiment on the bill supplementary to that for establishing the Bank of the United States -	1766, 1769 on the proposition for opening the doors of the Senate when in legislative session -	1768 on the bill in addition to that for establishing the salaries of Executive officers -	1778 on the bill to carry into effect the Convention between France and the United States -	1782

House Proceedings and Debates.

Page.	Page.	Page.
Appropriations—	bill passed	1450
report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject of additional appropriations, committed	bill making additional appropriations presented	1721
passed	Arrears of pay, motion that the Secretary of War cause to be published accurate lists of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia and North Carolina lines of the late army who are entitled to arrears of pay	1722
a report thereon	report agreed to	1724
Attorney General, directed to report to the House, at the next session, such matters relative to the administration of justice as require to be remedied	Authors, &c., a bill for securing to them the exclusive right to their books and other writings, reported	1552
ordered to be engrossed	recommitted	1572
an amendatory bill reported		1582
Address, the Speaker's, on taking leave of the House	Adjournment	1103
Algiers, memorial on the subject of American citizens in captivity at	Ames, Mr. (Mass.), his speech on the militia bill	1105
on the duties on spirits	the new revenue bill	1106
Bank of the United States		1342
Baldwin, Mr. (Georgia), his speech on duties on imports	on tonnage	1878 on the Treasury Department	Department of Foreign Affairs	1880
compensation to the President	Indian treaties	1838
Bankruptcy, a committee appointed to report a bill to establish a uniform system of	Beckley, John, elected Clerk	1814
Benson, Mr. (New York), his speech on duties on imports	on the Executive Departments	1868 on the Treasury Department	on a resolution respecting Rhode Island	1873
Department of Foreign Affairs	War Department	1893
compensation to the President	collegiate election	186
New Jersey election	Home Department	312
amendments to the Constitution	amendments to the Constitution	279
the judiciary	amendments to the Constitution	392
on the application of Virginia	on the application of Virginia	607 on the manner of taking oaths	on titles	556
on fixing the Seat of Government		644

INDEX.

TO THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIRST CONGRESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Page.	Page.	Page.
Accounts, a bill for settling the accounts between the United States and the individual States, presented	committed	1414
again reported, amended, and ordered to be engrossed	passed	1417
Acts, records, &c., a bill for the safe-keeping of the acts, records, and great seal of the United States, reported	passed	1421
Acts of Congress, a resolution requiring certified copies of the acts of Congress to be lodged with the President, to be by him transmitted to the Executives of the several States, received	concurrent in	1532
a resolution for prefixing to the publication of them correct copies of the Constitution, received	concurrent in	1549
(See the Index to the Appendix.)	Adjournment, a committee appointed to report when it will be proper to bring the present session to a close	1629
report of the committee laid on the table	taken up and considered	1632
resolution to adjourn on the 26th of September	reconsidered, and the 29th fixed upon	1633
Amendments. (See Constitution.)	Ames, Mr. (Mass.), his speeches on duties on imports	1634
on duties on tonnage	on a resolution respecting Rhode Island	1643
on the Department of Foreign Affairs	the Treasury Department	1644
New Jersey election	compensation to the President	1646
amendments to the Constitution	amendments to the Constitution	1719
seat of Government	the Judiciary	1721
his reply	Appropriation, a bill making appropriations for the service of the present year	1548
ordered to be engrossed	passed	1550
debated		1045

House Proceedings and Debates.

Page.	Page.	Page.
Accounts, a bill for settling the accounts between the United States and the individual States, presented	committed	1414
again reported, amended, and ordered to be engrossed	passed	1417
Acts, records, &c., a bill for the safe-keeping of the acts, records, and great seal of the United States, reported	passed	1421
Acts of Congress, a resolution requiring certified copies of the acts of Congress to be lodged with the President, to be by him transmitted to the Executives of the several States, received	concurrent in	1532
a resolution for prefixing to the publication of them correct copies of the Constitution, received	concurrent in	1549
(See the Index to the Appendix.)	Adjournment, a committee appointed to report when it will be proper to bring the present session to a close	1629
report of the committee laid on the table	taken up and considered	1632
resolution to adjourn on the 26th of September	reconsidered, and the 29th fixed upon	1633
Amendments. (See Constitution.)	Ames, Mr. (Mass.), his speeches on duties on imports	1634
on duties on tonnage	on a resolution respecting Rhode Island	1643
on the Department of Foreign Affairs	the Treasury Department	1644
New Jersey election	compensation to the President	1646
amendments to the Constitution	amendments to the Constitution	1719
seat of Government	the Judiciary	1721
his reply	Appropriation, a bill making appropriations for the service of the present year	1548
ordered to be engrossed	passed	1550
debated		1045

House Proceedings and Debates.

	Page.
Boudinot, Mr., (New Jersey,) on the mode of keeping the Journal -	1041
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit 1043, 1095, 1100, 1131, 1149, 1160, 1170, 1196, 1212, 1400, 1406, 1407, 1432, 1427 -	1053
on the answer to the President's speech 1045, 1053 on unfinished business -	1057
manner of reporting the debates -	1060
report on Saddle's case -	1067
sale of public lands -	1069
naturalization -	1110, 1118
on the slave trade 1188, 1204, 1415, 1416, 1466 on the Post Office -	1527
on the public debt -	1592
next meeting of Congress -	1591, 1592
Amelung's glass manufactory -	1624
officers of the Navy -	1630
Brown, Mr., (Virginia,) on the slave trade -	1652
Burke, Mr., (South Carolina,) on unfinished business -	1652
naturalization -	1117, 1121, 1123
remission of fines -	1127
census -	1130
on the slave trade -	1186, 1199, 1416, 1452
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit 1292, 1318, 1332, 1362, 1367	1367
Officers of the Navy -	1649
fixing the seat of Government 1652, 1668, 1673	1673
THIRD SESSION.
Baldwin, Mr., (Georgia,) on filling a vacancy in the Presidency -	1863
Bank of the United States, the plan of the Secretary of the Treasury for a National Bank received and committed -	1890
a bill for incorporating the subscribers to the bank received -	1800
debated -	1873
a bill supplementary to the above reported -	1875
passed -	1902, 1910
Barney, Joshua, petition of, praying to be reimbursed his expenses while a prisoner with the enemy -	1861
report thereon -	1873
a bill in his favor reported -	1873
rejected -	1873
Benson, Mr., (New York,) on the Militia bill -	1820
on filling a vacancy in the Presidency 1855, 1866 on electors -	1867
Bible, memorial from a Baptist Association praying the interposition of Congress to prevent inaccuracies in future editions of the Bible, presented -	1872
Blair, Rev. Mr., elected Chaplain -	1791
Bloodworth, Mr., (North Carolina,) on the militia -	1821
on duties on spirits -	1817, 1818, 1821
on the Post Office bill -	1849, 1849, 1877, 1881
Boudinot, Mr., (New Jersey,) on the militia 1811, 1814, 1819, 1820, 1823 on the public lands -	1749, 1830, 1831
duties on spirits -	1871, 1872
Bank of the United States -	1894, 1919
Bourne, Mr., (Rhode Island,) on the militia on the Post Office bill -	1889
Burke, Mr., (South Carolina,) on the militia 1818, 1821 filling a vacancy in the Presidency -	1865
new revenue bill -	1874
C.
Carroll, Mr., (Maryland,) on duties on imports -	167
Department of Foreign Affairs -	326, 328
collection bill -	576, 577
amendments to the Constitution -	730
seat of Government -	878, 880, 910
Census, committee appointed to bring in a bill to provide for enumerating the inhabitants of the United States -	366
Chaplain elected -	233
Churchman, John, his memorial in relation to the variations of the magnetic needle, referred report thereon -	143
Clerk elected -	170
Clymer, Mr., (Penn.), on duties on imports 116, 147, 167, 242	362 duties on tonnage -	242
titles -	243
Executive Departments -	382
disposition of Western lands -	414
Department of Foreign Affairs -	489
amendments to the Constitution -	710, 725
fixing the seat of Government -	896
Commerce and navigation, committee appointed to report a bill for the further encouragement of -	684
Compensation. (See President and Vice President.)
Congress, a bill to alter the time of its next annual meetings, introduced -	905
committed -	911
passed -	912
Constitution of the United States, debate on the motion for going into Committee of the Whole on the subject of amendments to the Constitution -	424
propositions of amendment -	433
debated -	450
report laid on the table -	660 to 665
taken up and debated 703, 717, 729, 749, 757 other amendments proposed -	761
debate on the report of the committee 766, 767, 773 arrangement of the articles of amendment -	779
Contested Election. (See Smith, William—New Jersey.)
Crimes, a bill for the punishment of certain crimes, received -	834
Cruse, Englehart, his petition praying for an exclusive right to use and vend his improved steam engine, referred -	343
SECOND SESSION.
Carroll, Mr., (Maryland,) on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit 1409, 1410, 1412, 1479 next meeting of Congress -	1626
Amelung's glass manufactory -	1630
duties on spirits -	1643

House Proceedings and Debates.

	Page.
Census, committee appointed to bring in a bill to provide for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States -	1051
debated -	1062
referred to a select committee -	1077
amendments reported and considered -	1081
bill ordered to be engrossed -	2106
laid on the table -	1108
taken up -	1109
recommitted -	1125
passed -	1127
Cession of Western lands, a bill to accept the cession from North Carolina of a part of her Western territory, received -	1414 considered and amended -	1477
passed -	1478
Chaplain appointed -	1043
Clymer, Mr., (Penn.), on the report of Secretary of Treasury on public credit 1044, 1305, 1316 on the order of business -	1050
on unfinished business -	1074
on the answer to the President's Speech -	1053
on naturalization -	1120, 1123
Congress, a resolution proposing to hold the next session in Philadelphia -	1620
considered -	1622
agreed to -	1626, 1634
a motion to repeal a part of the residence law, taken up and disposed of -	1720
Constitution of the United States, amendments proposed by North Carolina -	1481
a committee appointed to report the decisions of the several States on the proposed amendments -	1621
report of the committee -	1713
Consuls, committee appointed to report on the fees to be allowed consuls and vice consuls -	1642
report laid on the table -	1658
agreed to, and committee appointed to bring in a bill -	1659
bill presented -	1682
passed -	1685
Copper coinage, proposals for supplying the United States with copper coinage, referred to the Secretary of the Treasury -	1520
his report on the subject laid on the table -	1530
Copperas, vitriol, &c., petition from manufacturers of these articles, praying that an additional duty may be laid on the importation of them -	1549
Copy-right. (See Authors.)
Cordage, petition from manufacturers praying for an additional duty on the imported article, referred -	1549
Crimes, bill for the punishment of certain crimes, considered -	1519, 1520, 1521
bill passed -	1522
Currency, the plan of the Secretary of State for establishing uniformity in the currency and weights and measures of the United States, laid on the table -	1681
THIRD SESSION.
Carroll, Mr., (Maryland,) on filling a vacancy in the Presidency -	1856, 1864
on electors -	1867
Chaplains, nominations for election of -	1790
Churchman, John, his petition praying the aid of Congress to enable him to prosecute his researches relative to the causes of the variations of the magnetic needle -	1804
report on the petition -	1845
laid on the table -	1846
taken up and considered -	1885
Clerk of the House, a resolution respecting the duration of his office -	1973
Clerks and other officers of the Federal Courts, a committee appointed to bring in a bill to provide for their compensation -	1902
bill presented -	1962
recommitted -	1967
passed -	1973
Clymer, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on the duties on spirits -	1860
Commissioners of Loans, committee appointed to bring in a bill granting them additional compensation for extra services -	1969
bill presented -	1970
Congress, report of the committee appointed to report the time proper for commencement of the next session -	1863
bill to alter the time for the next meeting of Congress, presented -	1964
passed -	1962
rejected by the Senate -	1968
new bill reported -	1969
passed -	1970
Consuls, a bill concerning them, received -	1884
D.
FIRST SESSION.
Day of Thanksgiving, resolution proposing the appointment of a committee to wait upon the President and request him to recommend a day of public thanksgiving and prayer -	914
agreed to -	915
Debates of the House, a resolution complaining of the manner in which the debates have been reported, introduced and discussed -	917
withdrawn -	920
Departments. (See Executive, Foreign Affairs, and Treasury.)
Domestic Affairs, notice of an intention to present a bill for establishing an Executive department under this name -	420
(See Home Department.)
Duties, a resolution proposing duties on certain articles imported into the United States, debated, 102, 105, 123, 144, 151, 161, 168, 173, 176, 192, 200, 208, 213
bill reported, laying duties on goods, wares, &c., imported into the United States -	248
debate on the bill -	291, 294, 334, 330, 335
bill ordered to be engrossed -	343
recommitted, and reported with amendments again debated -	344
passed -	356
proposition for laying certain duties on tonnage -	176
debated -	234, 251, 271, 282

xxxiii

xxix.

House Proceedings and Debates.

SECOND SESSION.		Page.
Elections, Committee on Elections appointed	-	1106
Ely, Dr. John, bill for his compensation, passed	-	1550
Executive officers, bill supplementary to act for establishing the salaries of executive officers, &c., presented	-	1527
passed	-	1549
Exports, a plan for regulating the exports of the United States	-	1103 motion for a committee to bring in a bill to encourage the exports of the United States	-	1104
THIRD SESSION.
Electors of President, &c., a committee appointed to report a bill to determine the time when they shall be chosen	-	1791
the bill reported	-	1813
considered	-	1867
Enrolled bills, appointment of a joint committee on	-	1820
Excise laws, memorial from Pennsylvania in opposition to them	-	1879
Executive officers, a bill in addition to the act for establishing their salaries, reported	-	1972
ordered to the third reading	-	1974
Exports, the Secretary of the Treasury called on to report the amount of the exports from the several districts in the United States	-	1838
F.
FIRST SESSION.
Fitzsimons, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on duties on imports	106, 115, 120, 126, 127, 130, 135, 138, 139, 141, 142, 144, 146, 147, 148, 150, 156, 158, 166, 168, 173, 174, 175, 178, 187, 190, 199, 201, 208, 227, 307, 324, 325, 336, 344, 364
on tonnage	-	234, 244, 275, 283, 609, 615
on the Treasury Department	-	-
on the collection bill	-	604
compensation to the President	-	620
on appointing a Committee of Ways and Means	-	633, 643 compensation to members	-	670, 671
on Indian treaties	-	678
on fixing the seat of Government	-	697, 702, 763
Foreign Affairs, a bill to establish the Department of Foreign Affairs, reported	-	787, 897, 921
committed	-	417
debated	-	418
third reading of the bill	-	455, 479, 512, 552, 578
passed	-	590
motion for a bill supplementary to the above, negatived	-	591
-	-	669
SECOND SESSION.
Finances, forfeitures, &c., a bill reported for the revision or mitigation of	-	1081
debated	-	1127
recommitted	-	1129
an amendatory bill, reported	-	1408
passed	-	1414
Fisheries, a representation from Massachusetts on this subject, referred to the Secretary of State	-	1724
Fitch, John, his petition praying for an exclusive privilege to use steam for the purposes of navigation, laid on the table	-	1658
Page.
Fitzsimons, Mr., (Penn.), on the report of the Postmaster General	-	1077
on the remission of fines	-	1128
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit	1139, 1145, 1158, 1162, 1298, 1300, 1304, 1305, 1320, 1341, 1375, 1388, 1395, 1398, 1412, 1422, 1424, 1437, 1438, 1531
on the slave trade	-	1184
appropriation-bill	-	1449
punishment of crimes	-	1521
tonnage on foreign shipping	1566, 1571, 1573, 1577
on the public debt	-	1590
next meeting of Congress	-	1622, 1623
accounts between the United States and the individual States	-	1622 duties on distilled spirits	-	1636
Foreign intercourse, a committee appointed to bring in a bill making compensation to persons employed in the intercourse with foreign nations	-	1068
debate on this subject	-	1062
bill presented	-	1076
debated	-	1081, 1088
ordered to be engrossed	-	1092
recommitted	-	1476
amendatory bill reported	-	1496
amended	-	1546
passed	-	1549
Foreign shipping, debate on a report in relation to the increase of the tonnage on foreign shipping	-	1557, 1566, 1569, 1570, 1573
(See Tonnage.)
Forfeitures and penalties, a bill presented to provide for the remission or mitigation of penalties accruing under the revenue laws	-	1546
passed	-	1549
Foster, Mr., (New Hampshire,) on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit	-	1363
Franklin, Dr., his death announced, and an order made for a token of mourning	-	1534
THIRD SESSION.
Fisheries, a report from the Secretary of State on this subject, sent to the Senate	-	1909
Fitzsimons, Mr., (Penn.), on supplying newspapers on the militia	-	1769
on duties on spirits	-	1805, 1813, 1814
Foreign officers, committee appointed to report a bill to provide for the payment of the debts due them	-	1845, 1852, 1860, 1871
bill reported	-	1867
passed	-	1872
rejected by the Senate	-	1901
France, bill passed for carrying into effect the consular convention with this country	-	1969
Franklin, Dr., a letter from the President of the Commonalty of Paris, with sundry copies of the eulogy pronounced by Fouchet on Dr. Franklin, received	-	1978
translation of the above	-	1791 resolution proposing that the Speaker communicate to the President and Commonalty of Paris, the sense of the House on account of the eulogium	-	1792
-	-	1798

House Proceedings and Debates.

	Page.
Dr. Franklin— Message from the President, with a letter from the President of the National Assembly of France, and a decree of that body on the death of Dr. Franklin, received - (See the Appendix.) resolution received from the Senate, expressing the sensibility of Congress to the tribute paid to the memory of Dr. Franklin - concurrent in -	1883 1889
FIRST SESSION.
Gale, Mr., (Maryland,) on duties on imports on the seat of Government - Georgetown, memorial from the inhabitants, offering to put themselves and fortunes under the jurisdiction of Congress - Gerry, Mr., (Massachusetts,) on duties on imports - 211, 229, 314, 332, 341, 350, 355, 586 application of Virginia - manner of taking oaths - Executive Departments - Treasury Department, 383, 384, 391, 393, 395, 396, 601, 603 disposing of Western lands - amendments to the Constitution 444, 661, 664, 705, 711, 716, 717, 722, 727, 731, 732, 736, 739, 742, 747, 749, 750, 751, 769, 776 Department of Foreign Affairs 472, 501, 534, 573, 577, 583	144 895, 897 887 208 350, 355, 586 251 266 380 396, 601, 603 415 664, 705, 711, 716, 717, 722, 727, 731, 732, 736, 739, 742, 747, 749, 750, 751, 769, 776 577, 583
SECOND SESSION.
Home Department - on appointing a Committee of Ways and Means - compensation to members - Indian treaties - adjournment - manner of reporting the debates - seat of Government - Glaubeck, Baron de, his petition committed; reported and laid on the table - a bill for his relief passed - Goodhue, Mr., (Massachusetts,) on duties on imports 116, 131, 136, 137, 145, 152, 156, 169, 176, 178, 209, 317, 324, 330, 339, 340, 357, 261, 280, 283, 610 tonnage - Executive Departments - Treasury Department - amendments to the Constitution - Department of Foreign Affairs - adjournment - seat of Government - the Judiciary -	670 680, 682 694 781 782, 827, 900 918, 919 922 673 904 928 169, 176, 178, 209, 317, 324, 330, 339, 340, 357, 261, 280, 283, 610 378 384, 594 426 533 780 845, 878 899
THIRD SESSION.
Gerry, Mr., (Massachusetts,) on filling a vacancy in the Presidency - on the new revenue bill, 1873, 1875, 1877, 1878, 1880 Bank of the United States - Giles, Mr., (Virginia,) on the militia, 1807, 1810, 1814, 1815, 1821, 1825 duties on spirits - filling a vacancy in the Presidency - Electors - new revenue bill - Bank of the United States - Gilman, Mr., (Massachusetts,) on the Militia, 1805, 1815 Goodhue, Mr., (Massachusetts,) on duties on spirits 1845 on Electors -	1864 1873, 1875, 1877, 1878, 1880 1893, 1945 1810, 1814, 1815, 1821, 1825 1851 1865 1868, 1869 1875, 1880 1937 1815 1845 1867
FIRST SESSION.
Harbaugh, Leonard, his petition praying an exclusive privilege to use and vend certain machines invented by him, laid on the table - Hartley, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on duties on imports, 109, 138, 151, 153, 170, 175 Department of Foreign Affairs - Treasury Department - Indian treaties - amendments to the Constitution, 713, 732, 733 adjournment - seat of Government, 786, 837, 842, 843, 876, 895, 898 manner of reporting the debates - Heister, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on duties on imports - seat of Government -	658 170, 175 479, 585 600 702, 763 705 713, 732, 733 779 843, 876, 895, 898 919 141, 152 849
SECOND SESSION.
Georgia, a bill making further provision for the debts of the United States, so far as the same respects the debt of Georgia, reported 1718 rejected - Gerry, Mr., (Massachusetts,) on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit 1044, 1098, 1102, 1175, 1279, 1299, 1300, 1301, 1302, 1304, 1306, 1324, 1348, 1360, 1376, 1387, 1402, 1405, 1408, 1410, 1412, 1442, 1526, 1532 on the slave trade - accounts of Robert Morris - on the remission of fines -	1719 1044, 1098, 1102, 1175, 1279, 1299, 1300, 1301, 1302, 1304, 1306, 1324, 1348, 1360, 1376, 1387, 1402, 1405, 1408, 1410, 1412, 1442, 1526, 1532 1189, 1204, 1416 1464, 1465 1475

House Proceedings and Debates.

	Page.
Home Department, resolution for establishing a department so called - negated - Hospitals, committee appointed to bring in a bill for establishing hospitals for sick and disabled seamen - reported - committed - Huntington, Mr., (Connecticut,) on duties on imports - ports - magnetic variations - application of Virginia - collection of duties - Department of Foreign Affairs - amendments to the Constitution - Hartley, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on unfinished business - report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit, 1097, 1167, 1233, 1413, 1422, 1505 naturalization - slave trade - tonnage on foreign shipping - officers of the Navy - seat of Government - Heister, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit - 1298, 1307, 1374, 1410 on the public debt - Hemp and cordage, petition from the manufacturers of hemp and cordage in New York, praying for a duty on the importation of these articles - Huntington, Mr., (Connecticut,) on foreign interest - course - naturalization - slave trade - report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit - remission of fines - next meeting of Congress - officers of the Navy - seat of Government - Hartley, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on the Militia, 1810, 1811 Post Office bill - Health offices, a committee appointed to report a bill for the establishment of health offices in the principal cities of the Union - Huntington, Mr., (Conn.) on the Militia, 1807, 1815 I. Imports, duties on. (See Duties.) Importation, a committee appointed to bring in a bill concerning the importation of certain persons into the United States prior to the year 1808 - bill reported, and the further consideration thereof postponed to the next session - Indians, committee to bring in a bill to provide for the expense attending the negotiations with certain Indians - bill reported - considered - passed - Invalid pensioners. (See Pensioners.)	666 669 659 786 795 164, 350 172 251 367 459 730 1056, 1057, 1078, 1079 1413, 1422, 1505 1109, 1112, 1124 1186, 1198, 1451 1573 1649 1668 1298, 1307, 1374, 1410 1587 1450 1082 1120 1190 1342 1475 1624 1648 1660 1810, 1811 1890 1817 1815 366 903 688 689 690, 698 703 658 659 659 894
SECOND SESSION.
Indians, message in relation to Indian hostilities, laid on the table - a bill to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indians, presented - committed - considered - recommitted - an amendatory bill reported - considered - passed - Inland navigation, committee appointed to report a bill to authorize the States of Virginia and North Carolina to open an inland navigation - Inspection laws, resolution from the Senate for obliging vessels to comply with the inspection laws of the States - a bill reported to regulate the exportation of certain articles subject to the inspection laws of the States - committed - considered - passed - Invalid officers, committee appointed to bring in a bill to authorize the issuing of certificates to a certain description of - reported - passed - disagreed to by the Senate - Invalid pensioners. (See Pensioners.)	1450 1480 1496 1523 1548 1572 1646 1647 1718 1414 1414 1417 1476 1477 1549 1550 1551 1673
THIRD SESSION.
India trade, memorial from certain merchants engaged in this trade, referred to the Secretary of the Treasury - Indian affairs, a report on this subject considered with the gallery closed - J. Jackson, Mr., (Georgia,) on duties on imports 194, 210, 230, 313, 336, 338, 357 on tonnage, 243, 251, 256, 275, 284, 288, 609, 617 on the manner of taking oaths - on titles - on the collection bill - on the Executive Departments - contested election - amendments to the Constitution, 425, 442, 714, 724, 736, 750, 774 Department of Foreign Affairs 486, 529, 534, 552 New Jersey election - compensation to the President - Indian Treaties - adjournment - the Judiciary - seat of Government, 789, 844, 877, 878, 897, 910, 922 Journals of the late Congress, a resolution for furnishing them to the members of the present Congress - Judiciary, a bill to establish the Judicial Courts, received - considered - passed -	1873 1894 194, 210, 230, 313, 336, 338, 357 243, 251, 256, 275, 284, 288, 609, 617 - - - 374, 376 407 425, 442, 714, 724, 736, 750, 774 - 652, 657 694, 698, 699, 700 780 782, 801, 813, 829, 901 789, 844, 877, 878, 897, 910, 922 - 410 659 782, 796, 820 894
FIRST SESSION.

House Proceedings and Debates.

Page.	Page.
Judiciary— a bill for allowing a certain compensation to the Judges of the Supreme and other Courts, presented - - - - - 894 considered - - - - - 899 passed - - - - - 903 a bill to regulate processes in the courts of the United States, received - - - - - 903 passed - - - - - 914 the amendment respecting the style of the writ, disagreed to by the Senate - - - - - 916 conference appointed - - - - - 917 amendments of the Senate agreed to - - - - - 926 resolution requesting the Legislatures of the several States to pass laws to provide for the safe-keeping of prisoners under the laws of the United States - - - - - 903	Judiciary, report from the Attorney General respecting amendments to the Judiciary system - - - - - 1838 a bill reported to continue the act regulating processes, &c. - - - - - 1960 passed - - - - - 1961 (See Clerks .) K. THIRD SESSION. Kentucky, a bill for the admission of this State into the Union, received - - - - - 1862 passed - - - - - 1885 a bill for regulating the number of her representatives received - - - - - 1962 passed - - - - - 1966 L. FIRST SESSION. Lands, Western, debate on certain resolutions respecting the disposal of - - - - - 1411 to 1416 a report on the subject committed - - - - - 453 considered - - - - - 632 report of the committee - - - - - 665 Lawrence, Mr., (New York,) on duties on imports 105, 125, 127, 129, 137, 139, 140, 144, 147, 152, 156, 161, 176, 177, 183, 197, 200, 202, 317, 348 on tonnage - - - - - 234, 244, 287, 609, 618 manner of taking oaths - - - - - 368 bill for collection of duties - - - - - 367 Executive Departments - - - - - 377 Department of Foreign Affairs - - - - - 482, 578, 583 Treasury Department - - - - - 602 compensation to the President - - - - - 640 New Jersey election - - - - - 669 Home Department - - - - - 706, 712, 726, 746, 753 amendments to the Constitution - - - - - 832, 899 Judiciary - - - - - 845, 856, 877, 907 seat of Government - - - - - 116, 147, 156, 290, 345, 586 Lee, Mr., (Virginia,) on duties on imports - - - - - 318 on titles - - - - - 372 Executive Departments - - - - - 402 contested election - - - - - 523 Department of Foreign Affairs - - - - - 630 on disposing of Western lands - - - - - 641 New Jersey election - - - - - 652 compensation to the President - - - - - 703 amendments to the Constitution - - - - - 836, 839, 842, 843, 855, 895, seat of Government - - - - - 910, 921 manner of reporting the debates - - - - - 919 Library of Congress, motion for a committee to report a catalogue of books, &c., laid on the table - - - - - 679 Light-houses, a bill for establishment of, reported - - - - - 619 committee on the bill - - - - - 642 ordered to be engrossed - - - - - 659 Livermore, Mr., (New Hampshire,) on duties on tonnage - - - - - 271, 610 on duties on imports - - - - - 338, 345 Executive Departments - - - - - 371, 381 amendments to the Constitution - - - - - 447, 709, 711, 713, 718, 723, 726, 728, 731, 742, 743, 753, 754, 774

House Proceedings and Debates.

Page.	Page.
Livermore, Mr.— Department of Foreign Affairs 477, 543, 544, 577 Treasury Department - - - - - 597, 605 compensation to the President - - - - - 636 New Jersey election - - - - - 641 compensation to members - - - - - 686 Judiciary, - - - - - 782, 783, 796, 820, 831, 900 Lothbiniere, Marquis de Chabrier, his memorial claiming two manors at the head of Lake Champlain - - - - - 875 rejected - - - - - 887 Lynn, Rev. Dr., elected Chaplain - - - - - 233 SECOND SESSION. Lands, public, debate on the sale of - - - - - 1067 report of the Secretary of the Treasury on a uniform system for the disposal of, committed - - - - - 1713 a resolution respecting the survey of public lands - - - - - 1723 Lawrence, Mr., (New York,) on the mode of keeping the Journal - - - - - 1043 on the order of business - - - - - 1051 on the Answer to the President's Speech - - - - - 1053 foreign intercourse - - - - - 1083, 1084, 1091 Waite's petition - - - - - 1093 naturalization - - - - - 1110, 1115, 1119 census - - - - - 1126 remission of fines - - - - - 1128, 1475 report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit - 1151, 1208, 1287, 1301, 1303, 1307, 1308, 1326, 1340, 1345, 1391, 1392, 1396, 1401, 1409, 1433, 1494, 1590 on the slave trade - - - - - 1186, 1201 tonnage on foreign shipping - - - - - 1573, 1578 next meeting of Congress - - - - - 1623 accounts between the United States and the individual States - - - - - 1627, 1644 seat of Government - - - - - 1663, 1669, 1673, 1676 Laws of the United States, committee appointed to bring in a bill to make certain alterations in them, so as to conform the same to the present circumstances of the State of North Carolina - - - - - 1058 Learning, bill for the encouragement of, presented - - - - - 1342 committed - - - - - 1364 passed - - - - - 1549 Lee, Mr., (Va.,) on the order of business - 1047, 1050 on foreign intercourse - - - - - 1063, 1065, 1081, 1087 sale of public lands - - - - - 1070, 1072 unfinished business - - - - - 1073, 1074, 1075 naturalization - - - - - 1121 report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit - 1271, 1299, 1307, 1394, 1397, 1419, 1438 seat of Government - - - - - 1661 Library of Congress, committee appointed to report a catalogue of books for it - - - - - 1550 report of the committee laid on the table - - - - - 1647 Light-houses, bill passed, making further provision for the support of, &c. - - - - - 1682 Literature, debate on the motion to refer to a select committee so much of the President's Speech as relates to the encouragement of science and literature - - - - - 1550 Livermore, Mr., (New Hampshire,) on the order of business - - - - - 1049, 1051 on unfinished business - - - - - 1075	Livermore, Mr., (New Hampshire,)— on census bill - - - - - 1078, 1107 Waite's petition - - - - - 1092, 1093 naturalization - - - - - 1125 report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit 1131, 1145, 1155, 1160, 1291, 1303, 1308, 1310, 1352, 1362, 1396 on the appropriation bill - - - - - 1449 remission of fines - - - - - 1474 tonnage on foreign shipping - - - - - 1567 General Post Office - - - - - 1640 accounts between the United States and the individual States - - - - - 1644 seat of Government - - - - - 1670 Lynn, Rev. Dr., elected Chaplain - - - - - 1043 THIRD SESSION. Lands, report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the establishment of offices for the sale of, considered - - - - - 1829 consideration resumed - - - - - 1833, 1839, 1840 committee appointed to bring in a bill - - - - - 1842 a bill for granting lands to the inhabitants of Vincennes committed - - - - - 1861 a bill to establish offices for the sale of unappropriated lands in the Western territory, taken up - - - - - 1866 passed - - - - - 1864 postponed by the Senate - - - - - 1973 a resolution requesting the President to lay before Congress at its next session, the quantity of land not claimed by Indians, nor occupied by citizens of the United States, in the territory ceded by North Carolina - - - - - 1974 Laurens, Henry, his petition, as guardian of his granddaughter, praying interest on her father's claim, presented - - - - - 1838 adverse report laid on the table - - - - - 1895 Lawrence, Mr., of New York, on the militia 1805, 1814, 1818, 1833 on the public lands - - - - - 1834, 1835, 1836, 1837 on duties on spirits 1847, 1859, 1877, 1880, 1881 on filling a vacancy in the Presidency - - - - - 1856 Eletors - - - - - 1868, 1869 Bank of the United States - - - - - 1892, 1914 Learning, a bill to increase the penalties of the act for the encouragement of learning, presented - - - - - 1960 committed - - - - - 1961 Lee, Mr., of Virginia, on the Bank of the United States - - - - - 1892 Library Company of Philadelphia, offer the use of their books to the members of both Houses 1873 Livermore, Mr., of New Hampshire, on the militia 1820 on duties on spirits - - - - - 1848, 1860 on filling a vacancy in the Presidency 1854, 1863 on the new revenue bill - - - - - 1875, 1876 Loan, report of the Secretary of the Treasury, explaining the terms of the loan negotiated in Holland - - - - - 1971 Loans, commissioners of, a bill granting them an additional compensation for extra services, presented - - - - - 1970 ordered to be engrossed - - - - - 1972 passed - - - - - 1978

House Proceedings and Debates.

M.	Page.	Madison, Mr., on the—	Page.
FIRST SESSION.		report of the Secretary of the Treasury on
Madison, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports	102, 104, 110, 115, 120, 125, 126, 128, 129, 131, 137, 141, 145, 148, 149, 155, 156, 163, 169, 174, 181, 185, 188, 189, 193, 198, 201, 204, 208, 218, 226, 300, 311, 315, 317, 328, 330, 339, 341, 342, 344, 346, 355, 364, 588, 589	public credit 1191, 1262, 1270, 1291, 1295, 1296, 1302, 1338, 1340, 1341, 1377, 1384, 1386, 1389, 1392, 1393, 1403, 1405, 1407, 1409, 1411, 1424, 1437, 1439, 1534, accounts of Robert Morris - - - 1465 on the death of Dr. Franklin - - - 1534 tonnage on foreign shipping 1570, 1573, 1575 trade and navigation - - - 1656 seat of Government - - - 1665, 1672 Maryland, amendments to the Constitution ratified by - - - 1077 Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island, a bill declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of these States, passed - - - 1718 Massachusetts, petition from sundry officers of the State, laid on the table - - - 1718 Members, list of - - - 1039 a quorum formed - - - 1040 Message, President's annual, delivered - - - 1041 message announcing that North Carolina has ratified the Constitution - - - 1051 communicating a plan for arranging the militia - - - 1076 Militia, plan of the Secretary of War for the arrangement of the militia - - - 1076 referred to committee on national defence - - - 1544 a bill to establish the militia system, reported - - - 1658 Mint, Secretary of the Treasury, directed to report a plan for a mint - - - 1530 Moore, Mr., of Virginia, on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit 1236, 1347, 1510 Morris, Robert, his memorial as Superintendent of Finance, (see Appendix .) - - - 1129 ordered to be entered on the Journal, and the subject-matter referred to a select committee - - - 1164 report laid on the table - - - 1417 a committee appointed to inquire into his receipts and expenditures of public money - - - 1464 Mustard, petition from certain manufacturers, praying for an additional duty on that article, presented and referred - - - 1531
THIRD SESSION.		Madison, Mr., of Virginia, on supplying newspapers - - - 1789 answer to the President's address - - - 1796 on the militia 1809, 1810, 1811, 1813, 1824, 1826 on duties on spirits - - - 1846, 1861 on filling a vacancy in the Presidency - - - 1855 Electors - - - 1868 Bank of the United States - - - 1893, 1894, 1956 Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island, a bill to continue the act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of these States, presented - - - 1804 passed - - - 1813 committee appointed to report a bill for declaring the assent of Congress to a certain act of Maryland - - - 1870 reported - - - 1872 passed - - - 1886 Massachusetts, petition from the officers, &c., of the Massachusetts line of the late army, referred to the Secretary of War - - - 1861
SECOND SESSION.		Madison, Mr., of Virginia, on the census bill 1077, 1107, 1108, 1130 on foreign intercourse - - - 1087 naturalization - - - 1111, 1116 slave trade - - - 1185, 1189, 1203

House Proceedings and Debates.

M.	Page.	Madison, Mr., on the—	Page.
FIRST SESSION.		report of the Secretary of the Treasury on
Madison, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports	102, 104, 110, 115, 120, 125, 126, 128, 129, 131, 137, 141, 145, 148, 149, 155, 156, 163, 169, 174, 181, 185, 188, 189, 193, 198, 201, 204, 208, 218, 226, 300, 311, 315, 317, 328, 330, 339, 341, 342, 344, 346, 355, 364, 588, 589	public credit 1191, 1262, 1270, 1291, 1295, 1296, 1302, 1338, 1340, 1341, 1377, 1384, 1386, 1389, 1392, 1393, 1403, 1405, 1407, 1409, 1411, 1424, 1437, 1439, 1534, accounts of Robert Morris - - - 1465 on the death of Dr. Franklin - - - 1534 tonnage on foreign shipping 1570, 1573, 1575 trade and navigation - - - 1656 seat of Government - - - 1665, 1672 Maryland, amendments to the Constitution ratified by - - - 1077 Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island, a bill declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of these States, passed - - - 1718 Massachusetts, petition from sundry officers of the State, laid on the table - - - 1718 Members, list of - - - 1039 a quorum formed - - - 1040 Message, President's annual, delivered - - - 1041 message announcing that North Carolina has ratified the Constitution - - - 1051 communicating a plan for arranging the militia - - - 1076 Militia, plan of the Secretary of War for the arrangement of the militia - - - 1076 referred to committee on national defence - - - 1544 a bill to establish the militia system, reported - - - 1658 Mint, Secretary of the Treasury, directed to report a plan for a mint - - - 1530 Moore, Mr., of Virginia, on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit 1236, 1347, 1510 Morris, Robert, his memorial as Superintendent of Finance, (see Appendix .) - - - 1129 ordered to be entered on the Journal, and the subject-matter referred to a select committee - - - 1164 report laid on the table - - - 1417 a committee appointed to inquire into his receipts and expenditures of public money - - - 1464 Mustard, petition from certain manufacturers, praying for an additional duty on that article, presented and referred - - - 1531
THIRD SESSION.		Madison, Mr., of Virginia, on supplying newspapers - - - 1789 answer to the President's address - - - 1796 on the militia 1809, 1810, 1811, 1813, 1824, 1826 on duties on spirits - - - 1846, 1861 on filling a vacancy in the Presidency - - - 1855 Electors - - - 1868 Bank of the United States - - - 1893, 1894, 1956 Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island, a bill to continue the act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of these States, presented - - - 1804 passed - - - 1813 committee appointed to report a bill for declaring the assent of Congress to a certain act of Maryland - - - 1870 reported - - - 1872 passed - - - 1886 Massachusetts, petition from the officers, &c., of the Massachusetts line of the late army, referred to the Secretary of War - - - 1861
SECOND SESSION.		Madison, Mr., of Virginia, on the census bill 1077, 1107, 1108, 1130 on foreign intercourse - - - 1087 naturalization - - - 1111, 1116 slave trade - - - 1185, 1189, 1203

House Proceedings and Debates.

	Page.	Page.
Order of business, discussion as to whether the unfinished business of the last session should proceed from the stage in which it was left, or be taken up de novo -	1047
P.
Pages, Mr., of Virginia, on magnetic variations -	172
on duties on imports -	204, 354, 365, 586
on tonnage -	242, 281, 285, 288, 618
application of Virginia -	318, 323
on titles -	371, 383
Executive Departments -	421, 422
on a resolution respecting Rhode Island -	429, 450, 661,
on amendments to the Constitution -	703, 713, 718, 732, 743, 744, 748, 775,
Department of Foreign Affairs -	490, 519, 548,
War Department -	578, 580, 591
Treasury Department -	592, 594, 605
compensation of the President -	634, 636, 645, 646,
New Jersey election -	650, 657
compensation of members -	676, 682, 686
Indian treaties -	691, 697
seat of Government -	849
Judiciary -	901
manner of reporting the debates -	918
Parker, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports -	129,
142, 176, 336, 337, 343
on titles -	322
Partridge, Mr., of Massachusetts, on duties on imports -	138, 156, 152, 153,
Executive Departments -	370
compensation of members -	679
seat of Government -	921
Pensioners, invalid, a bill making provision for them, presented -	898
passed -	915
Petitions, sundry, referred to heads of departments to be reported on at the next session -	915,
Post Office, a bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, received -	892
passed -	894
Postmaster General, a letter from him received and committed -	658
report on it -	786
President of the United States, report on the ceremonies to be observed on his arrival -	889
a committee appointed to wait upon him on his arrival -	143
report of the committee -	151
his speech laid before the House -	191
a resolution proposing to fix his salary -	233
his reply to the address of the House -	233
committee discharged from further consideration of the resolution for fixing his salary -	290
report respecting the mode of receiving communications from him -	409
President and Vice President, committee appointed to consider and report on the compensation to be allowed these officers -	416
report laid on the table -	409
taken up and considered -	416
bill for their compensation reported -	632 to 637, 643 to 658
amended -	665
passed -	669
passed -	675
FIRST SESSION.
Pages, Mr., of Virginia, on magnetic variations -	172
on duties on imports -	204, 354, 365, 586
on tonnage -	242, 281, 285, 288, 618
application of Virginia -	318, 323
on titles -	371, 383
Executive Departments -	421, 422
on a resolution respecting Rhode Island -	429, 450, 661,
on amendments to the Constitution -	703, 713, 718, 732, 743, 744, 748, 775,
Department of Foreign Affairs -	490, 519, 548,
War Department -	578, 580, 591
Treasury Department -	592, 594, 605
compensation of the President -	634, 636, 645, 646,
New Jersey election -	650, 657
compensation of members -	676, 682, 686
Indian treaties -	691, 697
seat of Government -	849
Judiciary -	901
manner of reporting the debates -	918
Parker, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports -	129,
142, 176, 336, 337, 343
on titles -	322
Partridge, Mr., of Massachusetts, on duties on imports -	138, 156, 152, 153,
Executive Departments -	370
compensation of members -	679
seat of Government -	921
Pensioners, invalid, a bill making provision for them, presented -	898
passed -	915
Petitions, sundry, referred to heads of departments to be reported on at the next session -	915,
Post Office, a bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, received -	892
passed -	894
Postmaster General, a letter from him received and committed -	658
report on it -	786
President of the United States, report on the ceremonies to be observed on his arrival -	889
a committee appointed to wait upon him on his arrival -	143
report of the committee -	151
his speech laid before the House -	191
a resolution proposing to fix his salary -	233
his reply to the address of the House -	233
committee discharged from further consideration of the resolution for fixing his salary -	290
report respecting the mode of receiving communications from him -	409
President and Vice President, committee appointed to consider and report on the compensation to be allowed these officers -	416
report laid on the table -	409
taken up and considered -	416
bill for their compensation reported -	632 to 637, 643 to 658
amended -	665
passed -	669
passed -	675
SECOND SESSION.
Pages, Mr., of Virginia, on the mode of keeping the Journal -	1041, 1042, 1043
on the order of business -	1048, 1050
on the answer to the President's speech -	1053, 1054
on the unfinished business -	1057, 1073
on reporting the debates -	1059, 1060
on foreign intercourse -	1063, 1064, 1066
on the sale of public lands -	1063, 1070, 1071
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury -	1298,
on public credit -	1101, 1102, 1147, 1240, 1298,
1354, 1396, 1403, 1418, 1421, 1425, 1433, 1497, 1526
on the census -	1110, 1114, 1121, 1203
on naturalization -	1190, 1203
on the slave trade -	1477
on the North Carolina cession bill -	1551
on science and literature -	1553
on the claim of Baron Steuben -	1567, 1579
on tonnage on foreign shipping -	1591
on the public debt -	1616
on the bill respecting Rhode Island -	1669, 1674
on the seat of Government -	1684
Parker, Mr., of Virginia, on the slave trade -	1591
on the public debt -	1591
Partridge, Mr., of Massachusetts, on the mode of keeping the Journal -	1043
on the order of business -	1050
on foreign intercourse -	1066
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury -	1375
on the public credit -	1450
Pennsylvania, all the amendments to the Constitution except the first and second ratified by -	1450
Pensioners, invalid, a committee appointed to report a bill making provision for -	1106
bill reported -	1655
passed -	1658
Secretary of the Treasury directed to report at the next session proper means for discharging the debt due invalid pensioners, &c. -	1720
Petitions, report from the Secretary of War on sundry petitions -	1656
Post Office, a bill for the regulation of the Post Office, presented -	1308
committed -	1327
considered -	1527
recommitted -	1546
an amendatory bill presented -	1633
considered -	1640
ordered to be engrossed -	1642
passed -	1643
amended by the Senate -	1668
consideration of the amendments -	1676, 1680
Senate insist on the amendments -	1681 report of a conference -	1686
the bill lost -	1712
a bill to continue in force, for a limited time, the bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, passed -	1713
P.
Order of business, discussion as to whether the unfinished business of the last session should proceed from the stage in which it was left, or be taken up de novo -	1047
P.
Pages, Mr., of Virginia, on magnetic variations -	172
on duties on imports -	204, 354, 365, 586
on tonnage -	242, 281, 285, 288, 618
application of Virginia -	318, 323
on titles -	371, 383
Executive Departments -	421, 422
on a resolution respecting Rhode Island -	429, 450, 661,
on amendments to the Constitution -	703, 713, 718, 732, 743, 744, 748, 775,
Department of Foreign Affairs -	490, 519, 548,
War Department -	578, 580, 591
Treasury Department -	592, 594, 605
compensation of the President -	634, 636, 645, 646,
New Jersey election -	650, 657
compensation of members -	676, 682, 686
Indian treaties -	691, 697
seat of Government -	849
Judiciary -	901
manner of reporting the debates -	918
Parker, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports -	129,
142, 176, 336, 337, 343
on titles -	322
Partridge, Mr., of Massachusetts, on duties on imports -	138, 156, 152, 153,
Executive Departments -	370
compensation of members -	679
seat of Government -	921
Pensioners, invalid, a bill making provision for them, presented -	898
passed -	915
Petitions, sundry, referred to heads of departments to be reported on at the next session -	915,
Post Office, a bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, received -	892
passed -	894
Postmaster General, a letter from him received and committed -	658
report on it -	786
President of the United States, report on the ceremonies to be observed on his arrival -	889
a committee appointed to wait upon him on his arrival -	143
report of the committee -	151
his speech laid before the House -	191
a resolution proposing to fix his salary -	233
his reply to the address of the House -	233
committee discharged from further consideration of the resolution for fixing his salary -	290
report respecting the mode of receiving communications from him -	409
President and Vice President, committee appointed to consider and report on the compensation to be allowed these officers -	416
report laid on the table -	409
taken up and considered -	416
bill for their compensation reported -	632 to 637, 643 to 658
amended -	665
passed -	669
passed -	675
FIRST SESSION.
Pages, Mr., of Virginia, on magnetic variations -	172
on duties on imports -	204, 354, 365, 586
on tonnage -	242, 281, 285, 288, 618
application of Virginia -	318, 323
on titles -	371, 383
Executive Departments -	421, 422
on a resolution respecting Rhode Island -	429, 450, 661,
on amendments to the Constitution -	703, 713, 718, 732, 743, 744, 748, 775,
Department of Foreign Affairs -	490, 519, 548,
War Department -	578, 580, 591
Treasury Department -	592, 594, 605
compensation of the President -	634, 636, 645, 646,
New Jersey election -	650, 657
compensation of members -	676, 682, 686
Indian treaties -	691, 697
seat of Government -	849
Judiciary -	901
manner of reporting the debates -	918
Parker, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports -	129,
142, 176, 336, 337, 343
on titles -	322
Partridge, Mr., of Massachusetts, on duties on imports -	138, 156, 152, 153,
Executive Departments -	370
compensation of members -	679
seat of Government -	921
Pensioners, invalid, a bill making provision for them, presented -	898
passed -	915
Petitions, sundry, referred to heads of departments to be reported on at the next session -	915,
Post Office, a bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, received -	892
passed -	894
Postmaster General, a letter from him received and committed -	658
report on it -	786
President of the United States, report on the ceremonies to be observed on his arrival -	889
a committee appointed to wait upon him on his arrival -	143
report of the committee -	151
his speech laid before the House -	191
a resolution proposing to fix his salary -	233
his reply to the address of the House -	233
committee discharged from further consideration of the resolution for fixing his salary -	290
report respecting the mode of receiving communications from him -	409
President and Vice President, committee appointed to consider and report on the compensation to be allowed these officers -	416
report laid on the table -	409
taken up and considered -	416
bill for their compensation reported -	632 to 637, 643 to 658
amended -	665
passed -	669
passed -	675
SECOND SESSION.
Pages, Mr., of Virginia, on magnetic variations -	172
on duties on imports -	204, 354, 365, 586
on tonnage -	242, 281, 285, 288, 618
application of Virginia -	318, 323
on titles -	371, 383
Executive Departments -	421, 422
on a resolution respecting Rhode Island -	429, 450, 661,
on amendments to the Constitution -	703, 713, 718, 732, 743, 744, 748, 775,
Department of Foreign Affairs -	490, 519, 548,
War Department -	578, 580, 591
Treasury Department -	592, 594, 605
compensation of the President -	634, 636, 645, 646,
New Jersey election -	650, 657
compensation of members -	676, 682, 686
Indian treaties -	691, 697
seat of Government -	849
Judiciary -	901
manner of reporting the debates -	918
Parker, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports -	129,
142, 176, 336, 337, 343
on titles -	322
Partridge, Mr., of Massachusetts, on duties on imports -	138, 156, 152, 153,
Executive Departments -	370
compensation of members -	679
seat of Government -	921
Pensioners, invalid, a bill making provision for them, presented -	898
passed -	915
Petitions, sundry, referred to heads of departments to be reported on at the next session -	915,
Post Office, a bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, received -	892
passed -	894
Postmaster General, a letter from him received and committed -	658
report on it -	786
President of the United States, report on the ceremonies to be observed on his arrival -	889
a committee appointed to wait upon him on his arrival -	143
report of the committee -	151
his speech laid before the House -	191
a resolution proposing to fix his salary -	233
his reply to the address of the House -	233
committee discharged from further consideration of the resolution for fixing his salary -	290
report respecting the mode of receiving communications from him -	409
President and Vice President, committee appointed to consider and report on the compensation to be allowed these officers -	416
report laid on the table -	409
taken up and considered -	416
bill for their compensation reported -	632 to 637, 643 to 658
amended -	665
passed -	669
passed -	675
THIRD SESSION.
Pages, Mr., of Virginia, on magnetic variations -	172
on duties on imports -	204, 354, 365, 586
on tonnage -	242, 281, 285, 288, 618
application of Virginia -	318, 323
on titles -	371, 383
Executive Departments -	421, 422
on a resolution respecting Rhode Island -	429, 450, 661,
on amendments to the Constitution -	703, 713, 718, 732, 743, 744, 748, 775,
Department of Foreign Affairs -	490, 519, 548,
War Department -	578, 580, 591
Treasury Department -	592, 594, 605
compensation of the President -	634, 636, 645, 646,
New Jersey election -	650, 657
compensation of members -	676, 682, 686
Indian treaties -	691, 697
seat of Government -	849
Judiciary -	901
manner of reporting the debates -	918
Parker, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports -	129,
142, 176, 336, 337, 343
on titles -	322
Partridge, Mr., of Massachusetts, on duties on imports -	138, 156, 152, 153,
Executive Departments -	370
compensation of members -	679
seat of Government -	921
Pensioners, invalid, a bill making provision for them, presented -	898
passed -	915
Petitions, sundry, referred to heads of departments to be reported on at the next session -	915,
Post Office, a bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, received -	892
passed -	894
Postmaster General, a letter from him received and committed -	658
report on it -	786
President of the United States, report on the ceremonies to be observed on his arrival -	889
a committee appointed to wait upon him on his arrival -	143
report of the committee -	151
his speech laid before the House -	191
a resolution proposing to fix his salary -	233
his reply to the address of the House -	233
committee discharged from further consideration of the resolution for fixing his salary -	290
report respecting the mode of receiving communications from him -	409
President and Vice President, committee appointed to consider and report on the compensation to be allowed these officers -	416
report laid on the table -	409
taken up and considered -	416
bill for their compensation reported -	632 to 637, 643 to 658
amended -	665
passed -	669
passed -	675
THIRD SESSION.
Pages, Mr., of Virginia, on magnetic variations -	172
on duties on imports -	204, 354, 365, 586
on tonnage -	242, 281, 285, 288, 618
application of Virginia -	318, 323
on titles -	371, 383
Executive Departments -	421, 422
on a resolution respecting Rhode Island -	429, 450, 661,
on amendments to the Constitution -	703, 713, 718, 732, 743, 744, 748, 775,
Department of Foreign Affairs -	490, 519, 548,
War Department -	578, 580, 591
Treasury Department -	592, 594, 605
compensation of the President -	634, 636, 645, 646,
New Jersey election -	650, 657
compensation of members -	676, 682, 686
Indian treaties -	691, 697
seat of Government -	849
Judiciary -	901
manner of reporting the debates -	918
Parker, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports -	129,
142, 176, 336, 337, 343
on titles -	322
Partridge, Mr., of Massachusetts, on duties on imports -	138, 156, 152, 153,
Executive Departments -	370
compensation of members -	679
seat of Government -	921
Pensioners, invalid, a bill making provision for them, presented -	898
passed -	915
Petitions, sundry, referred to heads of departments to be reported on at the next session -	915,
Post Office, a bill for the temporary establishment of the Post Office, received -	892
passed -	894
Postmaster General, a letter from him received and committed -	658
report on it -	786
President of the United States, report on the ceremonies to be observed on his arrival -	889
a committee appointed to wait upon him on his arrival -	143
report of the committee -	151
his speech laid before the House -	191
a resolution proposing to fix his salary -	233
his reply to the address of the House -	233
committee discharged from further consideration of the resolution for fixing his salary -	290
report respecting the mode of receiving communications from him -	409
President and Vice President, committee appointed

House Proceedings and Debates.

Page.	Sherman, Mr.—	Page.
THIRD SESSION.	on amendments to the Constitution - 447, 661,
Rix dollar, a committee appointed to report what	707, 715, 719, 725, 726, 735, 750, 752, 753
alteration ought to be made in the act im-	on the Department of Foreign Affairs - 491, posing duties on imports, &c., in respect	537, 576
to the six dollar - 1961	on the War Department - 591
bill reported - 1969	on the Treasury Department - 606
Rules—the rule “that no bill amended by the	on disposing of western lands - 630
Senate shall be committed,” expunged - 1861	on the compensation of the President, 637, 647
	on Indian treaties - 637, 647
	on the seat of Government, 786, 787, 921, 924, 925
	on a day of thanksgiving - 915
FIRST SESSION.	Sinnickson, Mr., (New Jersey,) on duties on im-
Salaries. (See Executive Officers.)	ports - 145, 346, 362
Schureman, Mr., (New Jersey,) on duties on im-	Slaves. (See Importation.)
ports - 338	Smith, Mr., (South Carolina,) his election contest-
Scott, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on duties on im-	ed; Ramsay's petition - 143
ports, 121, 150, 153, 159, 160, 165	report on the petition - 168
on disposing of western lands, 411, 415, 622, 631	considered - 231
on the Department of Foreign Affairs - 532	laid on the table - 329
on Indian treaties - 765	taken up - 397
on amendments to the Constitution - 766	agreed to - 408
on the seat of Government, 786, 788, 859, 897	his speeches on duties on imports, 160, 336, 351
Seal of the United States. (See Acts, Records, &c.)	on duties on tonnage - 259, 286
Seamen, sick and disabled. (See Hospitals.)	on the Executive Department, 371, 372, 376
Seat of Government, a resolution for fixing the	on his contested election - 397 permanent seat of Government introduced	on a resolution respecting Rhode Island - 422 and debated - 786, 835, 859, 875, 881	on amendments to the Constitution, 424, 429, a petition praying that it may be fixed at old	705, 708, 715, 739, 748
Philadelphia - 838	on the Department of Foreign Affairs, 456, 507, a committee appointed to bring in a bill to es-	514, 579
tablish the permanent seat of Government, 886	on the Treasury Department - 613 debated - 895, 905, 910	on the compensation of the President - 637, 650
passed - 911	on Indian treaties - 693
postponed by the Senate to the next session, 927	on the seat of Government, 787, 875, 876, 909,
Sedgwick, Mr., (Massachusetts,) on the Depart-	on the Judiciary - 797, 816, 902
ment of Foreign Affairs, 460, 520, 543, 577,	Smith, Mr., (Maryland,) on duties on imports - 144,
579, 581	166, 200, 206
on duties on imports - 588	on duties on tonnage - 282
on the Treasury Department - 598, 613	Speaker elected - 417 on duties on tonnage - 616	State laws, resolution directing the Secretary of on disposing of western lands - 632	State to procure the laws of the several on the compensation of the President, 634, 646,	States and deposit them in his office - 898
649, 651, 656	Stone, Mr., (Maryland,) on the Department of on amendments to the Constitution, 660, 704,	Foreign Affairs - 492, 563, 576, 577
732, 743, 748	on the Treasury Department - 606, 612
on the Home Department - 668, 669	on the tonnage bill - 616
on compensation of members, 677, 678, 683, 685	compensation of the President, 636, 643, 650, 657
on Indian treaties - 690, 763	New Jersey elections - 642 on the adjournment - 779	compensation of members - 678 on the Judiciary - 782, 805	Indian treaties - 690
on the seat of Government - 837, 846	amendments to the Constitution 710, 712, 725, 739
Senev, Mr., (Maryland,) on titles - 323	seat of Government, 789, 850, 852, 896, 921, 923
on duties on imports - 326	the Judiciary - 822 on the New Jersey election - 640	manner of reporting the debates - 917 on the compensation of the President, 617, 649, 656	Sumner, Mr., (South Carolina,) on amendments on amendments to the Constitution - 725	to the Constitution - 448, 718, 744, 752 on the seat of Government - 831	on the Department of Foreign Affairs - 591
Sergeant-at-Arms appointed - 330	on Indian treaties - 693, 697, 698, 699, 701, 765
Sherman, Mr., (Connecticut,) on the duties on im-	on the adjournment - 780
ports, 121, 138, 156, 157, 181, 202, 210, 213,	on the Judiciary - 832
303, 316, 336, 337, 342, 355, 364	on the seat of Government - 851, 876, 880
on duties on tonnage - 246, 609, 618	on the manner of reporting the debates - 919
on magnetic variations - 173	Supplies, report on the supplies for the present on the manner of taking certain oaths - 270	year, laid on the table - 621
on titles - 322	a further report, laid on the table - 786

House Proceedings and Debates.

Page.	Sedgwick, Mr.—	Page.
Sylvester, Mr., (New York,) on duties on imports, 362,	on tonnage on foreign shipping - 1574
1213, 1226	on the public debt - 1613, 1614, 1715
on the manner of taking certain oaths - 269	on the accounts between the United States on Executive Departments - 378	and the individual States - 1627, 1645 on the Department of Foreign Affairs - 560	on Amelung's glass manufactory - 1631
	on duties on spirits - 1638
SECOND SESSION.	on the Post Office - 1641
Salem, petition of sundry inhabitants of, complain-	officers of the navy - 1650
ing of the construction given to the coast-	Senev, Mr., (Maryland,) on the report of the Se-ing law, laid on the table - 1129	cretary of the Treasury on public credit - 1101,
Science and literature, debate on the motion to re-	1102, 1399, 1401, 1408, 1424
fer to a select committee the portion of the	on the rule of naturalization - 1121, 1123
President's Speech relating to encourage-	on the slave trade - 1199
ment of science and literature - 1550	on Amelung's glass manufactory - 1631
Scott, Mr., (Pennsylvania,) on the sale of public	officers of the navy - 1649 lands - 1068	on the seat of Government - 1664 on foreign intercourse - 1086, 1088, 1091	Sherman, Mr., (Connecticut,) on the mode of on the remission of fines - 1129	keeping the Journal - 1041 on the report of the Secretary on public credit, 1148,	order of business - 1048, 1050
1158, 1164, 1172, 1272, 1419	foreign intercourse - 1064, 1085, 1092
on the slave trade - 1199	sale of public lands - 1070
Indian treaties - 1522	report of the Secretary of the Treasury on pub-seat of Government - 1665	lic credit - 1096, 1143, 1156, 1302, 1307,
Scribe, George, his petition praying to be permit-	1311, 1317, 1341, 1376, 1390, 1397, 1403,
ted to purchase a tract of land in the West-	1407, 1417, 1421, 1423, 1424, 1436, 1523, ern territory, referred to the Secretary of	1533
the Treasury - 1395	on the rule of naturalization - 1110
Seamen in merchant's service, committee appoint-	on the slave trade - 1184, 1189, 1200, 1416
ed to bring in a bill for the government of 1549	on the appropriation bill - 1449
bill reported - 1550	accounts of Robert Morris - 1464, 1465
passed - 1654	on the remission of fines - 1474
Seat of Government, a bill from the Senate to es-	North Carolina cession bill - 1477
tablish the temporary and permanent seat	supplying newspapers - 1529
of Government - 1658	science and literature - 1551 considered - 1660, 1668, 1673, 1678	tonnage on foreign shipping - 1560
passed - 1679	public debt - 1587, 1590
Secretary of the Treasury, debate relative to his	accounts between the United States and the report on a plan for support of public cre-	individual States - 1627
dit - 1043, 1093	officers of the navy - 1648, 1649
his report on the petition of Christopher Sad-	seat of Government - 1660
ler - 1066	Slave trade, petitions from the Society of Friends his estimate of expenses for the service of the	in Philadelphia and New York, on the sub-present year - 1395	ject of the slave trade, presented - 1182 motion calling upon him to ascertain the re-	debate on motion to refer the petitions - 1184
sources that may be applied to the payment	laid on the table - 1191 of the State debts - 1396	petition from Benjamin Franklin, President of agreed to - 1405	the Pennsylvania Abolition Society, on the his report on the subject - 1413	same subject, presented - 1197
(See Appendix.)	debate concerning it - 1198
directed to report at the next session such fur-	referred - 1205
ther provision as may be necessary to es-	report on the petitions - 1413
tablish the public credit - 1723	taken up and discussed - 1414
Sedgwick, Mr., (Massachusetts,) on the unfinish-	discussion resumed - 1472
ed business - 1057, 1073	the reports on this subject ordered to be en-
on foreign intercourse - 1062, 1063, 1082, 1083,	tered on the Journal - 1472, 1473
1087, 1090	Smith, Mr., (South Carolina,) on the answer to sale of public lands - 1069, 1072	the President's Speech - 1045, 1047, 1053 on the report of the Secretary of the Treasu-	on the order of business - 1049, 1050, 1051
ry on public credit - 1097, 1163, 1169, 1172,	on reporting the debates - 1061
1205, 1376, 1307, 1332, 1341, 1364, 1388,	on foreign intercourse - 1062, 1063, 1081, 1085,
1397, 1406, 1410, 1423, 1438, 1490, 1525	1090
on regulating exports - 1103	on the report on the case of Christopher Sadon the census - 1107, 1125, 1126, 1129, 1130	ler - 1067 on the rule of naturalization - 1117, 1125	on the sale of public lands - 1068
on the remission of fines - 1127, 1475	on unfinished business - 1073, 1074 on the slave trade - 1187	on the rule of naturalization - 1112, 1116, 1118,
on the punishment of crimes - 1521	1123, 1125

House Proceedings and Debates.

Smith, Mr.—	Page.	Sturgis, Mr., of Connecticut, on the answer to the	Page.
on the census bill	1126	President's Speech	1054
on the remission of fines	1128	on unfinished business	1073
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury	1131, 1143, 1175, 1211, 1322,	on the remission of fines	1128
on public credit	1356, 1363, 1364, 1367, 1382,	Surveyor General, committee appointed to report a 1356, 1363, 1364, 1367, 1382,	1408, 1500, 1517	bill to provide for the appointment of a Sur-on the slave trade	1184, 1188, 1201, 1204, 1416,	voyor General	1719 on the appropriation bill	1453	bill reported	1720
on supplying newspapers	1448	Sylvester, Mr., of New York, on the rule of natu-
on tonnage on foreign shipping	1557, 1561, 1574	ralization	1125 on the next meeting of Congress	1630, 1632	on the slave trade	1201
on Amelung's glass manufactory	1630, 1632
on the accounts between the United States	1645 and the individual States	1672
on the seat of Government	1695
on the public debt	1625
Smith, Mr., of Maryland, on the next meeting of	1663
Congress	1684
on the seat of Government	1713
Soldiers and seamen, a bill for the relief of dis-	1413
abled, presented	1464
passed	1722
South Carolina, a memorial of the officers of the	1723
South Carolina line of the late army, referred to the Secretary of the Treasury
report laid on the table
a bill to alter the time for holding the Circuit Court in South Carolina and Georgia
passed
Standing rules. (See Rules.)
State Department, resolution directing the Secretary to report whether it be expedient that the foreign and domestic branches of this Department should be kept separate negated
Steuben, Baron, report on his claim, committed agreed to, and a bill ordered to be brought in bill presented amendments proposed and rejected bill laid on the table
taken up and considered
passed Stirling, General, report on his claim agreed to,
and a bill ordered for the relief of his widow bill reported
passed
Stone, Mr., of Maryland, on the report on the case of Christopher Sadtler on the sale of public lands
on unfinished business
on foreign intercourse
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit 1174, 1258, 1307, 1312, 1327, 1363, 1365, 1373, 1400, 1438, 1494
on the rule of naturalization on remission of fines
on the slave trade
on the accounts of Robert Morris on the punishment of crimes
on science and literature on duties on distilled spirits on officers of the navy
on the seat of Government

House Proceedings and Debates.

T.	Page.	Treaties, a resolution directing all the treaties en-	Page.
FIRST SESSION.		tered into to be published with the laws of
Territory northwest of the Ohio, a bill for the gov-	642	the United States	1621
ernment of, presented	660	resolution agreed to	1639
passed		Tucker, Mr., of South Carolina, on the mode of Thatcher, Mr., of Massachusetts, on duties on im-	132, 145, 214, 585	keeping the Journal	1041
ports	376	on the order of business	1048
on the Executive departments	403	on the rule of naturalization	1109, 1115, 1124 on the contested election	247	on the report of the Secretary of the Treasu-on the seat of Government	318	ry on public credit	1179, 1438
debate on a resolution on this subject	324	on the slave trade	1190, 1449
committee of conference appointed on the dis-		on the appropriation bill	1449
agreeing votes of the two Houses		on the seat of Government	1674
Tonnage. (See Duties.)
Treasury Department, debate on a resolution for	383, 384
the establishment of this Department	396
a bill for its establishment presented and committed	420
debated	592 to 607, 611 to 614
ordered to be engrossed	615
passed	619
Treaties. (See Duties.)
Troops of the United States, a bill to recognize	894 and adapt them to the Constitution, presented	912
passed
Tucker, Mr., of South Carolina, on duties on im-	107, 147, 148, 157, 179, 187, 190, ports	198, 291, 295, 324, 325, 337, 361
on magnetic variations	173
on the application of Virginia	251
on duties on tonnage	263, 289
on titles	318
on the Department of Foreign Affairs	584
on the Treasury Department	593, 606
on the compensation of the President	635, 643
on amendments to the Constitution	663, 718, 726, 732, 749, 755, 757, 771, 776
on Indian treaties	691
on the Judiciary	783
on the seat of Government	838, 841, 879
on a day of Thanksgiving	915
on the manner of reporting the debates	919, 920
SECOND SESSION.
Tariff. (See Duties.)
Thanks of Congress voted to the Corporation of the City of New York, for the elegant accommodations furnished for the use of
Congress	1724
Thatcher, Mr., of Massachusetts, on the answer	1054
to the President's Speech	1060
on the manner of reporting the debates	1622
on the next meeting of Congress	1831
Tobacco, a petition from manufacturers of this article, praying for an additional duty thereon
Tonnage on foreign shipping, report of a committee on the petition of merchants at Portsmouth,
(N. H.,) discussed	1567, 1569, 1570,
1572
the report agreed to and a bill presented	1581
debated	1653, 1655, 1656
Treasurer, report of the committee appointed to examine his accounts	1722
Treasury, report from the Secretary of the Treasury on tonnage duties, &c.	1566

House Proceedings and Debates.

T.	Page.	Treaties, a resolution directing all the treaties en-	Page.
FIRST SESSION.		tered into to be published with the laws of
Territory northwest of the Ohio, a bill for the gov-	642	the United States	1621
ernment of, presented	660	resolution agreed to	1639
Thatcher, Mr., of Massachusetts, on the mode of	132, 145, 214, 585	Tucker, Mr., of South Carolina, on the mode of ports	376	keeping the Journal	1041
on the Executive departments	403	on the order of business	1048
on the contested election	247	on the rule of naturalization	1109, 1115, 1124
on the seat of Government	318	on the report of the Secretary of the Treasu-
debate on a resolution on this subject	324	ry on public credit	1179, 1438
committee of conference appointed on the dis-		on the slave trade	1190, 1449
agreeing votes of the two Houses		on the appropriation bill	1449
Tonnage. (See Duties.)		on the seat of Government	1674
Treasury Department, debate on a resolution for	383, 384
the establishment of this Department	396
a bill for its establishment presented and committed	420
debated	592 to 607, 611 to 614
ordered to be engrossed	615
passed	619
Treaties. (See Duties.)
Troops of the United States, a bill to recognize	894
and adapt them to the Constitution, presented	912
passed
Tucker, Mr., of South Carolina, on duties on im-	107, 147, 148, 157, 179, 187, 190, ports	198, 291, 295, 324, 325, 337, 361
on magnetic variations	173
on the application of Virginia	251
on duties on tonnage	263, 289
on titles	318
on the Department of Foreign Affairs	584
on the Treasury Department	593, 606
on the compensation of the President	635, 643
on amendments to the Constitution	663, 718, 726, 732, 749, 755, 757, 771, 776
on Indian treaties	691
on the Judiciary	783
on the seat of Government	838, 841, 879
on a day of Thanksgiving	915
on the manner of reporting the debates	919, 920
SECOND SESSION.
Tariff. (See Duties.)
Thanks of Congress voted to the Corporation of the City of New York, for the elegant accommodations furnished for the use of
Congress	1724
Thatcher, Mr., of Massachusetts, on the answer	1054
to the President's Speech	1060
on the manner of reporting the debates	1622
on the next meeting of Congress	1831
Tobacco, a petition from manufacturers of this article, praying for an additional duty thereon
Tonnage on foreign shipping, report of a committee on the petition of merchants at Portsmouth,
(N. H.,) discussed	1567, 1569, 1570,
1572
the report agreed to and a bill presented	1581
debated	1653, 1655, 1656
Treasurer, report of the committee appointed to examine his accounts	1722
Treasury, report from the Secretary of the Treasury on tonnage duties, &c.	1566

House Proceedings and Debates.

T.	Page.	Treaties, a resolution directing all the treaties en-	Page.
FIRST SESSION.		tered into to be published with the laws of
Territory northwest of the Ohio, a bill for the gov-	642	the United States	1621
ernment of, presented	660	resolution agreed to	1639
Thatcher, Mr., of Massachusetts, on the mode of	132, 145, 214, 585	Tucker, Mr., of South Carolina, on the mode of
ports	376	keeping the Journal	1041
on the Executive departments	403	on the order of business	1048
on the contested election	247	on the rule of naturalization	1109, 1115, 1124
on the seat of Government	318	on the report of the Secretary of the Treasu-
debate on a resolution on this subject	324	ry on public credit	1179, 1438
committee of conference appointed on the dis-		on the slave trade	1190, 1449
agreeing votes of the two Houses		on the appropriation bill	1449
Tonnage. (See Duties.)		on the seat of Government	1674
Treasury Department, debate on a resolution for	383, 384
the establishment of this Department	396
a bill for its establishment presented and committed	420
debated	592 to 607, 611 to 614
ordered to be engrossed	615
passed	619
Treaties. (See Duties.)
Troops of the United States, a bill to recognize	894
and adapt them to the Constitution, presented	912
passed
Tucker, Mr., of South Carolina, on duties on im-	107, 147, 148, 157, 179, 187, 190, ports	198, 291, 295, 324, 325, 337, 361
on magnetic variations	173
on the application of Virginia	251
on duties on tonnage	263, 289
on titles	318
on the Department of Foreign Affairs	584
on the Treasury Department	593, 606
on the compensation of the President	635, 643
on amendments to the Constitution	663, 718, 726, 732, 749, 755, 757, 771, 776
on Indian treaties	691
on the Judiciary	783
on the seat of Government	838, 841, 879
on a day of Thanksgiving	915
on the manner of reporting the debates	919, 920
SECOND SESSION.
Tariff. (See Duties.)
Thanks of Congress voted to the Corporation of the City of New York, for the elegant accommodations furnished for the use of
Congress	1724
Thatcher, Mr., of Massachusetts, on the answer	1054
to the President's Speech	1060
on the manner of reporting the debates	1622
on the next meeting of Congress	1831
Tobacco, a petition from manufacturers of this article, praying for an additional duty thereon
Tonnage on foreign shipping, report of a committee on the petition of merchants at Portsmouth,
(N. H.,) discussed	1567, 1569, 1570,
1572
the report agreed to and a bill presented	1581
debated	1653, 1655, 1656
Treasurer, report of the committee appointed to
examine his accounts	1722
Treasury, report from the Secretary of the Treasury on tonnage duties, &c.	1566

House Proceedings and Debates.

T.	Page.	Treaties, a resolution directing all the treaties en-	Page.
FIRST SESSION.		tered into to be published with the laws of
Territory northwest of the Ohio, a bill for the gov-	642	the United States	1621
ernment of, presented	660	resolution agreed to	1639
Thatcher, Mr., of Massachusetts, on the mode of	132, 145, 214, 585	Tucker, Mr., of South Carolina, on the mode of
ports	376	keeping the Journal	1041
on the Executive departments	403	on the order of business	1048
on the contested election	247	on the rule of naturalization	1109, 1115, 1124
on the seat of Government	318	on the report of the Secretary of the Treasu-
debate on a resolution on this subject	324	ry on public credit	1179, 1438
committee of conference appointed on the dis-		on the slave trade	1190, 1449
agreeing votes of the two Houses		on the appropriation bill	1449
Tonnage. (See Duties.)		on the seat of Government	1674
Treasury Department, debate on a resolution for	383, 384
the establishment of this Department	396
a bill for its establishment presented and committed	420
debated	592 to 607, 611 to 614

House Proceedings and Debates.

	Page.
Vining, Mr.—	632, 633
on the compensation of the President	634, 645, 654
on the New Jersey elections	640
on the Home Department	666, 667, 669
on the compensation of members	678, 682
on the adjournment	779
on the Judiciary	821, 900
on the seat of Government	848, 877, 881, 895
Virginia, an application from the Legislature of	248
offer of territory for the seat of Government	344
Virginia lands reserved for the use of officers and soldiers, a committee appointed to examine	666 into the measures taken on this subject	674
report of the committee	674
taken up and considered	898
further consideration postponed to the next session	899
SECOND SESSION.
Vessels, a bill for registering vessels, and for regulating those employed in the coasting trade, presented	1685
postponed to the next session	1713
Vining, Mr., of Delaware, on the slave trade	1415, 1416
on the accounts of Robert Morris	1465
on the public debt	1419, 1614
on the accounts between the United States and the individual States	1628
on Amelung's glass manufactory	1628
on the seat of Government	1630
Virginia, committee appointed to report on the measures taken in respect to the lands reserved by this State for the use of her officers and soldiers	1103
report made	1105
committed	1150
a bill to enable the officers and soldiers to obtain titles to certain lands, presented	1682
passed	1685
a committee appointed to report a bill for carrying into effect the reservation in the deed ofcession of this State to the United States of the territory northwest of the Ohio	1682
Ohio	1654
Virginia and North Carolina. (See Arrars of pay, and inland navigation.)
THIRD SESSION.
Vermont, message with certain papers relative to the admission of this State into the Union	1960
a bill for her admission, received	1962
a bill regulating the number of her representatives, received	1962
passed	1996
a bill for extending the laws of the United States to Vermont, presented	1964
passed	1966
Vessels, committee appointed to report a bill to amend the act for registering vessels, and for regulating those employed in the coasting trade	1790
Vining, Mr., of Delaware, on the militia	1805, 1808, 1809, 1823, 1825
on electors	1809, 1823, 1825
on the new revenue bill	1874, 1876, 1877
on the Bank of the United States	1894
Virginia, memorial and resolutions from the Legislature of, on the subject of the funding law, laid on the table	1867
FIRST SESSION.
Wadsworth, Mr., of Connecticut, on duties on imports	194, 209, 213, 225, 313, 326, 589
on duties on tonnage	241, 288
on the Treasury Department	389, 391
on amendments to the Constitution	744
on the seat of Government	858, 878
War Department, a bill to establish this Department presented	417
debated	418
ordered to be engrossed	591
passed	592
Ways and Means, proposition to appoint a committee of	608
committee appointed	670
Western Territory, a bill for the government of, presented	671
passed	642
lands, debate on certain resolutions respecting the disposal of	660 report on this subject referred to the Committee of the Whole	411 to 416 debate thereon	453
report	622 to 1632
Wheaton, Joseph, appointed Sergeant-at-Arms	665
White, Mr., of Virginia, on duties on imports	330
on magnetic variations	104, 107, 152, 153, 164, 345, 357
on Executive Departments	369, 376, 382
on the disposal of Western lands	414
on amendments to the Constitution	428, 660
on the Department of Foreign Affairs	456, 465
on the compensation of the President	513, 577
on the New Jersey elections	633, 635, 644, 646, 647, 653
on the Home Department	640
on the manner of reporting the debates	667
on the seat of Government	920
SECOND SESSION.
Wadsworth, Mr., of Connecticut, on the mode of keeping the Journal	1043
on the answer to the President's Speech	1053, 1054
on Wait's petition	1093
on the remission of fines	1128
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit	1237, 1513
Wait, John, his petition praying to be reimbursed for articles furnished to soldiers during the war	1092
rejected	1093
War, report of troops, ordinance, &c., furnished for support of the war	1566
Wells, Richard, and John Hart, memorial from, laid on the table	1377 report on their memorial laid on the table	1472
referred to the committee on the bill making provision for the debts of the United States	1585
Western lands, a bill to accept the cession of certain Western lands	1414

House Proceedings and Debates.

	Page.
West Point, a bill to authorize the President to purchase a tract of land at West Point, presented	1640
passed	1642
White, Mr., of Virginia, on the mode of keeping the Journal	1042
on the answer to the President's Speech	1045, 1054
on the order of business	1048, 1051
on unfinished business	1057, 1074, 1079, 1080
on reporting the debates	1059
on foreign intercourse	1063, 1064
on the sale of public lands	1068, 1072
on the rule of naturalization	1110, 1113
on the census	1126, 1129
on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit	1229, 1296, 1298, 1299, 1340, 1342, 1355, 1360, 1373, 1376, 1396, 1401, 1425
on the slave trade	1189, 1451
on punishment of crimes	1521
on tonnage on foreign shipping	1567
on the next meeting of Congress	1623
on the seat of Government	1660, 1671
Williamson, Mr., of North Carolina, on the public debt	1478, 1479, 1487, 1493, 1496
on the punishment of crimes	1520
on the General Post Office	1527
on tonnage on foreign shipping	1560, 1578
on the accounts between the United States and the several States	1644
THIRD SESSION.
Wadsworth, Mr., of Connecticut, on the militia	1806, 1807, 1809, 1810, 1815, 1816, 1818, 1819
on duties on spirits	1857
War Department, a committee appointed to report what further provision is necessary to secure the due accounting of money expended in this department	1962
report of the committee laid on the table	1967
Western expedition, a letter from the Secretary of War, and sundry papers in relation to the Western expedition, received	1790
White, Mr., of Virginia, on the militia	1812
on the public lands	1835
on filling a vacancy in the Presidency	1854, 1856
on duties on spirits	1871
Widows and orphans, a committee appointed to bring in a bill for making compensation to certain widows and orphans and invalids, bill reported	1883
passed	1972
postponed by the Senate	1973
memorial of sundry widows, creditors of the United States, against the funding system, referred to the Secretary of the Treasury	1902
Williamson, Mr., (North Carolina,) on supplying newspapers	1789 on the Answer to President's Speech	1794, 1795 on the militia	1805, 1808, 1821
on the public lands	1831
on duties on spirits	1853, 1860
on the Post Office bill	1887, 1889
on the Bank of the United States	1954
Y.
Yeas and Nays, on an amendment to the bill laying duties on imports	365
FIRST SESSION.
Yeas and Nays, on the question of referring certain petitions from the Society of Friends on the subject of the slave trade	1205
on inserting in the Journal the report of the Select Committee and the report of the Committee of the Whole on the subject of the slave trade	1473
on the question of going into Committee of the Whole on a part of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the debt of the United States	1530
on discharging the committee from the consideration of that part of the report which relates to the assumption of the State debts, on the bill for adjusting the claims of Baron Steuben	1556, 1557, 1621
on the bill making provision for the debt of the United States	1619
on an amendment to the bill for providing the means of foreign intercourse	1620
on the proposition for fixing on Philadelphia as the place for the next meeting of Congress	1623 to 1626, 1634, 1635, 1637
on an amendment to the bill repealing the duties heretofore laid on distilled spirits, and laying others in their stead	1642
on engrossing the bill	1644
on an amendment to the bill for settling the accounts between the United States and the individual States	1645
on an amendment to the bill to regulate intercourse with the Indian tribes	1646
on fixing the permanent seat of Government	1678, 1679

House Proceedings and Debates.

	Page.
Yeas and Nays—
on agreeing to the report on Mr. Smith's contested election	408
on an amendment to the bill to establish the Department of Foreign Affairs	580, 585
on the passage of said bill	591
on an amendment to the tonnage bill	618
on the bill for the compensation of members, on an amendment to the bill to provide for the expenses of Indian treaties	688 on the previous question on a debate on amendments to the Constitution	703 on an amendment to the ninth proposition of amendment to the Constitution	579
on an amendment to the Constitution	768
on an amendment to prevent interfering with elections	772
on inserting a clause to prevent Congress from laying direct taxes	777 on the bill for establishing the salaries of Executive officers, and their assistants and clerks	796
on sundry questions in relation to fixing the seat of Government	881 to 886 on the passage of the bill for establishing the seat of Government	911
on agreeing to the Senate's amendments to said bill	926
on the question of altering the eighth article of the proposed amendments to the Constitution	913 on an amendment to the bill for regulating processes in the courts of the U. S.	914, 916
SECOND SESSION.
Yeas and Nays on the question of referring certain petitions from the Society of Friends on the subject of the slave trade	1205
on inserting in the Journal the report of the Select Committee and the report of the Committee of the Whole on the subject of the slave trade	1473
on the question of going into Committee of the Whole on a part of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the debt of the United States	1530
on discharging the committee from the consideration of that part of the report which relates to the assumption of the State debts, on the bill for adjusting the claims of Baron Steuben	1556, 1557, 1621
on the bill making provision for the debt of the United States	1619
on an amendment to the bill for providing the means of foreign intercourse	1620
on the proposition for fixing on Philadelphia as the place for the next meeting of Congress	1623 to 1626, 1634, 1635, 1637
on an amendment to the bill repealing the duties heretofore laid on distilled spirits, and laying others in their stead	1642
on engrossing the bill	1644
on an amendment to the bill for settling the accounts between the United States and the individual States	1645
on an amendment to the bill to regulate intercourse with the Indian tribes	1646
on fixing the permanent seat of Government	1678, 1679

lxiv

House Proceedings and Debates.

Yeas and Nays—	Page.
on the bill further to provide for the payment of the debts of the United States -	1684
on an amendment to the Post Office bill -	1686
on amendments to the bill making provision for the debts of the United States, 1710, 1711, 1712, 1716, 1721	1711, 1712, 1716, 1721
on the previous question on a motion to repeal the fifth section of the bill to establish the seat of Government -	1720
THIRD SESSION.
Yeas and Nays on an amendment to the militia bill -	1837
on striking out the thirteenth section of the bill laying a duty on spirits -	1870

Yeas and Nays—	Page.
on prohibiting inspectors from interfering in elections -	1878
on a motion to limit the duration of the act on ordering the bill to be engrossed -	1882 - 1883
on the passage of the bill -	1884
on recommitting the Bank bill -	1894, 1902
on the passage of the bill -	1960
on an amendment to the bill establishing land offices -	1964
on agreeing to an amendment of the Senate to the new revenue bill -	1965, 1966, 1971
on the bill to amend the act to establish the seat of Government -	1973 on the resolution for establishing a mint -	1975

INDEX TO THE APPENDIX.

FIRST SESSION.		Page.	THIRD SESSION.		Page.
A.			C.
Accounts, an act for settling the, between the United States and the individual States -	2158		Congress, an act fixing the time for its next annual meeting -	2320
Acts, records, &c., an act to provide for the safe-keeping of -	2177		Commissioners of Loans, an act making a compensation to them for extraordinary expenses -	2342
Acts of Congress -	2127
Amendments to the Constitution ratified -	1983
Appropriations, an act making them for the service of the present year -	2198
SECOND SESSION.			FIRST SESSION.
Accounts, an act to provide more effectually for the settlement of accounts between the United States and the individual States -	2295		Duties on goods, wares, &c., imported on tonnage -	2129
Acts, records, &c., an act to prescribe the mode in which those in each State shall be authenticated so as to take effect in every other State -	2225		an act to regulate the collection of -	2132
Appropriations, an act making them for support of Government for the year seventeen hundred and ninety -	2206		an act to suspend part of the above act -	2133
an act making certain appropriations therein mentioned -	2305			2178
THIRD SESSION.			SECOND SESSION.
Appropriations, an act making appropriations for support of Government for the year seven-teen hundred and ninety-one -	2310		Debt of the United States, an act making provision for it -	2243
an act making an appropriation for the purpose of effecting a recognition of the treaty with the Emperor of Morocco -	2340		an act making further provision for the payment of it -	2296
B.			an act making provision for the reduction of the public debt -
Bank of the United States, an act to incorporate the subscribers to said bank -	2312		Duties, an act further to suspend a part of the act to regulate the collection of -	2214
an act supplementary to the above -	2318		an act imposing duties on the tonnage of vessels -	2240
THIRD SESSION.			an act to provide more effectually for the collection of duties on goods, wares, &c. -
				2251
C.			THIRD SESSION.
Coasting trade. (See Vessels .)			Debts of the United States, an act supplementary to the act making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States -	2307
Congress, an act for allowing compensation to the members of -	2179		an act to explain and amend an act making further provision for payment of the debts of the United States -	2320
an act to alter the time for the next meeting of Congress (See Amendments .) -	2200		an act supplementary to the act making provision for the reduction of the public debt -	2345
Constitution. (See Amendments .)			Duties, an act repealing the duties heretofore laid on distilled spirits and laying others in their stead -	2320
SECOND SESSION.			an act making further provision for the collection of the duties on teas, and to prolong the term for payment of the duties on wines -
				2340
Census, an act providing for enumerating the inhabitants of the United States -	2202		E.
Cession of Western Territory by North Carolina, an act to accept the cession -	2208		Executive Departments, an act for establishing the Department of Foreign Affairs -	2132
Copy rights secured. (See Learning .)			an act to establish the Department of War -	2153
Crimes against the United States, an act for the punishment of -	2215		an act to establish the Treasury Department -	2174
			Executive officers, an act to establish their salaries -	2176
			SECOND SESSION.
			Executive officers, an act supplementary to the act to establish their salaries -	2230

1st CON.—C

Appendix—Acts and Public Documents.

Page.	L.	Page.
THIRD SESSION.	FIRST SESSION.
Executive officers, an act in addition to the act to establish their salaries - - - - -	Light-houses, beacons, &c., an act for the establishment of - - - - -	2160
F.	SECOND SESSION.
Foreign intercourse, an act providing the means of France, a letter and decree of the National Assembly of, in relation to the death of Dr. Franklin - - - - -	Lands, all surveys made under the late geographer, (Hutchins,) to be completed, &c. - - - - -	2308
2116	Learning, an act for the encouragement of, by securing the copies of books, &c. - - - - -	2327
SECOND SESSION.	Light-houses, &c., an act to amend the act of last session on the subject - - - - -	2241
Forfeitures and penalties under the revenue laws, an act to provide for mitigating them in certain cases. - - - - -	act authorizing the completion of the light-house at Portland Head - - - - -	2301
G.	THIRD SESSION.
Georgia and Rhode Island, an act to continue the act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island, so far as the same respects Georgia and Rhode Island - - - - -	Lands, an act for granting lands to the settlers at Vincennes and the Illinois country, and for confirming their possessions - - - - -	2348
2309	M.
I.	FIRST SESSION.
Indian tribes, an act in relation to treaties with the Indians - - - - -	Message of the President. (See France.)
2161	Militia, a plan for the establishment of the militia - - - - -	2087
SECOND SESSION.	Mint, report on the establishment of a mint - - - - -	2059
Indians, an act for holding a treaty to establish peace with them - - - - -	Morris, Robert, his memorial - - - - -	2114
2241	SECOND SESSION.
an act to regulate trade and intercourse with them - - - - -	Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island, an act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of these States - - - - -	2302
2241	Military Establishment, an act regulating it - - - - -	2222
Inspection of goods, an act to prevent the exportation of goods not duly inspected - - - - -	THIRD SESSION.
2208	Maryland, an act declaring the assent of Congress to a certain act of this State - - - - -	2310
Intercourse with foreign nations, an act to provide the means of - - - - -	Military Establishment, an act for adding another regiment to the establishment, and for making further provisions for the protection of the frontiers - - - - -	2350
J.	N.
FIRST SESSION.	FIRST SESSION.
Judiciary, an act for allowing a compensation to the Judges and the Attorney General - - - - -	National Bank. (See Bank of the United States, and Reports.)
2181	SECOND SESSION.
an act to establish the Judicial Courts of the United States - - - - -	Naturalization, an act to establish a uniform rule of - - - - -	2205
2182	North Carolina, an act for giving effect in this State to the acts therein mentioned - - - - -	2199
an act to regulate processes in the courts - - - - -	act giving effect in this State to the judiciary act - - - - -	2229
2197	(See Cession of Western Territory.)
SECOND SESSION.	O.
Judiciary, an act to continue the act to regulate processes in the courts - - - - -	FIRST SESSION.
2226	Oaths, an act to regulate the manner of administering them - - - - -	2127
an act to alter the time of holding certain courts - - - - -	P.
2301	FIRST SESSION.
THIRD SESSION.	Pensioners, an act providing for the payment of - - - - -	2199
Judiciary, an act to continue in force the act to regulate processes - - - - -	Post Office, report of the Postmaster General on the - - - - -	2107
2311	an act for the temporary establishment of the Post Office - - - - -	2179
an act providing compensation to the officers of the judicial courts, and for jurors, witnesses, &c. - - - - - 2343 marshals to make provision for the safe-keeping of prisoners under the laws of the United States, in cases where the State Legislatures have not made such provisions - - - - - 2353
K.
THIRD SESSION.
Kentucky, an act for her admission into the Union - - - - - 2309 an act regulating the number of her representatives - - - - - 2311

Appendix—Acts and Public Documents.

Page.	T.	Page.
President and Vice President of the United States, an act for allowing them compensation - - - - -	FIRST SESSION.
2182	Tariff. (See Duties.)
SECOND SESSION.	Territory northwest of the Ohio, an act for establishing the government of - - - - -	2159
Pensioners, an act making further provision for the payment of - - - - -	Tonnage. (See Duties.)
2234	Treasury Department, an act to establish it - - - - -	2174
Post Office, an act to continue in force the temporary act of the last session - - - - -	Troops, an act to recognise, and adapt to the Constitution, their establishment - - - - -	2199
2295	THIRD SESSION.
Pensions, an act to continue in force the act therein mentioned, and to make further provision for the payment of pensions to invalids - - - - -	Territory south of the Ohio, an act for the government of - - - - -	2226
2345	Treaties, all treaties to be published with the laws of the United States - - - - -	2308
Post Office, an act to continue the act of the last session - - - - -	THIRD SESSION.
2344	Treasury Department, an act supplementary to the act for the establishment of this Department, and for a further compensation to certain officers - - - - -	2341
R.	U.
FIRST SESSION.	SECOND SESSION.
Report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit - - - - -	Useful Arts, an act to promote the progress of the - - - - -	2212
1991, 2023	V.
of the Secretary of the Treasury on a National Bank - - - - -	FIRST SESSION.
2031	Vessels, an act for registering and clearing vessels, regulating the coasting trade, &c. - - - - -	2161
of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the establishment of a mint - - - - -	an act to explain and amend the above act - - - - -	2198
2059	SECOND SESSION.
of the Secretary of War, on a plan for the militia - - - - -	Virginia line, an act to enable the officers and soldiers of this line to obtain titles to certain lands - - - - -	2299
2087	THIRD SESSION.
of the Postmaster General, on the Post Office - - - - -	Vermont, an act for the admission of this State into the Union - - - - -	2311
2107	an act to regulate the number of her representatives - - - - -	2311
SECOND SESSION.	an act giving effect in this State to the laws of the United States - - - - -	2318
Rhode Island, an act giving effect in this State to the acts therein mentioned - - - - -	Vessels, an act to provide for the unloading of vessels in case of obstruction by ice - - - - -	2309
2230	W.
an act giving effect in this State to the act establishing the judicial courts - - - - -	FIRST SESSION.
2232	War Department, an act to establish the Department - - - - -	2159
an act giving effect in this State to the census act - - - - -	SECOND SESSION.
2233	West Point, an act authorizing the purchase of - - - - -	2233
THIRD SESSION.
Rix-dollar of Denmark, an act fixing the value thereof - - - - - 2342
S.
SECOND SESSION.
Seat of Government, an act for its temporary and permanent establishment - - - - - 2234
Seamen in merchant's service, an act for the government of - - - - - 2235
Soldiers and seamen, an act for the relief of disabled - - - - - 2302
Stirling, General, an act for the relief of him and others - - - - - 2304
THIRD SESSION.
Seat of Government, an act to amend the act of last session for establishing the seat of Government - - - - - 2340

ANNALS

OF

THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

SECOND CONGRESS.

THE

DEBATES AND PROCEEDINGS

IN THE

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES;

WITH

AN APPENDIX,

CONTAINING

IMPORTANT STATE PAPERS AND PUBLIC DOCUMENTS,

AND ALL

THE LAWS OF A PUBLIC NATURE;

WITH A COPIOUS INDEX.

SECOND CONGRESS:

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM OCTOBER 24, 1791, TO MARCH 2, 1793, INCLUSIVE.

COMPILED FROM AUTHENTIC MATERIALS.

WASHINGTON:

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY GALES AND SEATON.

.....
1849.

PROCEEDINGS

OF

THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

AT THE FIRST SESSION OF THE SECOND CONGRESS, BEGUN AT THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 24, 1791.

NOTES TO THE READER.

I. To account for the absence of any Report of Debates in the Senate in the Second Congress, it is proper here to repeat that the Senate sat with closed doors during its Legislative as well as its Executive sittings, from the beginning of the First Congress up to the 30th day of February, 1794, in the first session of the Third Congress, except in the case of Mr. Gallatin's contested election, when a proposition succeeded, which had frequently before failed, in that body, that the Legislative sittings of the Senate should thenceforth, after the end of that session of Congress, be conducted with open doors and galleries.

II. In the History of the First Congress, the Proceedings of the Senate in its Executive capacity were given, with a view to showing how they began, were modified in their progress, and continued to the end of that Congress. From the beginning of the Second Congress, however, the Executive Journal being in general a monotonous record, no notice is taken of Executive Proceedings in the Senate, unless of some important principle being involved, as in case of a Treaty, &c., or of Debate which, finding its way to the public knowledge, can yet be traced in the records of the day.

III. In those early proceedings of the Senate, Bills of either House are inserted at large when so found on the Journal of that body; the object of doing so being to show the original form of each, and to enable the inquiring reader to ascertain, by comparing them with the Acts of Congress, (to be found in the Appendix,) what changes they may have undergone in their passage through the two Houses, before they became Laws.

MONDAY, October 24, 1791.

This being the day fixed by law for the annual meeting of Congress, at the first session of the second Congress, the following members of the Senate appeared, produced their credentials, and took their seats:*

JOHN ADAMS, Vice President and President of the Senate;

JOHN LANGDON and PAINE WINGATE, from New Hampshire;

CALDER STRONG and GEORGE CABOT, from Massachusetts;

THEODORE FOSTER and JOSEPH STANTON, Jr., from Rhode Island;

ROGER SHERMAN, from Connecticut, in the place of WILLIAM S. JOHNSON, resigned;

AARON BURR, from New York;

PHILEMON DICKINSON and JOHN RUTHERFORD, from New Jersey;

ROBERT MORRIS, from Pennsylvania;

GEORGE READ, from Delaware;

SAMUEL JOHNSTON and BENJAMIN HAWKINS, from North Carolina;

* Mr. CARROLL, from Maryland; Mr. ELIZABETH, from Connecticut; Mr. FOSTER, from Rhode Island; Mr. MORRIS, from Virginia; and Mr. READ, from Delaware, were allowed to the class of Senators whose continuance in office was limited by the Constitution to two years; but they had been re-elected by their respective States, and had produced their credentials to the Senate of the United States, and had taken the oath of office, and were accordingly seated for the transaction of Executive business on the 24th March, 1791.

2d CON.—2

PIERCE BUTLER and RALPH IZARD, from South Carolina; and WILLIAM FEW, from Georgia.

Ordered, That Messrs. BUTLER, MORRIS, and DICKINSON, be a committee to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make to them.

Ordered, That the Secretary acquaint the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and ready to proceed to business; and that they have notified the President of the United States that they are ready to receive such communications as he may be pleased to make to them.

The petition of Robert Aikin, praying to be appointed printer to the United States, was read, and ordered to lie for consideration.

The petition of James Alexander, that he may be appointed Sergeant-at-arms, Doorkeeper, or Messenger, was read; and ordered to lie for consideration.

Mr. BUTLER, from the committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, reported that they had executed their commission.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. BECKLEY, their Clerk, informed the Senate that they have received that a committee be appointed, jointly with such committee as the Senate shall appoint, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses is assembled and ready to receive any communications he may please to make to them; in which resolution they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the appointment of a joint committee to wait on the President of the United States, agreeably to the resolution of the House of Representatives; and that Messrs. Izard and LANGDON be the committee on the part of the Senate.

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate this resolution of concurrence to the House of Representatives.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. BECKLEY, their Clerk, informed the Senate that they have resolved that two Chaplains, of different denominations, be appointed to Congress for the present session, one by each House, who shall interchange weekly.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives of this day, for the appointment of two Chaplains; and, Resolved, That they do concur therein, and that the Right Reverend Bishop WARREN be appointed on the part of the Senate.

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate the concurrence of the Senate in this resolution together with their proceedings thereon, to the House of Representatives.

Mr. IZARD, from the joint committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, agreeably to the resolution of the two Houses, of this day, reported that they had executed the business, and that the President of the United States proposed to-morrow, at 12 o'clock, to meet the two Houses of Congress in the Senate Chamber.

TUESDAY, October 25.

The petition of Thomas Bradford, that he may be employed in printing such bills, journals, and other papers, as may be from time to time published, was read; and ordered to lie.

Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the Senate are ready to meet them in the Senate Chamber, to receive any communications the President of the United States may please to make to the two Houses of Congress; and that the usual seats will be assigned them.

The House of Representatives having accordingly taken their seats, the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES came into the Senate Chamber, and addressed both Houses of Congress as followeth:

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I meet you upon the present occasion with the feelings which are naturally inspired by a strong impression of the prosperous situation of our common country, and by a persuasion, equally strong, that the labor of the season which has just commenced will, under the guidance of a spirit no less prompt than patriotic, issue in measures conducive to the stability and increase of national prosperity.

Numerous as are the Providential blessings which demand our grateful acknowledgments, the abundance with which another year has again rewarded the industry of the husbandman is too important to escape recollection.

Your own observations in your respective situations will have satisfied you of the progressive state of agriculture, manufactures, commerce, and navigation. In tracing their causes, you will have remarked, with particular pleasure, the happy effects of that revival of confidence, public as well as private, to which the Constitution and laws of the United States have so eminently contributed; and you will have observed, with no less interest, new and decisive proofs of the increasing reputation and credit of the nation. But you, nevertheless, cannot fail to derive satisfaction from the confirmation of these circumstances, which will be disclosed in the several official communications that will be made to you in the course of your deliberations.

The rapid subscriptions to the Bank of the United States, which completed the sum allowed to be subscribed in a single day, is among the striking and pleasing evidences which present themselves, not only of confidence in the Government, but of resource in the community.

In the interval of your recess, due attention has been paid to the execution of the different objects which were specially provided for by the laws and resolutions of the last session.

Among the most important of these, is the defence and security of the western frontiers. To accomplish it on the most humane principles was a primary wish.

Accordingly, at the same time that treaties have been provisionally concluded, and other proper means used to attach the wavering, and to confirm in their friendship the well disposed tribes of Indians, effectual measures have been adopted to make those of a hostile description sensible that a pacification was desired upon terms of moderation and justice.

Those measures having proved unsuccessful, it became necessary to convince the refractory of the power of the United States to punish their depredations. Offensive operations have therefore been directed, to be conducted, however, as consistently as possible with the dictates of humanity. Some of these have been crowned with full success, and others are yet depending. The expeditions which have been completed were carried on under the authority, and at the expense, of the United States, by the militia of Kentucky; whose enterprise, intrepidity, and good conduct, are entitled to peculiar commendation.

Overtures of peace are still continued to the deluded tribes, and considerable numbers of individuals belonging to them have lately renounced all further opposition, removed from their former situations, and placed themselves under the immediate protection of the United States.

It is sincerely to be desired, that all need of coercion in future may cease; and that an intimate intercourse may succeed, calculated to advance the happiness of the Indians, and to attach them firmly to the United States.

In order to this, it seems necessary—

That they should experience the benefits of an impartial dispensation of justice.

That the mode of alienating their lands, the main source of discontent and war, should be so defined and regulated as to obviate imposition, and, as far as may be practicable, controversy concerning the reality and extent of the alienations which are made.

That commerce with them should be promoted under regulations tending to secure an equitable deportment towards them, and that such rational experiments should be made, for imparting to them the blessings of civilization, as may from time to time suit their condition.

That the Executive of the United States should be enabled to employ the means to which the Indians have been long accustomed for uniting their immediate interests with the preservation of peace.

And that efficacious provision should be made for inflicting adequate penalties upon all those who, by violating their rights, shall infringe the treaties, and endanger the peace of the Union.

A system corresponding with the mild principles of religion and philanthropy towards an unenlightened race of men, whose happiness materially depends on the conduct of the United States, would be as honorable to the national character as conformable to the dictates of sound policy.

The powers specially vested in me by the act laying certain duties on distilled spirits, which respect the subdivisions of the districts into surveys, the appointment of officers, and the assignment of compensations, have likewise been carried into effect. In a matter in which both materials and experience were wanting to guide the calculation, it will be readily conceived that there must have been difficulty in such an adjustment of the rates of compensation as would conciliate a reasonable competency with a proper regard to the limits prescribed by the law. It is hoped that the circumspection which has been used will be found in the result to have secured the last of the two objects; but it is probable, that, with a view of the first, in some instances a revision of the provision will be found advisable.

The impressions with which this law has been received by the community have been, upon the whole, such as were to be expected among enlightened and well disposed citizens, from the propriety and necessity of the measure. The novelty, however, of the tax, in a considerable part of the United States, and a misconception of some of its provisions, have given occasion in particular places to some degree of discontent. But, it is satisfactory to know that this disposition yields to proper explanations and more just apprehensions of the true nature of the law. And I entertain a full confidence that it will, in all, give way to motives which arise out of a just sense of duty, and a virtuous regard to public welfare.

If there are any circumstances in the law which, consistently with its main design, may be so varied as to remove any well-intentioned objections that may happen to exist, it will consist with a wise moderation to make the proper variations. It is desirable, on all occasions, to unite, with a steady and firm adherence to constitutional and necessary acts of Government, the fullest evidence of a disposition, as far as may be practicable, to consult the wishes of every part of the community, and to lay the foundations of the public administration in the affections of the people.

Pursuant to the authority contained in the several acts on that subject, a district of ten miles square, for the permanent seat of the Government of the United States, has been fixed, and announced by proclamation; which district will comprehend lands on both sides of the river Potomac, and the towns of Alexandria and Georgetown. A city has also been laid out, agreeably to a plan which will be placed before Congress. And, as there is a prospect, favored by the rate of sales which have already taken place, of ample funds for carrying on the necessary public buildings, there is every expectation of their due progress.

The completion of the census of the inhabitants, for which provision was made by law, has been duly notified, (excepting one instance in which the return has been informal; and another, in which it has been emitted or miscarried,) and the returns of the officers who were charged with this duty, which will be laid before you, will give you the pleasing assurance, that the present population of the United States borders on four millions of persons.

It is proper also to inform you that a further loan of two millions and a half of florins has been completed in Holland; the terms of which are similar to those of the one last announced, except as to a small reduction of charges. Another, on like terms, for six millions of florins had been set on foot under circumstances that assured an immediate completion.

Gentlemen of the Senate:

Two treaties which have been provisionally concluded with the Cherokees and Six Nations of Indians, will be laid before you for your consideration and ratification.

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

In entering upon the discharge of your legislative trust, you must anticipate, with pleasure, that many of the difficulties, necessarily incident to the first arrangements of a new Government, for an extensive country, have been happily surmounted by the zealous and judicious exertions of your predecessors, in co-operation with the other branch of the Legislature. The important objects which remain to be accomplished, will, I am persuaded, be conducted upon principles equally comprehensive, and equally well calculated for the advancement of the general weal.

The time limited for receiving subscriptions to the loans proposed by the act making provision for the debt of the United States having expired, statements from the proper department will, as soon as possible, apprise you of the exact result. Enough, however, is already known to afford an assurance that the views of that act have been substantially fulfilled. The subscription, in the domestic debt of the United States, has embraced by far the greatest proportion of that debt; affording, at the same time, proof of the general satisfaction of the public creditors with the system which has been proposed to their acceptance, and of the spirit of accommodation to the convenience of the Government with which they are actuated. The subscriptions in the debts of the respective States, as far as the provisions of the law have permitted, may be said to be yet more general. The part of the debt of the United States which remains unsubscribed, will naturally engage your further deliberations.

It is particularly pleasing to me to be able to announce to you that the revenues which have been established promise to be adequate to their objects, and may be permitted, if no unforeseen exigency occurs, to supersede, for the present, the necessity of any new burdens upon our constituents.

An object which will claim your early attention is a provision for the current service of the ensuing year, together with such ascertained demands upon the Treasury as require to be immediately discharged, and such casualties as may have arisen in the execution of the public business, for which no specific appropriation may have yet been made; of all which a proper estimate will be laid before you.

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I shall content myself with a general reference to former communications for several objects, upon which

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[OCTOBER, 1791.]

the urgency of other affairs has hitherto postponed any definitive resolution. Their importance will recall them to your attention; and, I trust, that the progress already made in the most arduous arrangements of the Government will afford you leisure to resume them with advantage.

There are, however, some of them of which I cannot forbear a more particular mention. These are: the Militia, the Post Office and Post Roads, the Mint, Weights and Measures, and a provision for the sale of the vacant lands of the United States.

The first is certainly an object of primary importance, whether viewed in reference to the national security, to the satisfaction of the community, or to the preservation of order. In connection with this, the establishment of competent magazines and arsenals, and the fortification of such places as are peculiarly important and vulnerable, naturally present themselves to consideration. The safety of the United States, under Divine protection, ought to rest on the basis of systematic and solid arrangements, exposed as little as possible to the hazards of fortuitous circumstances.

The importance of the Post Office and Post Roads, on a plan sufficiently liberal and comprehensive, as they respect the expedition, safety, and facility of communication, is increased by their instrumentality in diffusing a knowledge of the laws and proceedings of the Government; which, while it contributes to the security of the people, serves also to guard them against the effects of misrepresentation and misconception. The establishment of additional cross posts, especially to some of the important points in the western and northern parts of the Union, cannot fail to be of material utility.

The disorders in the existing currency, and especially the scarcity of small change, a scarcity so peculiarly distressing to the poorer classes, strongly recommend the carrying into immediate effect the resolution already entered into concerning the establishment of a Mint. Measures have been taken pursuant to that resolution for procuring some of the most necessary artists, together with the requisite apparatus.

An uniformity in the Weights and Measures of the country is among the important objects submitted to you by the Constitution, and, if it can be derived from a standard as once invariable and universal, must be no less honorable to the public council, than conducive to the public convenience.

A provision for the sale of the vacant lands of the United States is particularly urged, among other reasons, by the important considerations, that they are pledged as a fund for reimbursing the public debt; that, if timely and judiciously applied, they may save the necessity of burdening our citizens with new taxes for the extinguishment of the principal; and that, being free to discharge the principal but in a limited proportion, no opportunity ought to be lost for availing the public of its right.

G. WASHINGTON.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES having retired, and the two Houses being separated.

Ordered, That Messrs. BARR, CABOT, and JOHNSTON, be a committee to prepare and report the draft of an Address to the President of the United States, in answer to his Speech delivered this day to both Houses of Congress.

Ordered, That the Speech of the President of the United States, delivered this day, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Proceedings.

WEDNESDAY, October 26.

RUFUS KING, from the State of New York, and JOHN HENRY, from the State of Maryland, attended. The following Letter, dated October 25th, 1791, from the Treasurer of the United States to the Vice President, was communicated:

SIR: My accounts from the 1st October, 1790, to the 30th June, 1791, having passed the offices, and been reported on, permit me, through you, to lay them before the honorable the Senate, and at the same time to inform them that my specie and indent accounts from the 1st July to the 30th September, are at the Treasury for settlement, and when passed on, will be immediately handed you.

Ordered, That this Letter, and the accounts therein referred to, lie for consideration.

The following Message from the President of the United States was received and read:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you copies of the following Acts which have been transmitted to me during the recess of Congress, viz:

An Act passed by the Legislature of New Hampshire, for ceding to the United States the fort and light-house belonging to the said State.

An Act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, ratifying, on behalf of said State, the first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as proposed by Congress; and

An Act of the Legislature of North Carolina, granting the use of the jails within that State to the United States.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, October 26, 1791.

Ordered, That the Message and papers accompanying it lie for consideration.

The petition of Thomas Shubrick, Esq., of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, on behalf of Mary and Susanna Shubrick, daughters of Richard Shubrick, Esq., deceased, was read, praying that the provisions of the resolves of Congress of the 15th of May, 1778, and of the 24th of August, 1780, may be extended to the said Mary and Susanna.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War to report thereon to the Senate.

THURSDAY, October 27.

The following resolution of the Directors of the Library Company of Philadelphia was communicated, dated October 6th, 1791.

Resolved, That the resolution of the 18th of January last, be extended to the present Congress of the United States, and that the Secretary be directed to furnish copies of the said resolution to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The memorial of John Nixon and others, a committee on behalf of certain creditors of the United States, was read, requesting that an appropriation may be made for the payment of the arrears of their interest and the annual interest accruing.

Ordered, That this petition lie on the table. The petition of Roger Smith, in behalf of Jacob and William Mott, minors, and sons of Charles

OCTOBER, 1791.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

Mott, Esq., deceased, late a Major of the second continental regiment of the State of South Carolina, was read, praying that the benefits of commutation of half pay may be extended to the aforesaid Jacob and William.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to report thereon to the Senate.

The petition of Thomas O. Elliot, executor of the late Colonel Bernard Elliot, was read, praying that the orphan son of the said Bernard Elliot may receive the commutation for his late father's services, as Lieutenant-colonel, who died in the service of the United States.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to report thereon to the Senate.

The petition of James Ball, of the State of South Carolina, on behalf of Jean Ann Ball, his wife, late Jean Ann Wise, only daughter of Major Samuel Wise, deceased, late of the third continental regiment in the State aforesaid, was read, praying that the benefits of the resolves of Congress of the 15th of May, 1778, and the 24th of August, 1780, may be extended to the said Jean Ann.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to report thereon to the Senate.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that they have proceeded by ballot to the appointment of a Chaplain to Congress on their part, and, upon examining the ballots, a majority of the votes of the whole House was found in favor of the Reverend Mr. BLAIR.

The petition of Charles Hateley, of South Carolina, that he may have a patent for a newly invented machine or mill, for freeing of grain or seeds from the hull; also, the petition of the said Charles Hateley, praying for encouragement in perfecting his machine for cleansing or whitening of rice, were severally read, and ordered to lie.

The petition of Cleland Kinloch, of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, on behalf of his sister Mary Huger, widow of Benjamin Huger, Esq., late Major of the fifth continental regiment of the State aforesaid, was read, praying that the resolutions of Congress, of May 15th, 1778, and 24th of August, 1780, may be extended to the said Mary Huger.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to report thereon to the Senate. The following Message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you a copy of a letter, and of sundry documents, which I have received from the Governor of Pennsylvania, respecting certain persons who are said to have fled from justice out of the State of Pennsylvania, into that of Virginia; together with a report of the Attorney General of the United States upon the same subject. I have received from the Governor of North Carolina a copy of an Act of the General Assembly of that State, authorizing him to convey to the United States the right and jurisdiction of the said State over one acre of land in Ocracoke Island, and ten acres on the Cape Island, within the said State, for the purpose of erecting light-houses thereon, together with the deed of the Governor, in pursuance thereof, and the original conveyances made to the State by the individual proprietors, which original conveyances contain conditions that the light-house on Ocracoke shall be built before the first day of January, 1801, and that on the Cape Island, before the eighth day of October, 1800. And I have caused these several papers to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State.

A statement of the Returns of the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States, which have been received, will at this time be laid before you.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, October 27, 1791.

The statement of the Enumeration referred to in the Message is as follows:

Whole number of Persons within the several Districts of the United States, according to an Act "providing for the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States," passed March 1, 1790.

DISTRICTS.	Free white males of sixteen years and upwards, including heads of families.	Free white males under sixteen years.	Free white females, including heads of families.	All other free persons.	Slaves.	Total.
Vermont	22,435	22,328	40,505	252	16	85,539
New Hampshire	36,086	34,851	70,160	630	158	141,885
Maine	24,384	24,748	46,870	538	none.	96,540
Massachusetts	95,453	87,289	190,592	5,463	none.	378,787
Rhode Island	16,019	15,799	32,652	3,407	948	68,825
Connecticut	60,523	54,403	117,448	2,808	2,764	237,946
New York	83,700	78,122	152,320	4,654	21,324	340,130
New Jersey	45,251	41,416	83,287	2,762	11,453	184,139
Pennsylvania	110,788	106,948	206,363	6,537	3,737	434,373
Delaware	11,783	12,143	22,364	3,899	8,987	59,094
Maryland	55,915	51,339	101,395	8,043	103,036	319,728
Virginia	110,936	116,135	215,046	12,866	292,627	747,610
Kentucky	15,154	17,057	28,922	114	12,430	73,677
North Carolina	69,988	77,506	140,710	4,975	100,573	393,751
South Carolina	13,103	14,044	25,739	398	29,264	82,548
Georgia	6,271	10,277	15,365	361	3,417	36,691
Southwestern Territory	-	-	-	-	-	-
Northwestern Territory	-	-	-	-	-	-

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[OCTOBER, 1791.]

The Message and papers therein referred to were read; and ordered to lie for consideration. The following Message from the President of the United States was communicated by the Secretary of War:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I have directed the Secretary of War to lay before you, for your examination, the reports of Brigadier General Scott, and Lieutenant-colonel commandant Wilkinson, the officers who commanded the two expeditions against the Wabash Indians, in the months of June and August last; together with the instructions by virtue of which the said expeditions were undertaken. When the operations now depending shall be terminated, the reports relative thereto shall also be laid before you.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, October 27, 1791.

The Message and papers therein referred to were read; and ordered to lie for consideration.

Mr. Burr reported, from the committee appointed to prepare an Address to the President of the United States, in answer to his Speech to both Houses of Congress at the opening of the session. Ordered, That to-morrow he assigned to take the report into consideration.

FRIDAY, October 28

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Senate proceeded to take into consideration the Address of the President of the United States, on the 24th instant, to both Houses of Congress; which report was agreed to, as follows:

To the President of the United States:

SIR: The Senate of the United States have received with the highest satisfaction the assurances of public prosperity contained in your Speech to both Houses. The multiplied blessings of Providence have not escaped our notices, or failed to excite our gratitude.

The benefits which flow from the restoration of public and private confidence are conspicuous and important; and the pleasure with which we contemplate them is heightened by your assurance of those further communications which shall confirm their existence and indicate their source.

While we rejoice in the success of those military operations which have been directed against the hostile Indians, we lament with you the necessity that has produced them; and we participate the hope that the present prospect of a general peace, on terms of moderation and justice, may be wrought into complete and permanent effect; and that the measures of Government may equally embrace the security of our frontiers and the general interests of humanity. Our solicitude to obtain which, will insure our zealous attention to an object so warmly espoused by the principles of benevolence, and so highly interesting to the honor and welfare of the nation.

The several subjects which you have particularly recommended, and those which remain of former sessions, will engage our early consideration. We are encouraged to prosecute them with alacrity and steadiness, by the belief that they will interest no passion but that for the general welfare; by the assurance of concert, and by a view of those arduous and important arrangements which have been already accomplished. We observe, sir, the constancy and activity of your zeal for the public good. The example will animate our efforts to promote the happiness of our country.

Ordered, That the Address to the President of the United States, in answer to his Speech, be presented by the Vice President, attended by the Senate; and that the committee which reported the Address wait on the President of the United States, and desire to be informed at what time and place he will receive the same.

MONDAY, October 31.

JAMES MONROE, from the State of Virginia, attended, and took his seat.

MOSES ROBINSON, from the State of Vermont, produced his credentials, and took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. Burr, from the committee appointed on the 28th to wait on the President of the United States, reported, that it would be agreeable to the President of the United States to receive the Address of the Senate, in answer to his Speech to both Houses of Congress, on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

Whereupon, the Senate waited on the President of the United States at his own house, and the Vice President, in their name, communicated to him the Address agreed to on the 28th instant, to which the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES was pleased to make the following reply:

GENTLEMEN: This manifestation of your zeal for the honor and the happiness of our country derives its full value from the share which your deliberations have already had in promoting both.

I thank you for the favorable sentiments with which you view the part I have borne in the arduous trust committed to the Government of the United States; and desire you to be assured that all my zeal will continue to second those further efforts for the public good which are insured by the spirit in which you are entering on the present session.

G. WASHINGTON.

The Senate returned to the Senate Chamber.

The representation of Joseph Ceracchi, a Roman sculptor, of the design conceived of a monument for perpetuating the memory of the American Revolution, was read; and ordered that it lie for consideration.

Ordered, That Messrs. MORRIS, KING, IZARD, CABOT, and HENRY, be a committee to take into consideration the subject of a Mint, and to report a bill thereon, if they think proper.

On motion to alter the Rule which provides for balloting in the choice of committees, and that the Vice President be empowered to nominate the committees in future; it was agreed that the motion be postponed.

Ordered, That Messrs. STROMG, BUTLER, and BURR, be the committee to consider and report what business it is necessary for the Senate to proceed on.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

TUESDAY, November 1.

The following Messages from the President of the United States were, by Mr. LEAR, his Secretary, delivered to the Vice President.

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I send you, herewith, the arrangement which has been made by me, pursuant to the act, entitled "An act repealing, after the last day of June next, the duties heretofore laid upon distilled spirits imported from abroad, and laying others in their stead, and also upon spirits distilled within the United States, and for appropriating the same," in respect to the subdivision of the several districts, created by the said act, into surveys of inspection, the appointment of officers for the same, and the assignment of compensations.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, October 31, 1791.

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I received yesterday, from the Judge of the district of South Carolina, a letter, enclosing the presentments of the grand jury to him, and stating the causes which have prevented the return of the census from that district, copies of which are now laid before you.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, November 1, 1791.

The Messages and papers were read; and the arrangement respecting the collection of the excise is as follows:

Arrangements made by the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, with respect to the subdivisions of the several districts thereof into surveys, the appointment of officers, and the assignment of compensations, pursuant to the act of Congress, passed the third day of March, 1791, entitled "An act repealing, after the last day of June next, the duties heretofore laid upon distilled spirits imported from abroad, and laying others in their stead; and also upon spirits distilled within the United States, and for appropriating the same."

New Hampshire forms one survey of inspection. The duties of inspector are performed by the supervisor; to this office Joshua Wentworth has been appointed. His compensation is a salary of five hundred dollars, and a commission of one-half per cent.

Massachusetts forms three surveys of inspection. No. 1, consists of the province of Maine; No. 2, of the counties of Essex, Middlesex, Worcester, Hampshire, and Berkshire; No. 3, of the residue of the State. Nathaniel Gorham has been appointed supervisor; his compensation is a salary of eight hundred dollars, and a commission of one-half per cent. The supervisor performs the duties of inspector of survey No. 1. Jonathan Jackson has been appointed inspector of survey No. 2, and Leonard Jarvis for survey No. 3. The compensation to each of these inspectors is a salary of five hundred dollars, and a commission of one-half per cent.

Rhode Island forms one survey. The duties of inspector are performed by the supervisor. John S. Dexter has been appointed to this office, with an allowance of a salary of five hundred dollars, and a commission of one-half per cent.

Connecticut forms one survey. The duties of inspector are performed by the supervisor, who is John Chester. His compensation is a salary of six hundred dollars, and a commission of one-half per cent.

Vermont forms one survey, of which the supervisor performs the duties of inspector. Noah Smith has been appointed to this office. His allowance is a salary of four hundred dollars, and a commission of one half per cent.

New York forms one survey, of which the supervisor acts as inspector. William S. Smith has been appointed to this office, with a salary of eight hundred dollars, and a commission of one-half per cent.

New Jersey forms one survey. The supervisor performs the duties of inspector. To this office, Aaron Dusham has been appointed. His compensation is a salary of four hundred dollars, and a commission of one-half per cent.

Pennsylvania forms four surveys. No. 1, consists of the city and county of Philadelphia, and the counties of Bucks and Montgomery; No. 2, of the counties of Berks, Northampton, Luzerne, and Northumberland; No. 3, of the counties of Delaware, Chester, Lancaster, York, Dauphin, Cumberland, Franklin, Mifflin, and Huntingdon; No. 4, of the counties of Bedford, Westmoreland, Washington, and Allegheny. The supervisor for the district, George Clymer, acts as inspector of survey No. 1. His compensation is a salary of one thousand dollars, and a commission of one-half per cent. James Collins has been appointed inspector of survey No. 2, Edward Hand of survey No. 3, and John Neville of survey No. 4. The allowance to each of these inspectors is a salary of four hundred and fifty dollars, and a commission of one per cent.

Delaware forms one survey, of which the supervisor acts as inspector. His compensation is a salary of four hundred dollars, and a commission of one per cent. Henry Latimer, who was appointed supervisor, has resigned his office.

Maryland forms two surveys. No. 1, comprehends the counties of St. Mary's, Somerset, Calvert, Queen Anne's, Caroline, Kent, Charles, Talbot, Dorchester, Baltimore, Anne Arundel, Worcester, Hartford, Cecil, and Prince George's. No. 2, consists of the counties of Montgomery, Washington, Frederick, and Allegany. The supervisor of the district, George Gale, officiates as inspector of survey No. 1. His compensation is a salary of seven hundred dollars, and a commission of one per cent. Philip Thomas has been appointed inspector of survey No. 2, with a salary of four hundred and fifty dollars, and a commission of one per cent.

Virginia has been divided into seven surveys of inspection. No. 1, consists of the counties of Lancaster, Northumberland, Richmond, Westmoreland, King George, Caroline, Hanover, Henrico, Charles City, James City, Warwick, Elizabeth City, York, Gloucester, Mathews, Middlesex, Essex, King and Queen, King William, and New Kent; No. 2, of the counties of Stafford, Prince William, Fairfax, Loudon, Fauquier, Culpeper, Orange, Albemarle, Louisa, and Spotsylvania; No. 3, of the counties of Goochland, Fluvanna, Amherst, Bedford, Franklin, Henry, Patrick, Pittsylvania, Halifax, Charlotte, Mecklenburg, Lunenburg, Nottingham, Amelia, Powhatan, Cumberland, Buckingham, Prince Edward, and Campbell; No. 4, of the counties of Princess Anne, Chesterfield, Norfolk, Isle of Wight, Sussex, Surry, Prince George, Dinwiddie, Brunswick, Greensville, Southampton, Nansemond, Accomack, and Northampton; No. 5, of Frederick, Berkley, Hampshire, Hardy, Monongalia, Ohio, Harrison, Randolph, Pendleton, Augusta, Rockingham, and Shenandoah; No. 6, of the counties of Rockbridge, Botetourt, Montgomery, Wythe, Washington, Russell, Greenbrier, and Kanawha; No. 7, consists of the district of Kentucky.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Edward Carrington has been appointed supervisor, with a salary of one thousand dollars, and a commission of one per cent. Drury Ragdale has been appointed inspector of survey No. 1; Edward Stevens of No. 2; Mayo Carrington of No. 3; Thomas Newton of No. 4; Edward Smith of No. 5; James Brackenridge of No. 6; and Thomas Marshall of No. 7. The compensation to these officers are to each, a salary of four hundred and fifty dollars, and a commission of one per cent.

North Carolina forms five surveys. No. 1, consists of the counties of Wilmington, Onslow, New Hanover, Brunswick, Bladen, Duplin, Anson, Richmond, Moore, Cumberland, Robertson, and Sampson; No. 2, of the counties of Carteret, Hyde, Beaufort, Pitt, Craven, Jones, Dobbs, Johnson, and Wayne; No. 3, of the counties of Currituck, Camden, Pasquotank, Perquimans, Chowan, Gates, Hartford, and Tyrrel; No. 4, of the counties of Northampton, Martin, Halifax, Nash, Edgecomb, Warren, Franklin, Caswell, Orange, Randolph, Grandville, Wake, and Chatham; No. 5, of the counties of Mecklenburg, Montgomery, Row, Iredell, Surry, Stokes, Rockingham, Guilford, Lincoln, Rutherford, Burke, and Wilkes. William Polk has been appointed supervisor, and a salary of seven hundred dollars, and a commission of one per cent. have been assigned him as a commissioner of survey No. 1; John Daves of No. 2; Thomas Benbury of No. 3; John Whitaker of No. 4; and Joseph M'Dowell, the elder, of No. 5. The compensation to the inspectors of surveys Nos. 1, 2, and 3, are to each a commission of two per cent.; those inspectors being also officers of the customs. A salary of four hundred and fifty dollars, and a commission of one per cent. have been assigned as a compensation to the inspectors of surveys Nos. 4 and 5, respectively.

South Carolina forms three surveys. No. 1, consists of the counties of Charleston, Berkeley, Washington, Marion, Bartholomew, Charleston, Granville, Hilton, Lincoln, Shrewsbury, Winton, Orange, and Lewisburgh; No. 2, of the counties of Winaw, Williamsburgh, Liberty, Kingston, Darlington, Chesterfield, Marlborough, Clarendon, Clarendon, Lancaster, Kershaw, Richland, Fairfield, Chester, and York; No. 3, of the counties of Edgefield, Abbeville, Newbury, Laurens, Union, Spartanburg, Greenville, and Pendleton. The duties of inspector of survey No. 1, are performed by the supervisor, Daniel Stevens, to whom a salary of seven hundred dollars, and a commission of one per cent. have been assigned as a compensation. Benjamin Cudworth has been appointed inspector of survey No. 2, and Sylvanus Walker of No. 3. The compensation assigned to the inspector of survey No. 2, is a salary of three hundred dollars, and a commission of two per cent.; to the inspector of survey No. 3, a salary of four hundred and fifty dollars, and a commission of one per cent.

Georgia forms one survey. The supervisor, John Matthews, officiates as inspector. The compensation assigned him is a salary of five hundred dollars, and a commission of one per cent.

The commission, in each case, is computed upon the nett product of the duties on spirits distilled within the jurisdiction of the officer to whom it is allowed; which nett product is determined by deducting, at each stage of the compensation, all preceding charges.

With regard to the ports, the following arrangements have been made: At the ports at which there are both a collector and a surveyor, the latter has been appointed an inspector; where there is a collector only, he has been appointed; and where there is a surveyor only, he has been appointed. The ports at which neither collector nor surveyor resides, have been placed under the inspection of the collector or surveyor of the district to which they belong, as the one or the other is the inspector of the revenue for the port where he resides. The duties of these inspectors are confined to spirits imported from abroad; and, as they bear an analogy to those which they have been accustomed to perform, no compensation has been assigned. The officers, directed by the 18th section of the law to be appointed by the supervisors, have been denominated collectors of the revenue. Their number has been of necessity left to the discretion of the supervisor, with these general limitations, that they should be, in all cases, as few as the proper execution of the business would permit; and that, in regard to the collection of the duties on stills, one for each county would suffice; but this regulation necessarily varies as the stills are more or less dispersed. Where they are much scattered, two, three, or more counties, have been assigned to the same person. The compensation to these officers is a commission on the sums collected by each, of two per cent. on the product of the duties on spirits distilled from foreign materials, and of four per cent. on the product of the duties arising from spirits distilled from domestic materials, whether per gallon or by the still. This difference was dictated by the different nature of the business.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, October 31, 1791.

By order of the President of the United States:

ALEXANDER HAMILTON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Ordered, That the Message from the President of the United States, and the papers therein referred to, lie for consideration.

Mr. STRONG, from the committee appointed yesterday to consider the necessary business to be acted on, reported as follows:

That, in the opinion of the committee, it will be proper for the Senate to proceed on the following business:

1. The establishing of a Mint.
2. The fixing the standard of Weights and Measures.
3. The determining the time for choosing the Electors of the President and Vice President, and the day on which they shall give their votes, and prescribing the mode of transmitting the votes to the seat of Government.
4. Providing compensation for the officers of the Judicial Courts of the United States, and for jurors and witnesses.
5. The bill postponed in the Senate, at the last session, for establishing offices for the purpose of Granting Lands within the territories of the United States.
6. The bill, postponed in like manner, concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls.

To which report the Senate agreed.

The petition of William Hort, in behalf of Isabella, Martha, and Mary, daughters of John Bush, late of the second continental regiment in the State of South Carolina, praying that the benefits of the resolutions of Congress, of 15th May, 1778, and 24th August, 1780, may be extended to them, for the reasons mentioned in the petition.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to report thereon to the Senate.

Ordered, That Messrs. IZARD, MONROE, and

NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

LANGDON, be a committee to take into consideration the subject relative to Weights and Measures, and report their opinion thereon.

Ordered, That Messrs. RUTHERFORD, SHERMAN, and BURR, be a committee to report a bill determining the time of choosing the Electors of President and Vice President, and the day in which they shall give their votes, and prescribing the mode of transmitting the votes to the seat of Government.

Ordered, That Messrs. HENRY, STRONG, and MONROE, be a committee to report a bill providing compensation for the officers of the Judicial Courts of the United States, and for jurors and witnesses.

Ordered, That Messrs. KING, FOSTER, MONROE, STRONG, and BUTLER, be a committee to report a bill for establishing offices for the purpose of Granting Lands within the territories of the United States.

Ordered, That Messrs. MORRIS, CABOT, and ELLSWORTH, be a committee to report a bill concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls.

Ordered, That Messrs. BURR, BUTLER, and ROBINSON, be a committee to revise the Rules, and report such alterations and additions as may be necessary.

WEDNESDAY, November 2.

The petition of the distillers of the city of New York was read, praying for such alteration as may be thought expedient in the act repealing, after the last day of June next, the duties heretofore laid upon distilled spirits imported from abroad, and laying others in their stead; and also upon spirits distilled within the United States, and for appropriating the same.

Ordered, That this petition be sent to the House of Representatives.

The memorial of James Sinkler, praying to be enabled to fund certain indents, in lieu of those destroyed by fire, was read, and referred to the Secretary of the Treasury to report thereon to the Senate.

The petition of John Mangnall, for compensation for certain losses sustained in the sea service during the late war, was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

THURSDAY, November 3.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act granting further time for making return of the enumeration of the inhabitants in the district of South Carolina," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The aforementioned bill was read the first time, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be lawful for the marshal of the district of South Carolina to complete and make return of the enumeration of the inhabitants of the said district to the President of the United States, in the form and manner prescribed by the act, entitled "An act providing for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States," at any time on or before the first day of March next; any thing in the said recited act to the contrary notwithstanding.

And be it further enacted, That the marshal of the said district shall be exonerated of and from all penalties and forfeitures to which he became liable for not making the said returns to the President within the time prescribed by the act aforesaid.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading.

Ordered, That the petition of John Mangnall, be referred to the Secretary of State, to report thereon to the Senate.

FRIDAY, November 4.

STEPHEN R. BRADLEY, from the State of Vermont, appeared, produced his credentials, and took his seat.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill for granting further time for making return of the enumeration of the inhabitants of the district of South Carolina:

The bill was amended, by striking out the word "recited," at the end of the first section, and also the second section of the bill.

The rule being dispensed with, the bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Ordered, That the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the amendments to this bill.

The petition of Charles Colville, of the city of Philadelphia, was read, praying to have a sum of money reimbursed his brothers, who are in advance thereof, to redeem him from captivity at Algiers, and for allowance for his expenses and sufferings.

Ordered, That the petition be referred to Messrs. BUTLER, LANGDON, MORRIS, KING, and STRONG, to consider and report what is proper to be done thereon.

Ordered, That all communications made to the Senate on the subject of the American prisoners at Algiers, and now on file in the Secretary's office, be referred to the same committee, and that they be instructed to report generally thereon.

MONDAY, November 7.

The Senate proceeded to class the Senators from the State of Vermont, in conformity to the resolution of the 14th of May, 1789, and as the Constitution requires. Whereupon,

No. 3 and a blank were, by the Secretary, put into the box, when Mr. ROBINSON drew the blank, and Mr. BRADLEY drew No. 3; Mr. BRADLEY is accordingly of the class whose seats will be vacated in the Senate at the expiration of four years from March, 1791.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

The numbers 1 and 2 were then put into the box, when Mr. Robinson drew No. 1, who is accordingly of the class whose seats will be vacated in the Senate at the expiration of six years from March, 1791.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill granting further time for making return of the enumeration of the inhabitants in the district of South Carolina; and they have ordered that a committee be appointed, jointly, with such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, for the purpose of enrolling bills.

The Senate took into consideration the order of the House of Representatives, appointing a joint Committee on Enrolled Bills, and it was agreed to; and, ordered, that Mr. RUTHERFORD be of the committee on the part of the Senate.

Ordered, That the Secretary acquaint the House of Representatives with the agreement of the Senate, to the appointment of a joint committee for the purpose above mentioned.

The Report of the Trustees of the Sinking Fund was read, as follows:

The Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, the Chief Justice, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General, respectfully report to the Congress of the United States of America:

That, pursuant to the act, entitled "An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt," and, in conformity to two resolutions agreed upon by them, one on the fifteenth day of January, another on the fifteenth day of August last, and severally approved by the President of the United States, they have caused purchases of the said debt to be made, through the agency, respectively, of Samuel Meredith, Treasurer of the United States, William Seton, Cashier of the Bank of New York, Benjamin Lincoln, Collector of the district of Boston and Charlestown, and William Heth, Collector of the district of Bermuda Hundred, to the amount of eight hundred fifty-two thousand six hundred seventy-seven dollars and forty-six cents, and for which there have been paid five hundred forty-eight thousand nine hundred twenty-four dollars and fourteen cents, in specie; as will more particularly appear by the several documents No. 1 to 8, herewith submitted as a part of this report, and which specify the places where, the times when, the prices at which, and the persons of whom, the said purchases have been made.

That, though the statements of William Seton and Benjamin Lincoln have not yet passed through the forms of a settlement, it appears, by the document No. 8, being a certified transcript from the books of the Treasury, that the amount of the stock, by them respectively reported to have been purchased, has been duly transferred to the said books.

That the purchases now, and heretofore reported, amount in the whole to one million one hundred thirty-one thousand three hundred sixty-four dollars, and seventy-six cents, for which there have been paid six hundred ninety-nine thousand one hundred sixty-three dollars, and thirty-eight cents in specie.

Signed in behalf of the Board:

JOHN ADAMS.

Statement of the purchases of Public Stock by the Agents of the Trustees named in the act for the reduction of the Public Debt.

Amount of six per cent stock.	Amount of three per cent stock.	Amount of deferred stock.	Total amount of stocks purchased.	Amount of specie paid for the purchases.
311,123 44	309,621 66	610,619 76	1,131,364 76	699,163 38
37,014 34	28,720 00	2,712 66	68,447 00	50,005 34
32,192 7	27,466 46	14,714 77	74,373 80	49,934 09
-	41,666 67	40,000 00	81,666 67	60,000 00
-	12,482 21	41,648 80	54,031 1	33,457 31
-	13,391 8	173,708 88	186,999 96	110,542 69
5,627 94	94,487 67	138,605 87	238,721 48	148,984 71
42,198 91	14,798 63	11,779 18	68,776 73	48,660 68
37,781 68	15,402 51	26,477 13	79,661 32	61,449 32
156,308 50	61,306 33	61,073 47	278,687 30	150,239 24
Dls. Cts.	Dls. Cts.	Dls. Cts.	Dls. Cts.	Dls. Cts.
Amount of six per cent stock.	Amount of three per cent stock.	Amount of deferred stock.	Total amount of stocks purchased.	Amount of specie paid for the purchases.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

ors of President and Vice President; and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

FRIDAY, November 13.

A Letter from the Treasurer of the United States of this date, with his account of payments and receipts in indents of interest to the 30th of September, 1791, were read, and ordered to lie for consideration.

A Letter from the President of the General Assembly of the French colony of St. Domingo, explaining the reasons of the late embargo on the American shipping at that island, &c., was read; and ordered to be sent to the House of Representatives.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill to determine the time for choosing Electors of President and Vice President, and, after agreeing to sundry amendments, Ordered, that it be re-committed, and that Messrs. KING and BUTLER be added to the committee.

A Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, of this date, together with a Return of the Imports of the United States, was read; and ordered to lie for consideration.

MONDAY, November 21.

The Senate assembled, but the committees not being ready to report, no business was done.

TUESDAY, November 22.

Mr. RUTHERFORD, from the committee to whom was referred the bill to determine the time of choosing Electors of President and Vice President, reported several amendments, which were agreed to, and the further consideration of the bill was postponed.

WEDNESDAY, November 23.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill for determining the time of choosing Electors of President and Vice President of the United States;

Ordered, That the bill be re-committed, and that the committee be instructed to report a clause, making provision for the administration of Government, in case of vacancies in the offices of President and Vice President.

THURSDAY, November 24.

A Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury was read, with an estimate exhibiting the value at the several places of shipment of all foreign goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States during the year ending on the 30th day of September, 1790, conformably to the order of the Senate of the 16th of February, 1791.

Ordered, That they lie for consideration. The Report of the Secretary of War, in pursuance of the order of the Senate, on the petitions of Bernard Elliot, Samuel Wise, Benjamin Huger, John Bush, Charles Motte, and Richard Shubrick, was read.

Ordered, That the report and petitions lie on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives, informed the Senate that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration;" in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read the first time, as follows:

An Act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, 1793, and, until otherwise provided for by law, agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, the House of Representatives shall be composed of members who shall have been chosen by the people of the several States, in the proportion of one Representative for every thirty thousand persons, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution of the United States: that is to say, from the State of New Hampshire four members, the State of Massachusetts fifteen, the State of Connecticut seven, the State of Rhode Island two, the State of Vermont two, the State of New York eleven, the State of New Jersey five, the State of Pennsylvania fourteen, the State of Delaware one, the State of Maryland nine, the State of Virginia twenty-one, the State of Kentucky two, the State of North Carolina eleven, and the State of Georgia two members.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, as soon as the Marshal of the State of South Carolina shall have transmitted to him returns pursuant to the provisions by law for an enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, shall cause the Executive of the said State to be notified of the number of Representatives to be elected within the said State, according to the proportion aforesaid.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading.

FRIDAY, November 25.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration;" and, after debate, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

The petition of William W. Smith, for himself, and as administrator of Gilbert Tenant, and on behalf of George Hunter, attorney to Joseph Eaker, was read, praying for the payment of certain balances due to the surgeons in the general hospital during the late war.

Ordered, That the petition be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, to report thereon to the Senate.

MONDAY, November 28.

A Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury of the 25th, with a return of the tonnage of all the vessels employed in the import, coasting, and fishing trades, of the United States, for one year, ending the 30th of September, 1790, was communicated.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

Ordered, That the letter and return lie for consideration.

Mr. BURN, from the committee to whom was referred the bill concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls, reported amendments, which being agreed to, the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The bill, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration," was taken up; and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate. Mr. RUTHERFORD, from the committee to whom was re-committed the bill, to determine the time of choosing Electors of President and Vice President of the United States, reported amendments, which were read; and, Ordered, that the bill as proposed to be amended, be printed.

TUESDAY, November 29.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the bill concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls; and, after agreeing to sundry amendments,

Resolved, That this bill pass; that the title thereof be "An act concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls;" that it be engrossed, and that the Secretary carry it to the House of Representatives, and desire their concurrence.

The bill is as follows:

An Act concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls.

For carrying into full effect the Convention between his Most Christian Majesty and the United States of America, entered into for the purpose of defining and establishing the functions and privileges of their respective Consuls and Vice Consuls—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives assembled, That where, in the seventh article of the said Convention, it is agreed that when there shall be no consul or vice consul of the Most Christian King, he shall attend to the saving of the wreck of any French vessel stranded on the coasts of the United States, or that the residence of the said consul or vice consul (he not being at the place of the wreck) shall be more distant from the said place than that of the competent judge of the country, the latter shall immediately proceed to perform the office therein prescribed; the district judge of the United States of the district in which such wreck shall happen, shall protect therein according to the tenor of the said article. The district judges of the United States shall also, within their respective districts, be the competent judges for the purposes expressed in the ninth article of the said Convention, and it shall be incumbent on them to give aid to the consuls and vice consuls of his Most Christian Majesty, in arresting and securing deserters from vessels of the French nation, according to the tenor of the said article.

And where, by any article of the said Convention, the consuls and vice consuls of his Most Christian Majesty are entitled to the aid of the competent executive officers of the country, in the execution of any precept, the marshals of the United States, and their deputies, shall, within their respective districts, be the competent officers, and shall give their aid according to the tenor of the stipulations.

And whenever commitments to the jails of the country shall become necessary, in pursuance of any stipulation of the said Convention, they shall be to such jails within the respective districts as other commitments under the authority of the United States are by law made.

And, for the direction of the consuls and vice consuls of the United States, in certain cases,

Sec. 2. Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That they shall have right in the ports or places to which they are or may be severally appointed, of receiving the protests or declarations, which such captains, masters, crews, passengers, and merchants, as are citizens of the United States, may respectively choose to make there; and the copies of the said acts, duly authenticated by the said consuls or vice consuls, under the seal of their consulates, respectively, shall receive faith in law equally as their originals would in all courts in the United States. It shall be their duty, where the laws of the country permit, to take possession of the personal estate left by any citizen of the United States, who shall die within their consulate, leaving there no legal representative, partner in trade, or trustee by him appointed to take care of his effects; they shall inventory the same, with the assistance of two merchants of the United States, or, for want of them, of any others at their choice; shall collect the debts due to the deceased, in the country where he died, and pay the debts due from his estate, which he shall have there contracted; shall sell, at auction, after reasonable public notice, such part of the estate as shall be of a perishable nature, and such further part, if any, as shall be necessary for the payment of his debts, and at the expiration of one year from his decease, the residue; and the balance of the estate they shall transmit to the Treasury of the United States, to be held in trust for the legal claimants. But if, at any time before such transmission, the legal representative of the deceased shall appear and demand his effects in their hands, they shall deliver them up, being paid their fees, and shall cease their proceedings.

For the information of the representative of the deceased, it shall be the duty of the consul or vice consul, authorized to proceed as aforesaid in the settlement of his estate, immediately to notify his death in one of the gazettes published in the consulate, and also to the Secretary of State, that the same may be notified in the State to which the deceased shall belong; and he shall also, as soon as may be, transmit to the Secretary of State an inventory of the effects of the deceased, taken as before directed.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said consuls and vice consuls, in cases where ships or vessels of the United States shall be stranded on the coasts of their consulates, respectively, shall, as far as the laws of the country will permit, take proper measures, as well for the purpose of saving the said ships or vessels, their cargoes and appurtenances, as for storing and securing the effects and merchandise saved, and for taking an inventory or inventories thereof; and the merchandise and effects saved, with the inventory or inventories thereof, taken as aforesaid, shall, after deducting therefrom the expense, be delivered to the owner or owners: Provided, That no consul or vice consul shall have authority to take possession of any such goods, wares, merchandise, or other property, when the master, owner, or consignee thereof, is present or capable of taking possession of the same.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for every consul and vice consul of the United States to take and receive the following fees of office, for the services he shall have performed:

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

For authenticating, under the consular seal, every protest, declaration, deposition, or other act, which such captains, masters, mariners, seamen, passengers, merchants, or others, as are citizens of the United States, may respectively choose to make, the sum of two dollars.

For the taking into possession, inventorying, selling, and finally settling and paying, or transmitting, as aforesaid, the balance due on the personal estate left by any citizen of the United States, who shall die within the limits of his consulate, five per centum on the gross amount of such estate.

For taking into possession, and otherwise proceeding on, any such estate which shall be delivered over to the legal representative before a final settlement of the same, as is heretofore directed, two and a half per centum on such part delivered over as shall not be in money, and five per centum on the gross amount of the residue.

And it shall be the duty of the consuls and vice consuls of the United States to give receipts for all fees which they shall receive by virtue of this act, expressing the particular services for which they are paid.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That, in case it be found necessary for the interest of the United States, that a consul or consuls be appointed to reside on the coast of Barbary, the President be authorized to allow an annual salary, not exceeding two thousand dollars, to each person so to be appointed: Provided, That such salary be not allowed to more than one consul for any one of the States on the said coast.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That every consul and vice consul shall, before they enter on the execution of their trusts, or if already in the execution of the same, within one year from the passing of this act, or if resident in Asia, within two years, give bond, with such sureties as shall be approved by the Secretary of State, in a sum of not less than two thousand, nor more than ten thousand dollars, conditioned for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office according to law; and also for truly accounting for all moneys, goods, and effects, which may come into his possession by virtue of this act, and the said bond shall be lodged in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That, to prevent the mariners and seamen employed in vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, in cases of shipwreck, sickness, or captivity, from suffering in foreign ports, it shall be the duty of the consuls and vice consuls, respectively, from time to time, to provide for them in the most reasonable manner, at the expense of the United States, subject to such instructions as the Secretary of State shall give, and not exceeding an allowance of twelve cents to a man per diem; and all masters and commanders of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, and bound to some port of the same, are hereby required and enjoined to take such mariners or seamen on board of their ships or vessels, at the request of the said consuls or vice consuls, respectively, and to transport them to the port in the United States to which such ships or vessels may be bound, free of cost or charge; but that the said mariners or seamen shall, if able, be bound to do duty on board such ships or vessels, according to their several abilities: Provided, That no master or captain of any ship or vessel shall be obliged to take a greater number than two men to every one hundred tons burthen of said ship or vessel, on any one voyage; and if any such captain or master shall refuse the same, on the request or order of the consul or vice consul, such captain or master shall forfeit and pay the sum of thirty dollars for each mariner or seaman so refused; to be recovered for the benefit of the United States, by the said consul or vice consul, in his own name, in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That citizens of the United States appointed to reside in foreign ports, and places as consuls or vice consuls of the United States, shall be enabled to own any ships or vessels in their own names, respectively, or in partnership with any other citizen or citizens of the United States residing within the said States, and be entitled to all the privileges and advantages in regard to such ships or vessels, as if such consuls or vice consuls, owning said ships or vessels, actually resided within any port or place within the United States; any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That where a ship or vessel belonging to citizens of the United States is sold in a foreign port or place, the master, unless the crew are liable by their contract, or do consent to be discharged there, shall send them back to the State where they entered on board, or furnish them with means sufficient for their return, to be ascertained by the consul or vice consul of the United States having jurisdiction of the port or place. And in case of the master's refusal, the said consul or vice consul may (if the laws of the land permit it) cause his ship, goods, and person, to be arrested and held until he shall comply with his duty herein.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the specification of certain powers and duties in this act, to be exercised or performed by the consuls and vice consuls of the United States, shall not be construed to the exclusion of others resulting from the nature of their appointments, or any treaty or convention under which they may act.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill to determine the time of choosing Electors of President and Vice President, and, after agreeing to sundry amendments, Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading. The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration," and, after debate, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

The petition of John Arthur and others, of the city of New York, distillers of Geneva spirits, was read, in which they pray for such alterations in the mode of collecting the excise on that article as Congress may think expedient.

Ordered, That the petition be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

WEDNESDAY, November 30.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the bill to determine the time of choosing Electors of President and Vice President, and, after agreeing to amend the same,

Resolved, That this bill pass; that the title thereof be "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President;" that the bill be engrossed, and that the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives therein.

The engrossed bill is as follows:

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

An Act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, except in case of an election of a President and Vice President of the United States, prior to the ordinary period, as hereinafter specified, Electors shall be appointed in each State, for the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December, 1792, and within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December in every fourth year succeeding the last election.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Electors shall meet and give their votes on the said first Wednesday in December, at such place in each State as shall be directed by the authority thereof; and the Electors in each State shall make and sign three certificates of all the votes by them given, and shall seal up the same, certifying on each that a list of the votes of such State for President and Vice President is contained therein; and shall, by writing, under their hands, or under the hands of a majority of them, appoint a person to take charge of and deliver to the President of the Senate, at the seat of Government, before the first Wednesday in January then next ensuing, one of the said certificates; and the said Electors shall forthwith forward, by the post office, to the President of the Senate, at the seat of Government, one other of the said certificates, and shall forthwith cause the other of the said certificates to be delivered to the Judge of that district in which the said Electors shall assemble.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Executive authority of each State shall cause three lists of the names of the Electors of such State to be made and certified, and to be delivered to the Electors on or before the said first Wednesday in December, and the said Electors shall annex one of the said lists to each of the lists of their votes.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That if a list of votes from any State shall not have been received at the seat of Government on the said first Wednesday in January, that then the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in whose custody such list shall have been lodged, who shall forthwith transmit the same to the seat of Government.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That Congress shall be in session on the second Wednesday in February, 1793, and on the second Wednesday in February succeeding every meeting of the Electors; and the said certificates, or so many of them as shall have been received, shall then be opened, the votes counted, and the persons who shall fill the offices of President and Vice President ascertained and declared, agreeably to the Constitution.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That, in case there shall be no President of the Senate at the seat of Government, on the arrival of the persons intrusted with the lists of the votes of the Electors, then such persons shall deliver the lists of votes in their custody into the office of the Secretary of State, to be safely kept and delivered over, as soon as may be, to the President of the Senate.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the persons appointed by the Electors to deliver the lists of votes to the President of the Senate, shall be allowed, on the delivery of the said lists, twenty-five cents for every mile of the estimated distance, by the most usual road, from the place of meeting of the Electors to the seat of Government of the United States.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That if any person appointed to deliver the votes of the Electors to the President of the Senate, shall, after accepting of his appointment, neglect to perform the services required of him by this act, he shall forfeit the sum of one thousand dollars.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President of the United States, the President of the Senate pro tempore, and in case there shall be no President of the Senate, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being, shall act as President of the United States, until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That whenever the offices of President and Vice President shall both become vacant, the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause a notification thereof to be made to the Executive of every State, and shall also cause the same to be published in at least one of the newspapers printed in each State, specifying that Electors of the President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing: Provided, That there shall be the space of two months between the date of such notification and the said first Wednesday in December; but if there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December, and if the term for which the President and Vice President last in office were elected shall not expire on the third day of March next ensuing, then the Secretary of State shall specify in the notification that the Electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December, in the year next ensuing, within which time the Electors shall accordingly be appointed or chosen; and the Electors shall meet and give their votes on the said first Wednesday in December, and the proceedings and duties of the said Electors, and others, shall be pursuant to the directions prescribed in this act.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the only evidence of a refusal to accept, or of a resignation of, the office of President or Vice President, shall be an instrument in writing declaring the same, and subscribed by the person refusing to accept, or resigning, as the case may be, and delivered into the office of the Secretary of State.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That the term of four years, for which a President and Vice President shall be elected, shall, in all cases, commence on the fourth day of March next succeeding the day on which the votes of the Electors shall have been given.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill, sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration," and, Ordered, That Messrs. ELLSWORTH, BURR, BUTLER, STRONG, and MONROE, be a committee to revise the apportionment of Representatives in the bill.

THURSDAY, December 1.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids,

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

and other persons," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read the first time, as follows:

An Act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Comptroller of the Treasury adjust the claims of the widows and orphans, respectively, as the case may be, of the late Captain Robert Lewis, Colonel William Douglas, Colonel Owen Roberts, Major Andrew Leitch, Captain William White, Lieutenant John Harris, Colonel William Bond, Lieutenant Wadleigh Noyes, Lieutenant-colonel Bernard Elliot, Major Samuel Wise, Major Benjamin Huger, Lieutenant John Bush, Major Charles Motte, and Captain Richard Shubrick, deceased, all of whom were killed or died in the service of the United States, for the seven years half pay stipulated by the resolve of Congress of the 24th day of August, 1780; and that the Register of the Treasury do issue his certificates accordingly.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Department of War be, and he hereby is, required to place on the invalid list Timothy Mix, disabled in the late war, by the loss of his right hand, while in the service of the United States, at the rate of five dollars per month, to commence on the 4th day of February, 1783; That the said Secretary place on the invalid list Abel Turney, mariner, disabled while in the service of the United States, at the rate of one dollar per month, to commence on the 1st day of January, 1781.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the arrears of the said pensions be paid as the laws direct in similar cases.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Comptroller of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to adjust the accounts of Joseph Pamhill, a Lieutenant-colonel in the service of the United States, during the late war, and to allow him the usual commutation of the half pay for life of a Lieutenant-colonel; and that the Register of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, required to grant a certificate for the amount thereof accordingly: That the Comptroller adjust the account of the late Brigadier-general De Haas, admitting to the credit of the said account such sums as by evidence shall appear to have been advanced for the public service; and that the said Register do grant a certificate for the balance due on such settlement: That the said Comptroller adjust the account of Thomas McIntire, a Captain in the service of the United States, during the late war, and allow him the usual commutation of the half pay for life of a captain; and that the said Register grant a certificate for the amount thereof accordingly.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Comptroller of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, required to adjust the account of Francis Suzor Debevere, a Surgeon's-mate in the service of the United States, during the late war, and who remained in captivity to the end thereof; and that the Register of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, required to grant a certificate for the amount which shall be found due for the services of the said Francis Suzor Debevere: That the said Comptroller adjust the account of Robert King, as a Lieutenant, discharged upon the principles of the act of the late Congress, passed the 24th day of November, 1778; and that the said Register grant a certificate accordingly: That the Comptroller adjust the account of Lemuel Sherman, as a Sailing-master of a galley on Lake Champlain, and as such taken prisoner; and that the said Register grant a certificate accordingly.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That there be granted to Nicholas Ferdinand Westfall, who left the British service and joined the army of the United States, during the late war, one hundred acres of unappropriated land in the western territory of the United States, free of all charges; and, also, the sum of three hundred and sixty-six dollars, out of any money appropriated to the contingent charges of Government.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading.

FRIDAY, December 2.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons."

Ordered, That all bills, after the first reading, be printed for the use of the Senate.

MONDAY, December 5.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of David Cook and Thomas Campbell," in which they ask the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read the first time, as follows:
An Act for the relief of David Cook and Thomas Campbell.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That David Cook, a Captain of artillery in the late war, and who, being shot through the body at the battle of Monmouth, is rendered incapable to obtain his livelihood by labor, shall be placed on the pension list of the United States, and shall be entitled to one-third of his monthly pay as a Captain of artillery: Provided, That he return into the Treasury office two-thirds of his commutation of half pay, being the proportion of his pension to the amount of his commutation.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That Thomas Campbell be placed on the pension list, and that the half pay of a Captain of infantry be allowed to the said Thomas Campbell, who has been so injured by repeated wounds in the service of his country that he is unable to support himself by labor; the half pay to commence from the 3d day of November, 1791; anything in the ordinance of Congress of the 11th day of July, 1788, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading. The Senate then proceeded in the second reading of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons."

Ordered, That this bill be committed to Messrs. WINGATE, MORRIS, and GUNN, to report generally thereon.

A Letter from the Treasurer of the United States of the 3d instant, together with his specie accounts made up to the 30th of September, 1791, were read; and ordered to lie for consideration.

Mr. ELLSWORTH, from the committee to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration," and reported amendments; and, after debate, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

TUESDAY, December 6.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of David Cook and Thomas Campbell," and,

Ordered, That this bill be referred to the committee appointed yesterday to take into consideration the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," to report thereon.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration;" and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER reported from the committee to whom was referred the petition of Charles Colvill, on the 4th of November last, and to whom was also referred the communications relative to the prisoners at Algiers; and the report being read, it was ordered to lie for consideration.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have appointed a committee on their part, jointly with such committee as shall be appointed on the part of the Senate, to consider and report to Congress the most eligible manner for carrying into effect the Resolution of the United States in Congress assembled, of the 17th of August, 1783, directing that an Equestrian Statue of General WASHINGTON should be erected.

The resolution was then read; and ordered that the consideration thereof be postponed until to-morrow.

WEDNESDAY, December 7.

The petition of William B. Gould was read, praying that the Auditor of the Treasury may be empowered to adjust the accounts of his late father, a surgeon in the service of the United States, the deficiency of vouchers notwithstanding.

On motion that this petition be referred to the committee, appointed the 5th of December, to take into consideration the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," it passed in the negative.

On motion that the petition be referred to a special committee, it was agreed that this motion be postponed.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill, sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration;" and a motion was made to amend the bill, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, 1793, and, until otherwise provided for by law, agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, the House of Representatives shall be composed of members who shall have been chosen by the people of the several States, in the proportion of one Representative for every thirty-three thousand persons in each State, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution of the United States; that is to say, from the State of New Hampshire, four members; the State of Massachusetts, fourteen; the State of Connecticut, seven; the State of Rhode Island, two; the State of Vermont, two; the State of New York, ten; the State of New Jersey, five; the State of Pennsylvania, thirteen; the State of Delaware, one; the State of Maryland, eight; the State of Virginia, nineteen; the State of Kentucky, two; the State of North Carolina, ten; and the State of Georgia, two members."

And it was agreed to postpone this, to take into consideration the following motion:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, 1793, and, until otherwise provided for by law, agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, the House of Representatives shall be composed of members who shall have been chosen by the people of the several States, in the proportion of one Representative for every thirty thousand persons, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution of the United States; that is to say, from the State of New Hampshire, five members; the State of Massachusetts, sixteen; the State of Connecticut, eight; the State of Rhode Island, two; the State of Vermont, three; the State of New York, eleven; the State of New Jersey, six; the State of Pennsylvania, fourteen; the State of Delaware, two; the State of Maryland, nine; the State of Virginia, twenty-one; the State of Kentucky, two; the State of North Carolina, twelve; and the State of Georgia, two members. And if, after apportioning a Representative to every thirty thousand persons of the State of South Carolina, computed according to the rule prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, there shall remain a fractional part of the number of persons of that State, equal to, or greater than, ten thousand eight hundred and forty-two, then the people of the State of South Carolina shall be entitled to choose an additional Representative; but if such fractional part shall be less than ten thousand eight hundred and forty-two, and more than ten thousand three hundred and seventeen, then the people of the State of Georgia shall be entitled to choose three Representatives, instead of the number before mentioned to be chosen in that State."

It was then agreed to divide this last motion, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, 1793, and, until otherwise provided for by law, agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, the House of Representatives shall be composed of members who shall have been chosen by the people of the several States, in the proportion of one Representative for every thirty thousand persons, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution of the United States; that is to say, from the State of New Hampshire, five members; the State of Massachusetts, sixteen; the State of Connecticut, eight; the State of Rhode Island, two; the State of Vermont, three; the State of New York, eleven; the State of New Jersey, six; the State

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

of Pennsylvania, fourteen; the State of Delaware, two; the State of Maryland, nine; the State of Virginia, twenty-one; the State of Kentucky, two; the State of North Carolina, eleven; and the State of Georgia, two members."

And the yeas and nays being required by one-fifth of the Senators present, on this last recited clause; it was decided in the negative, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, and Rutherford.—9.
NAYS.—Messrs. Butler, Dickinson, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Monroe, Morris, Stanton, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.—15.

And on the question for the original motion postponed, the yeas and nays being required by one-fifth of the Senators present, stood as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Stanton, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.—11.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Burr, Butler, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, King, Monroe, and Morris.—13.

So it passed in the negative.

On motion that the following amendment proposed yesterday and passed in the negative, be reconsidered, to wit:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, 1793, and until otherwise provided for by law, agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, the House of Representatives shall be composed of one hundred and six members, and the number hereinafter appointed to the State of South Carolina, who shall have been chosen by the people of the several States, in proportion, as nearly as may be, to the number of inhabitants in each State, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution of the United States; that is to say, from the State of New Hampshire, four members; the State of Massachusetts, fifteen; the State of Connecticut, seven; the State of Rhode Island, two; the State of Vermont, three; the State of New York, ten; the State of New Jersey, six; the State of Pennsylvania, thirteen; the State of Delaware, two; the State of Maryland, nine; the State of Virginia, twenty; the State of Kentucky, two; the State of North Carolina, eleven; and the State of Georgia, two members."

The yeas and nays were required by one-fifth of the Senators present, and being taken, stood as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, Langdon, Robinson, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.—9.

NAYS.—Messrs. Butler, Dickinson, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, King, Monroe, Morris, Read, Rutherford, and Stanton.—16.

So it passed in the negative.

On the question to agree to the following clause of the bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, to wit:

"That is to say: From the State of New Hampshire, four members; the State of Massachusetts, fifteen; the State of Connecticut, seven; the State of Rhode Island, two; the State of Vermont, two; the State of New York, eleven; the State of New Jersey, five; the State of Pennsylvania, fourteen; the State of Delaware, one;

the State of Maryland, nine; the State of Virginia, twenty-one; the State of Kentucky, two; the State of North Carolina, eleven; and the State of Georgia, two members."

The yeas and nays being required by one-fifth of the Senators present, stood—

YEAS.—Messrs. Butler, Dickinson, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Monroe, Morris, Read, and Stanton.—13.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, King, Langdon, Robinson, Rutherford, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.—11.

So it passed in the affirmative.

And, after agreeing to sundry amendments, the bill was ordered to the third reading.

THURSDAY, December 8.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read the first time, as follows:

An Act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the service of the year 1792, and the support of the civil list of the United States, including the incidental and contingent expenses of the several departments and offices thereof, there shall be appropriated a sum of money, not exceeding three hundred and twenty-eight thousand six hundred and fifty-three dollars and fifty-six cents; that is to say:

For the compensations granted by law to the President of the United States, the Vice President, Chief Justice, associate Judges, and Attorney General, fifty-three thousand dollars.

For the like compensations to the district judges, nineteen thousand eight hundred dollars.

For the like compensations to the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and the officers and attendants of the two Houses, estimated on a session of six months' continuance, and including the traveling expenses of the members, one hundred and twenty-nine thousand seven hundred and thirty dollars.

For the like compensations to the Secretary, and officers of the several departments of the Treasury of the United States, including clerks and attendants, and the salaries of the respective loan officers, sixty thousand three hundred dollars.

For the like compensations to the Secretary and officers of the Department of State, six thousand three hundred dollars.

For the like compensations to the Secretary and officers of the Department of War, nine thousand six hundred dollars.

For the like compensations to the members of the Board of Commissioners for the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the individual States, including clerks and attendants, thirteen thousand one hundred dollars.

For the like compensations to the Governors, Judges, and other officers of the Western Territory of the United States, including contingencies, eleven thousand dollars.

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

For the payment of the annual grant to Baron Steuben, pursuant to an act of Congress, two thousand five hundred dollars.

For the payment of sundry pensions granted by the late Government, two thousand seven hundred and sixty-seven dollars and seventy-three cents.

For defraying all other incidental and contingent expenses of the civil list establishment, including firewood, stationery, together with the printing work, and all other contingent expenses of the two Houses of Congress, rent and office expenses of the three several Departments, namely: Treasury, State, War, and of the general Board of Commissioners, twenty thousand five hundred and fifty-five dollars and eighty-three cents.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That, for discharging certain liquidated claims upon the United States, for making good deficiencies in former appropriations for the support of the civil list establishment, and for aiding the fund appropriated for the payment of certain officers of the courts, jurors, and witnesses, and for the establishment of ten cutters, there shall be appropriated a sum of money not exceeding one hundred and ninety-seven thousand one hundred and nineteen dollars and forty-nine cents; that is to say:

For discharging a balance due on a liquidated claim of his Most Christian Majesty, against the United States, for supplies during the late war, nine thousand and twenty dollars and sixty-eight cents.

For payment of the principal and interest on a liquidated claim of Oliver Pollock, late commercial agent of the United States, at New Orleans, for supplies of clothing, arms, and military stores, during the late war, one hundred and eight thousand six hundred and five dollars and two cents.

For making good deficiencies in the last appropriations for the compensations to sundry officers of the civil list establishment, five thousand four hundred and seventy-one dollars.

For defraying sundry authorized expenses to the commissioners of loans in the several States, twenty-one thousand dollars.

For defraying a balance of certain liquidated and contingent expenses in the Treasury Department, two thousand eight hundred dollars.

For defraying the additional expense of the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, nineteen thousand seven hundred and seventy-two dollars and seventy-nine cents.

For making good a deficiency in former appropriations, to discharge the expenses of clerks, jurors, and witnesses, in the courts of the United States, five thousand dollars.

For the maintenance and repair of light-houses, beacons, piers, stakes, and buoys, sixteen thousand dollars.

For the expense of keeping prisoners committed under the authority of the United States, four thousand dollars.

For the expense of clerks and books in arranging the public securities, two thousand four hundred and fifty dollars.

For the purchase of hydrometers for the use of the officers in execution of the laws of the revenue, one thousand dollars.

For the further expense of building and equipping ten cutters, two thousand dollars.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That, for the support of the military establishment of the United States, in the year 1792; the payment of the annual allowances to the invalid pensioners of the United States; for defraying all expenses incident to the Indian department, and for defraying the expenses incurred in the defensive protection of the frontiers against the Indians, during the years 1790 and 1791, by virtue of the authority vested in the President of the United States, by the acts relative to the military establishment, passed the 29th of September, 1789, and the 30th of April, 1790, and for which no appropriations have been made, there shall be appropriated a sum of money not exceeding five hundred and thirty-two thousand four hundred and forty-nine dollars seventy-six cents and two-thirds of a cent; that is to say:

For the pay of the troops, one hundred and two thousand six hundred and eighty-six dollars.

For subsistence, one hundred and nineteen thousand six hundred and eighty-eight dollars and ninety-seven cents.

For clothing, forty-eight thousand dollars.

For forage, four thousand one hundred and fifty-two dollars.

For the hospital department, six thousand dollars.

For the quartermaster's department, fifty thousand dollars.

For the ordnance department, seven thousand two hundred and four dollars and sixty-four cents.

For the contingent expenses of the War Department, including maps, hire of express, allowances to officers for extra expenses, printing, loss of stores of all kinds, advertising and apprehending deserters, twenty thousand dollars.

For the discharge of certain sums due for pay and subsistence of sundry officers of the late army, and for pay of the late Maryland line, for which no appropriations have been made, ten thousand four hundred and ninety dollars and thirty-six cents.

For the payment of the annual allowances to invalid pensioners, eighty-seven thousand four hundred and sixty-three dollars sixty cents and two-thirds of a cent.

For defraying all expenses incident to the Indian department, authorized by law, thirty-nine thousand four hundred and twenty-four dollars and seventy-one cents.

For defraying the expenses incurred in the defensive protection of the frontiers, as before recited, thirty-seven thousand three hundred and thirty-nine dollars and forty-eight cents.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the several appropriations herein-before made, shall be paid and discharged out of the funds following, to wit: First, out of the sum of six hundred thousand dollars, which, by the act, entitled "An act making provision for the debt of the United States," is reserved yearly for the support of the Government of the United States, and their common defence; and, secondly, out of such surplus as shall have accrued to the end of the present year, upon the revenues heretofore established, over and above the sums necessary for the payment of interest on the public debt, during the same year, and for satisfying other prior appropriations.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading. The bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration," was read the third time, and,

On motion to expunge the first section of the bill, and substitute the following:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

assembled, That, from and after the 34 day of March, 1793, and until otherwise provided for by law, the House of Representatives shall be composed of members who shall have been chosen by the people of the several States, in the proportion of one Representative for every thirty-three thousand persons in each State, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, that is to say: from the State of New Hampshire, four members; the State of Massachusetts, fourteen; the State of Connecticut, seven; the State of Rhode Island, two; the State of Vermont, two; the State of New York, ten; the State of New Jersey, five; the State of Pennsylvania, thirteen; the State of Delaware, one; the State of Maryland, eight; the State of Virginia, nineteen; the State of Kentucky, two; the State of North Carolina, ten; and the State of Georgia, two members."

The yeas and nays being taken, stood as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Stanton, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.—12.

NAYS.—Messrs. Burr, Butler, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, King, Monroe, and Morris.—12.

The number of votes being equal, the Vice President determined the question in the affirmative; and,

On motion, that this bill pass with the last recited and the following amendment, to wit: "Strike out the words 'State of,' and insert 'dis-trict' after the word 'Carolina.'"

The yeas and nays being taken, stood—YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Ellsworth, Few, Foster, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Stanton, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.—14.
NAYS.—Messrs. Burr, Butler, Dickinson, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Monroe, and Morris.—10.

So it was resolved that this bill pass as amended.
Ordered, That the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the amendments.

FRIDAY, December 9.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792," was read the second time.

Ordered, That it be referred to Messrs. MONROE, SHERMAN, BURR, GUNN, and READ, to consider and report generally thereon.
The committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of David Cook and Thomas Campbell," reported the bill without amendment.

Ordered, That the report lie for consideration.

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

list of invalid pensioners of the United States, for reasons mentioned in the petition, was read; and, Ordered, That it be referred to the Secretary of War, to report thereon to the Senate.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of David Cook and Thomas Campbell."

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792," and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

Ordered, That Messrs. BURR, BUTLER, and STRONG, be a committee to revise the acts and resolves relative to the compensations to disabled officers and soldiers, and to the widows and orphans of deceased officers; and to report what alterations and further general regulations it will be proper to make therein.

Mr. WINGATE, from the committee on the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," reported amendments.

Ordered, That the consideration thereof be postponed.

THURSDAY, December 15.

The petition of Elijah Janes, of the State of New York, late a lieutenant in Colonel Sheldon's regiment of cavalry, that he may be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, was read; and referred to the committee appointed on the 14th instant, to consider the case of invalid pensioners at large.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives disagree to the first amendment of the Senate on the bill, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration," and agree to the other amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives on the amendment of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration," and, On motion to postpone the consideration of the bill until to-morrow se'nnight, it passed in the negative.

On motion to postpone the consideration of the bill until Monday next, it passed in the negative.
On motion to recede from the amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, the yeas and nays being required by one-fifth of the Senators present, stood as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Burr, Butler, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, King, Monroe, and Morris.—12.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Stanton, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.—12.

The numbers being equal, the Vice President determined the question in the negative.

On motion to insist on the amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and appoint a committee of conference, it passed in the negative. And it was resolved, that the Senate insist on the amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792," and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

Ordered, That Messrs. STRONG, SHERMAN, ELLSWORTH, IZARD, and BURR, be a committee to take into consideration the memorial of the Illinois and Ouabache land companies, and to report thereon.

FRIDAY, December 16.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792," and, after agreeing to sundry amendments, Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading.

MONDAY, December 19.

The petition of Gilbert Dench, of the State of Massachusetts, in behalf of the orphan children of the late Roger Dench, a lieutenant in the service of the United States, was read, praying that the said children may be authorized to receive the half pay of a lieutenant, in right of their father.

Ordered, That the petition lie on the table.
The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the bill, sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year 1792," and,

Resolved, That this bill pass, with amendments: Ordered, That the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the amendments to this bill.

[The following clause to be added to the first section of the bill, is the only material amendment, viz:

"And be it further enacted, That the compensation to the Doorkeepers of the two Houses for services which have been heretofore rendered, or may be rendered in the recess of Congress, for the year 1792, and certified by the President of the Senate, or Speaker of the House of Representatives, in manner required by law, for like services during sessions, shall be discharged out of the money heretofore appropriated for the contingent expenses of the two Houses of Congress."]

TUESDAY, December 20.

The following Message from the President of the United States was received:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you the copy of a Letter which I have received from the Governor of the Commonwealth of

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

Pennsylvania, and of sundry documents which accompanied it, relative to a contract for the purchase of a certain tract of land bounding on Lake Erie; together with a copy of a Report of the Secretary of State on the same subject.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, December 20, 1791.

The Message and papers were read; and ordered to lie for consideration.

The petition of Jonathan Woolley, late of Colonel Scammel's regiment in the service of the United States, was read, praying that he may be placed on the list of invalid pensioners.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the committee appointed December 14th, to revise the acts and resolves relative to the compensations to disabled officers and soldiers, and to the widows and orphans of deceased officers.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives adhere to their disagreement to the first amendment insisted on by the Senate, to the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration."

Mr. CABOT requested leave to bring in "a bill for the encouragement of the bank and other cod-fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein;" and the bill was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives, in which they resolve to adhere to their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the people of the several States, according to the first enumeration;" and,

On the question to adhere, the yeas and nays were required by one-fifth of the Senators present, and being taken, stood—YEA.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Robinson, Rutherford, Stanton, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate—12.

NAY.—Messrs. Burr, Butler, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Monroe, Morris, and Read—12.

The numbers being equal, the Vice President determined the question in the affirmative.

So it was resolved that the Senate adhere to their said first amendment.

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate this resolution to the House of Representatives.

WEDNESDAY, December 21.

RICHARD HENRY LEE, from the State of Virginia, attended, and took his seat.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792."

JANUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

An Act for carrying into effect a contract between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania.

For duly conveying, to the State of Pennsylvania, a certain tract of land, the right to the government and jurisdiction whereof was relinquished to the said State by a resolution of Congress, of the 4th day of September, in the year 1788, and whereof the right of soil has been sold by virtue of a previous resolution of Congress, of the 6th day of June, in the said year:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be authorized, on fulfillment of the terms stipulated on the part of the State of Pennsylvania, to issue letters patent in the name, and under the seal, of the United States, granting and conveying to the said State, forever, the said tract of land, as the same was ascertained by a survey made in pursuance of the resolution of Congress of the 6th day of June, 1788.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading.

TUESDAY, December 27.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill, sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for carrying into effect a contract between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania."

Ordered, That this bill pass to the third reading. The Senate resumed the second reading of "the bill establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States;" and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed, until Monday next.

WEDNESDAY, December 28.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the bill, sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for carrying into effect a contract between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania;" and Resolved, that this bill pass.

Mr. CABOT, from the committee to whom was referred "the bill for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein," reported amendments; and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to certify the quantum of allowance in lieu of drawback on exported, dried, and pickled fish, which hath been paid under "the act for laying a duty on goods, wares, and merchandises, imported into the United States," of the 4th of July, 1789. And also the quantum of bounty paid on the exportation of dried or pickled fish, under "the act for making further provision for the payment of the debts of the United States," of the 10th of August, 1790.

A Message from the President of the United States was received, inclosing for consideration the copy of a Letter which he had received from the Attorney General of the United States. The Message and letter were read, and ordered to lie for consideration.

THURSDAY, December 29.

The consideration of the report of the committee on "the bill for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein," was further postponed.

FRIDAY, December 30.

The following Message from the President of the United States was received:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you a copy of the ratification, by the Commonwealth of Virginia, of the articles of amendment proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States, and a copy of a Letter which accompanied said ratification, from the Governor of Virginia.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, December 30, 1791.

The papers referred to in the Message are as follow:

COUNCIL CHAMBER,

Richmond, Dec. 22, 1791.

SIR: The General Assembly, during their late session, have adopted, on the part of this Commonwealth, all the amendments proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States; their ratification whereof I do myself the honor herewith to transmit.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

HENRY LEE.

The President of the United States.

VIRGINIA:

General Assembly, begun and held at the Capitol, in the city of Richmond, on Monday, the 17th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1791.

MONDAY, December 5, 1791.

Resolved, That the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth articles of the amendments proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States, be ratified by this Commonwealth.

December 15, 1791: Agreed to by the Senate.

JOHN PRIDE, S. S.

THOS. MATTHEWS, S. H. D.

[For the ratification of the first article see ante, p. 29.]

MONDAY, January 2, 1792.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States; and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

TUESDAY, January 3.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed a bill, entitled "An act to extend the time limited for settling the accounts of the United States with the individual States," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate resumed the second reading of "the bill establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States;" and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

The bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to extend the time limited for settling the accounts of the United States with the individual States," was read the first time, as follows:

An Act to extend the time limited for settling the accounts of the U. States with the individual States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the powers of the Board of Commissioners which, by an act passed in the second session of the first Congress was established to settle the accounts between the United States and individual States, shall continue until the 1st day of July, 1798, unless the business shall be sooner accomplished.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted That, from and after the passing of this act, the pay of the principal clerk of the said Board shall be the same as the pay of a principal clerk in the Auditor's office.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading.

WEDNESDAY, January 4.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to extend the time limited for settling the accounts of the United States with the individual States."

The petition of Patrick Ferral, clerk to the Board of Commissioners for settling the accounts between the United States and individual States, was read, praying for an addition to his compensation; also, sundry communications from the said Board of Commissioners; and it was agreed that the further consideration of the last mentioned bill be postponed.

The Senate resumed the second reading of "the bill establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States;" and made some progress therein.

THURSDAY, January 5.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill, entitled "An act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States."

Ordered, That this bill pass to the third reading. The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to extend the time limited for settling the accounts of the United States with the individual States."

Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. BRADLEY, MONROE, and ELLSWORTH, to consider and report generally thereon.

The Senate resumed the second reading of "the bill for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein;" and, after agreeing to sundry amendments, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

Ordered, That the consideration of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," be the order of the day for to-morrow.

FRIDAY, January 6.

CHARLES CARROLL, from the State of Maryland, attended; and took his seat.

The Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the drawback on dried and pickled fish exported, in conformity to the order of Senate of the 26th ultimo, was read:

Ordered, That the Report, and papers therein referred to, lie for consideration.

Ordered, That the consideration of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," be further postponed.

MONDAY, January 9.

RICHARD BASSETT, from the State of Delaware, attended; and took his seat.

The petition of Isaac Ledyard, of the State of Connecticut, for the re-settlement of his account, for reasons stated in his petition, was read.

Ordered, That the petition be referred to the committee appointed on the 14th of December last, to revise the acts and resolves relative to the compensations of disabled officers and soldiers, and to the widows and orphans of deceased officers.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of "the bill establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States," and agreed to sundry amendments, as follow:

Sec. 1. Expunge the latter part of the section, and make the following the second section, to wit:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the director of the Mint shall employ as many clerks, workmen, and servants, as he shall, from time to time, find necessary, subject to the approbation of the President of the United States.

And to number the subsequent sections accordingly.

On motion to amend section sixth, by inserting after the word "accounts," in the amendment, these words:

"Of the disbursements of the said Mint shall be rendered by the director thereof, at the Treasury of the United States, for settlement, according to the rules prescribed for the adjustment of accounts against the United States, in other cases: And the said director shall, likewise, once in each year, make a report to Congress of the transactions of the said Mint, accompanied by an abstract of the settlement of said disbursements, which abstract shall be certified by the Comptroller of the Treasury."

The motion passed in the negative.

On motion to amend section 9, of the original bill, as follows:

Strike out the words "and silver."

And after the word "America," erase to the end of the section, and in lieu thereof insert—

"And upon the reverse of each of the said silver coins, in the centre of the exergue, there shall be an engraving of two hands united, and around the margin of the piece as many circles linked together as there shall be States in the Union at the time of the coinage, each circle containing the initial letters of the name of its respective State; and between the representation of

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

the united hands and the circles aforesaid, there shall be this inscription in an annular form, 'Dollar of the United States of America,' where the coinage shall be of a dollar, but where the coinage shall be of parts of a dollar, expressing the same accordingly.

"And on the reverse of each of the said copper coins, there shall be a representation of America, in the usual female figure of Justice holding balanced scales, with this inscription, 'To all their due.' And around the margin this legend, expressive of the denomination of the piece, 'Cent of the United States of America, or half cent, as the case may be.'"

This motion passed in the negative.

After further progress in the bill, the Senate adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 10.

Mr. BURR reported, from the committee appointed the 14th December last, to revise the acts and resolves relative to the compensations to disabled officers and soldiers, and to the widows and orphans of deceased officers.

Ordered, That the report lie for consideration. Mr. BRADLEY, from the committee appointed the 5th of January, on the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to extend the time limited for settling the accounts of the United States with the individual States," reported sundry amendments, which were adopted; and the bill was ordered to pass to the third reading.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee on the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons."

Ordered, That this bill be committed to Messrs. BURR, STRONG, and BUTLER, who are also to consider and report such further general provisions as they shall conceive necessary for the relief of the widows and orphans of officers who were killed, or died, and officers and soldiers who were disabled in service during the late war.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House of Representatives have passed a bill, entitled "An act to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read the first time, as follows:

An Act to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the passing of this act, the following roads be established as post roads, namely: From Wicasset, in the district of Maine, to Savannah, in Georgia, by the following route, to wit: Portland, Portsmouth, Exeter, Newburyport, Ipswich, Salem, Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Hartford, New Haven, Stratford, Fairfield, Norwalk, Stamford, New York, Newark, Elizabethtown, Brunswick, Princeton, Trenton, Bristol, Philadelphia, Chester, Wilmington, Elkton, Charleston, Havre-de-Grace, Harford, Baltimore, Bladenburg, Georgetown, Alexandria, Colchester, Dumfries, Fredericksburg, Bowling Green, Hanover Court House, Richmond, Petersburg, Halifax, Taborough, Smithfield, Fayetteville, New Bridge over Downing Creek, Cheraw Court House, Cambden, Statesburg, Columbia, Cambridge, and Augusta, and from thence to Savannah; and from Augusta to Washington, by the great falls of Ogeechee; and from Statesburg to Charleston; and from Charleston to Georgetown; from Charleston to Savannah; and from Savannah, by Newport Bridge, to Sunbury; and also from Exeter to Concord, in New Hampshire; and from Salem to Marblehead; and from Salem to Gloucester; and from Boston, by Providence, Newport, and New London, to New Haven; and from Boston through Taunton, to New Bedford; and from Taunton, through Warren and Bristol, to Newport; also, from Taunton to Plymouth, and thence to Boston, and from Springfield, in the State of Massachusetts, to Kinderhook, in the State of New York; and from Springfield, through Northfield and Charlestown, to Windsor, in Vermont; and from Stockbridge, in Massachusetts, to Bennington, Manchester, and Rutland, in Vermont; and from Hartford, by Middletown, to New London; and also, from Hartford to Norwich and Providence; and from Philadelphia, by Lancaster, Yorktown, Carlisle, Shippensburg, Bedford, and Greensburg, to Pittsburg; and from Wilmington, by Warwick, Georgetown, Cross Roads, Chestertown, Chester Mills, and Easton, to Vienna; also, from Wilmington, by Duck Creek to Doanville, and from thence, by Dagaborough, to Northampton court house, in Virginia; and from Baltimore to Annapolis, Upper Marlborough, Piscatawa, Port Tobacco, Allen's fresh, and Chaptico, to Leonardtown; and from Richmond, by Williamsburg, Yorktown, and Hampton, to Norfolk; and from Fredericksburg, by Port Royal and Tappahannock, to Urbanna; and from Petersburg, by Cabin point, Smithfield, and Suffolk, to Portsmouth, and from Suffolk to Edenton and Washington; and from Washington to Newbern, and thence to Wilmington; and from Fayetteville, by Elizabethtown, to Salisbury; and from New York to Albany; from New York to Hartford, through White Plains, North Castle, Salem, Poundridge, Ridgefield, Danbury, Newtown, New Milford, Litchfield, Harrington, and Farmington; from Elizabethtown, by Morristown, to Sussex court house; from Alexandria, by Leesburg, Shepherdstown, Martinsburg, Winchester, Stevensburg, Strasburg, Woodstock, and Rockingham court house, to Staunton; and from Richmond, by Charlottesville, Staunton, Lexington, Fincastle, Montgomery court house, Wythe court house, Abingdon, and Hawkin's court house, in the territory south of the river Ohio, to Danville, in Kentucky; and from Baltimore, by Fredericktown and Sharpsburg, to Hagerstown, and from thence to Chambersburg: Provided, That the route by which the mails are at present conveyed shall in no case be altered, without the consent of the contractors, till the contracts made by the Postmaster General shall be determined.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Postmaster General to enter into contracts, for a term not exceeding five years, for extending the line of posts, and to authorize the person or persons so contracting to receive, during the continuance of such contract, according to the rates by this act established, all the postage which shall arise on letters, newspapers, and packets, conveyed by any such post; and the roads therein designated shall, during the continuance of such contract, be deemed and considered as post roads, within the terms and provisions of this act: Provided, That no such contract shall be made to the diminution of the revenue of the General Post Office, and that a duplicate of every such contract, under hand and seal, shall, within sixty days after the execution thereof, be lodged in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there shall be established, at the seat of the Government of the United States, a General Post Office; and there shall be one Postmaster General, who shall have authority to appoint an assistant and deputy postmasters, at all places where such shall be found necessary; and he shall provide for carrying the mail of the United States by stage carriages or horses, as he may judge most expedient, and as often as he, having regard to the productiveness thereof, as well as other circumstances, shall think proper; and defray the expense thereof, with all other expenses arising on the collection and management of the revenue of the post office. He shall also have power to prescribe such regulations to the deputy postmasters, and others employed under him, as may be found necessary, and to superintend the business of the department, in all the duties that are or may be assigned to it; and also to direct the route or road, where there are more than one between the places above established; which route or road shall be considered as the post road.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General shall, once in three months, obtain from his deputies the accounts and vouchers of their receipts and expenditures, and the balances due thereon; and shall return to the Secretary of the Treasury a quarterly account of all the receipts and expenditures in the said department, to be adjusted and settled as other public accounts; and shall pay, quarterly, into the Treasury of the United States, the balance in his hands. And the Postmaster General and his assistant, and the deputy postmasters, and such as they may employ in their offices, shall, respectively, before they enter upon the duties, or be entitled to receive the emoluments of their office, take and subscribe, before some justice of the peace, the following oath or affirmation, and cause a certificate thereof to be filed in the office of the Postmaster General: "I do swear (or affirm, as the case may be,) that I will not wilfully, willingly, and knowingly, open, detain, or delay, or cause, procure permit, or suffer to be opened, detained, or delayed, any letter or packet which shall come into my hands, power, or custody, by reason of my employment in, or relating to, the post office, except by the consent of the person to whom the same is directed, or except in such cases where the party to whom such letter or packet shall be directed, or who is charged with the postage thereof, shall refuse or neglect to pay the postage; and except such letters or packets as shall be returned for want of true directions, or where the party to whom the same are addressed cannot be found; and that I will not, any way, embezzle any such letter or packet." And the contractors for carrying the mail, and their agents or servants, to whom the care of the mail shall be entrusted, shall, before their discharging the said trust, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation, and cause a certificate thereof to be filed, as aforesaid: "I do swear (or affirm, as the case may be,) that I will faithfully execute and perform all the duties required of me, and abstain from every thing forbidden by the act, entitled 'An act to establish the post office and post roads within the United States.'"

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to provide for the conveyance across any ferry of the mail and the carriage, and the horse carrying the same. And if any person shall obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or of any horse or carriage carrying the same, he shall, upon conviction, for every such offence, pay a fine, not exceeding one hundred dollars. And if any ferryman shall, by wilful negligence, or refusal to transport the mail across any ferry, delay the same, he shall forfeit and pay, for each half hour that the same shall be so delayed, a sum not exceeding ten dollars.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to give public notice, in one or more of the newspapers published at the seat of Government of the United States, for at least twelve weeks before the entering into any contract for the conveyance of the mail, that such contract is intended to be made, and the day on which it shall be concluded; describing the places from and to which such mail is to be conveyed; the time at which it is to be made up, the day and hour at which it is to be delivered, and the penalty or penalties for non-performance of the stipulations. He shall, moreover, within thirty days after the making of any contract, lodge the same, together with the proposals which he shall have received respecting the same, in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That every deputy postmaster shall keep an office, in which one or more persons shall attend, at such hours as the Postmaster General shall direct, for the purpose of performing the duties thereof; and all letters brought to any post office half an hour before the time of making up the mail at such office, shall be forwarded therein; and the letters to be delivered at any other post office shall be sealed up together, and the seal shall not be broken until they are so delivered.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General shall be allowed for his services at the rate of two thousand dollars per annum; his assistant at the rate of one thousand dollars per annum, to be paid quarterly, at the Treasury of the United States; and no fees or perquisites shall be received by either of them on account of the duties to be performed in virtue of their appointments.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the first day of March next, the deputy postmaster, and persons authorized by the Postmaster General, shall demand and receive, for the postage and conveyance of letters and packets, except such as are herein-after excepted, according to the several rates and sums following:

For the postage of every single letter to or from any place, by land, not exceeding thirty miles, six cents;

Over thirty miles, and not exceeding sixty, eight cents;

Over sixty miles, and not exceeding one hundred, ten cents;

Over one hundred miles, and not exceeding one hundred and fifty, twelve cents and a half;

Over one hundred and fifty miles, and not exceeding two hundred, fifteen cents;

Over two hundred miles, and not exceeding two hundred and fifty, seventeen cents;

Over two hundred and fifty miles, and not exceeding three hundred and fifty, twenty cents;

And to and from any place, by land, more than four hundred miles, twenty-five cents.

And every double letter shall pay double the said rates; every triple letter, triple; every packet weighing one ounce avoirdupois, to pay at the rate of four single letters for each ounce; and in that proportion for any greater weight.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That all letters

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

passing by sea, to and from the United States, in packet boats or vessels, the property of, or provided by, the United States, and all letters brought by sea into the United States, in any other ship or vessel, shall be rated and charged as follows:

For every single letter brought into, or sent from, the United States, by sea, in any packet, boat, or vessel, belonging to, or employed by, the United States, eight cents;

For every double letter, sixteen cents;

For every triple letter, twenty-four cents;

For every letter brought into the United States, or carried from one port therein to another, by sea, in any other ship or vessel, four cents, if delivered at the place where the same shall arrive; and, if directed to any other place, with the addition of the like postage as other letters are made subject to the payment of by this act.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That, if any deputy postmaster, or other person authorized by the Postmaster General, shall demand or receive any rate of postage, or any gratuity or reward, other than is provided by this act for the postage of letters or packets, on conviction thereof, he shall forfeit, for such offence, one hundred dollars, and shall be rendered incapable of holding any office under the United States.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That no ship or vessel, arriving at any port within the United States, where a post office is established, shall be permitted to report, make entry, or break bulk, till the master or commander shall have delivered to the postmaster all letters directed to any person or persons within the United States, which, under his care, or within his power, shall be brought in such ship or vessel, other than such as are directed to the owner or consignee, or person concerned in any merchandise or lading in such ship or vessel; but when a vessel shall be bound to another port than that at which she may enter, and there is no communication by post between such port of entry, and her port of delivery, the letters belonging to, or to be delivered at the said port of delivery, shall not be delivered to the postmaster, at the port of entry. And it shall be the duty of the collector, or other officer of the port empowered to receive entries of ships or vessels, to require from every master or commander of such ship or vessel, an oath or affirmation, purporting that he has delivered all such letters as aforesaid.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the postmasters, to whom such letters may be delivered, shall pay to the master, commander, or other person, delivering the same, two cents for every such letter or packet; and shall obtain, from the person delivering the same, a certificate, specifying the number of letters and packets, with the name of the ship or vessel, and the place from whence she last sailed; which certificate, together with a receipt for the money, shall be, with his half yearly accounts, transmitted to the Postmaster General, who shall credit the amount thereof to the postmaster forwarding the same.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That, if any person, other than the Postmaster General or his deputies, shall take up, receive, order, despatch, convey, carry, or deliver, any letter or letters, packet or packets, for hire or reward, on any established post road, or shall be concerned in setting up any foot or horse post, or any packet, or other vessel or boat, or any conveyance whatever, whereby the revenue of the General Post Office may be injured, every person so offending shall forfeit, for every such offence, the sum of two hundred dollars, and for continuing so to offend for one or more weeks, shall for every week, forfeit the sum of three hundred dollars.

Sec. 15. Provided, nevertheless, and be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the masters of ships and vessels, conductors of pack horses, and for carriers of goods by carts or wagons, to be carriers and deliverers of all such letters or packets, as immediately concern any merchandise or lading in such ship or vessel, or such goods or merchandise as are under the immediate care or inspection of such masters, conductors, or carriers; provided, such master, conductor, or carrier, shall deliver every such letter to the person or persons to whom it is addressed, without hire or reward: Provided, also, That it shall and may be lawful for every person to send letters or packets by any private friend, or by special messenger.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That the deputy postmasters, or agents of the Postmaster General, shall duly account, and answer to him, for all by or way letters, and shall specify the same, whether single, double, triple, or ounce weight, in the post bill; and if any deputy postmaster, or agent, shall neglect so to account, he or they, so offending, shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit, for every such offence, a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That, if any person employed in any of the departments of the General Post Office shall unlawfully detain, delay, or open, any letter, packet, newspaper, bag, or mail of letters, with which he shall be entrusted, or which shall have come to his possession, and which are intended to be conveyed by post; or, if any such person shall secrete, embezzle, or destroy, any letter, newspaper, or packet entrusted to him as aforesaid, and which shall not contain any security for, or assurance relating to, money, as hereinafter described, every such offender, being thereof duly convicted, shall, for every such offence, be fined not exceeding three hundred dollars, or imprisoned not exceeding six months, or both, according to the circumstances and aggravations of the offence. And if any person, employed as aforesaid, shall secrete, embezzle, or destroy, any letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters, with which he shall be entrusted, or which shall have come to his possession, and are intended to be conveyed by post, containing any bank note, or bank post bill, bill of exchange, warrant of the Treasury of the United States, note of assignment of stock in the funds, letters of attorney for receiving annuities or dividends, or for selling stock in the funds, or for receiving the interest thereof, or any letter of credit, or note for, or relating to, the payment of money, or other bond or warrant, draft, bill, or promissory note, whatsoever, for the payment of money; or, if any such person, employed as aforesaid, shall steal or take any of the same out of any letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters, that shall come to his possession, he shall, on conviction for any such offence, suffer death. And if any person who shall have taken charge of the mail of the United States, shall quit or desert the same before his arrival at the next post office, or shall not use diligence to arrive seasonably at the same, every such person, so offending, shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars for every such offence. And if any person concerned in carrying the mail of the United States, shall collect, receive, or carry, any letter or packet, or shall cause or procure the same to be done, contrary to this act, every such offender shall forfeit and pay, for every such offence, a sum not exceeding fifty dollars.

Sec. 18. And be it further enacted, That, if any person or persons shall rob any carrier of the mail of the United States of such mail, or if any person shall rob the mail, in which letters are sent to be conveyed by

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

post, of any letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters, or shall steal such mail, or shall steal and take from or out of the same, or from or out of any bag or mail of letters, or from or out of any post office, house, or place, for the receipt or delivery of letters or packets, sent, or to be sent, by post, any letter or packet, such offender or offenders shall, on conviction thereof, suffer death.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That the deputy postmasters shall, respectively, publish, at the expiration of every three months, in one of the newspapers published at or nearest the place of his residence, for three successive weeks, a list of all the letters then remaining in their respective offices; and, at the expiration of the next three months, shall send such of the said letters as remain on hand, as dead letters, to the General Post Office, where the same shall be opened and inspected; and if any valuable papers, or matter of consequence, shall be found therein, it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to cause a descriptive list thereof to be inserted in one of the newspapers published at the place most convenient to where the owner may be supposed to reside, if within the United States; and such letter and the contents shall be preserved, to be delivered to the person to whom the same shall be addressed, upon payment of the postage and the expense of publication.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That the following letters and packets, and no other, shall be received and conveyed by post, free of postage, under such restrictions as are hereinafter provided; that is to say: all letters and packets to or from the President or Vice President of the United States; and all letters and packets, not exceeding two ounces in weight, to or from any member of the Senate or House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Senate, or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, during their actual attendance in any session of Congress, and twenty days after such session, all letters to and from the Secretary of the Treasury and his assistant, Comptroller, Register, and Auditor of the Treasury, the Treasurer, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Postmaster General, and his assistant and deputies, under such restrictions as shall be enjoined upon the Postmaster General by the President of the United States: Provided, That no person, having the privilege of franking letters, shall frank or enclose any letter or packet, other than his own; but any public letter or packet from the Department of the Treasury may be franked by the Secretary of the Treasury or the assistant Secretary, or by the Comptroller, Register, Auditor, or Treasurer; and that, in all cases, such person shall deliver to the post office every letter or packet enclosed to him, which may be directed to any other person, noting the place from whence it came by post, and the usual postage shall be charged thereon.

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall counterfeit the hand-writing of any other person, in order to evade the payment of postage, such person or persons, so offending, and being thereof duly convicted, shall forfeit and pay, for every such offence, the sum of one hundred dollars.

Sec. 22. And be it further enacted, That every printer of newspapers may send one paper to each and every other printer of newspapers within the United States, free of postage; under such regulations as the Postmaster General shall provide.

Sec. 23. And be it further enacted, That all newspapers, conveyed in the mail, shall be under a cover, open at one end, carried in separate bags from the letters, and charged with the payment of one cent for any distance not more than one hundred miles, and one cent and a half for any greater distance; and it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General and his deputy to keep a separate account for the newspapers, and the deputy postmasters shall receive fifty per cent. on the postage of all newspapers; and if any other matter or thing be enclosed in such papers, the whole packet shall be charged agreeably to the rates established by this act for letters or packets.

Sec. 24. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow to the deputy postmasters, respectively, such commission on the moneys arising from the postage of letters and packets as he shall think adequate to their respective services: Provided, That the said commission shall not exceed twenty per centum to any deputy, other than the postmaster, at the port where the European packets do or shall steadily arrive, to whom such further allowance, in addition to the emoluments of his office, shall be made as the Postmaster General shall deem a reasonable compensation for his extra services in the receipt and despatch of letters, originally received into his office, from on board such packets, and by him forwarded to other offices: And provided, also, That the compensations aforesaid shall not exceed fifteen hundred dollars per annum to any one postmaster.

Sec. 25. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the postmasters of the respective cities of New York, Philadelphia, Annapolis, and Charleston, and of the towns of Portsmouth, in New Hampshire, Boston, Salem, Providence, Newport, and Baltimore, to cause all letters directed to persons in any of the said cities or towns, or the liberties thereof, to be delivered at the houses or dwelling of such persons; and that one cent, in addition to the postage, be charged on every letter or packet so delivered.

Sec. 26. And be it further enacted, That if any deputy postmaster, or other person authorized to receive the postage of letters and packets, shall neglect or refuse to render account, and pay over to the Postmaster General the balance by him due, at the end of every six months, it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General to cause a suit to be commenced against the person or persons so neglecting or refusing; and if the Postmaster General shall not cause such suit to be commenced within six months from the end of every such half year, the balances due from every such delinquent shall be charged to, and recoverable from, the Postmaster General.

Sec. 27. And be it further enacted, That all penalties and forfeitures recovered under this act shall be one half for the use of the person or persons informing and prosecuting for the same, the other half to the use of the United States.

Sec. 28. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Postmaster General to make provision at the post office of every seaport of the United States, where it may be necessary, for the receipt of all letters and packets intended to be conveyed by any ship or vessel, beyond sea, or from any port of the United States to another port therein; and the letters so received shall be formed into a mail, sealed up, and directed to the postmaster of the port to which such ship or vessel shall be bound; and for every letter or packet so received, there shall be paid at the time of its reception a postage of one cent. And the Postmaster General may make arrangements with the postmasters in any foreign country for the reciprocal receipt and delivery of letters and packets through the post offices.

Sec. 29. And be it further enacted, That the deputy postmasters, and the persons employed in the transports-

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

tion of the mail, shall be exempt from militia duties, or any fine or penalty for neglect thereof.

Sec. 30. And be it further enacted, That all the surplus revenue of the General Post Office, previous to the passing of this act, and not heretofore appropriated, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated towards defraying any deficiency which may arise in the revenue of the said department for the year next ensuing.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading. The Senate resumed the second reading of "the bill for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein," and agreed to sundry amendments; and, on the question.

Shall this bill pass to the third reading? The yeas and nays being taken, stood—

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Burr, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Few, Foster, Gunn, Henry, Izard, King, Langdon, Lee, Monroe, Morris, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.—23.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Butler, Hawkins, and Johnston.—4.

So it was agreed that the bill should pass to the third reading.

WEDNESDAY, January 11.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to extend the time limited for settling the accounts of the United States with the individual States;" and, Resolved, That this bill pass, with the following amendments:

After the first section, insert the following:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid act shall extend to the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the State of Vermont. And that, until the first day of December next shall be allowed for the said State to exhibit its claims."

"And that section 2 be made to read section 3."

Ordered, That the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the amendments to this bill.

The following Message from the President of the United States was received:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you, in confidence, two Reports made to me by the Secretary for the Department of War, relative to the present state of affairs on the western frontiers of the United States.

In these Reports, the causes of the present war with the Indians, the measures taken by the Executive to terminate it amicably, and the military preparations for the late campaign, are stated and explained; and also a plan suggested of such further measures on the occasion as appear just and expedient.

I am persuaded, gentlemen, that you will take this important subject into your immediate and serious consideration, and that the result of your deliberations will be the adoption of such wise and efficient measures as will reflect honor on our national councils, and promote the welfare of our country. G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, January 11, 1792.

The Message and papers were read, and ordered to lie for consideration.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the "bill for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein;" and, after agreeing to a further amendment,

Resolved, That this bill pass; that the title thereof be, "An act for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein;" that it be engrossed, and that the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives therein.

The bill is as follows:

An Act for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the bounty now allowed upon the exportation of dried fish, of the fisheries of the United States, shall cease on all dried fish exported after the 10th day of June next; and in lieu thereof, and for the more immediate encouragement of the said fisheries, there shall be afterwards paid, on the last day of December, annually, to the owner of every vessel or his agent, by the collector of the district where such vessel may belong, that shall be qualified agreeably to law for carrying on the bank and other cod fisheries, and that shall actually have been employed therein at sea for the term of four months, at the least, of the fishing season next preceding, which season is accounted to be from the last day of February to the last day of November in every year, for each and every ton of such vessel's burden, according to her admeasurement as licensed or enrolled, if of twenty tons, and not exceeding thirty tons, one-and-a-half dollar; and if above thirty tons, two-and-a-half dollars; of which bounty three-eighths parts shall accrue and belong to the owner of such fishing vessel, and the other five-eighths parts thereof shall be divided by him, his agent, or lawful representative, to and among the several fishermen who shall have been employed in such vessel during the season aforesaid, or a part thereof, as the case may be, in such proportions as the fish they shall respectively have taken may bear to the whole quantity of fish taken on board such vessel during such season: Provided, That the bounty to be allowed and paid on any one vessel, for one season, shall not exceed one hundred and seventy dollars.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That, on the last day of December, annually, as aforesaid, there shall also be paid to the owner of every fishing boat or vessel, of more than five tons, and less than twenty tons, or to his agent or lawful representative, by the collector of the district where such boat or vessel may belong, the sum of one dollar upon every ton admeasurement of such boat or vessel; which bounty shall be accounted for as part of the proceeds of the fares of said boat or vessel, and shall accordingly be so divided among all persons interested therein: Provided, however, That this bounty shall be allowed only to such boats or vessels as shall have actually been employed at sea in the cod fishery, for the term of four months at least of the preceding season: And provided, also, That such boat or vessel shall have landed, in the course of said preceding season, a quantity of fish, not less than twelve quintals for every ton of her admeasurement; the said quantity of fish to be ascertained when dried and cured fit for exportation, and according to the weight thereof, as the same shall weigh at the time of delivery, when actually sold; which account of the weight, with the original adjustment and settlement of the fare or fares among the owners and fishermen, together with a written account of the length, breadth, and depth of said boat or vessel, and the time it has actually been employed in the fishery in the preceding season, shall, in all cases, be produced and sworn to before the said collector of the district, in order to entitle the owner, his agent, or lawful representative, to receive the bounty aforesaid. And if, at any time within one year after payment of such bounty, it shall appear that any fraud or deceit has been practised in obtaining the same, the boat or vessel upon which such bounty shall have been paid, if found within the district aforesaid, shall be forfeited; otherwise the owner or owners having practised such fraud or deceit, shall forfeit and pay one hundred dollars; to be sued for, recovered, and appropriated, in like manner as forfeitures and penalties are to be sued for, recovered, and appropriated, for any breach of an act, entitled "An act to provide more effectually for the collection of the duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, imported into the United States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels."

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the owner or owners of every fishing vessel of twenty tons and upwards, his or their agents or lawful representative, shall, previous to receiving the bounty which is provided for in this act, produce, to the collector who is authorized to pay the same, the original agreement or agreements which may have been made with the fishermen employed on board such vessel, as is hereinbefore required, and also a certificate, to be by him or them subscribed, therein mentioning the particular days on which such vessel sailed and returned on the several voyages or fares she may have made in the preceding fishing season, to the truth of which, they shall swear or affirm before the collector aforesaid.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That no ship or vessel, of twenty tons or upwards, employed as aforesaid, shall be entitled to the bounty granted by this act, unless the skipper or master thereof shall, before he proceeds on any fishing voyage, make an agreement, in writing or in print, with every fisherman employed therein, excepting only any apprentice or servant of himself or owner; and, in addition to such terms of shipment as may be agreed on, shall, in such agreement, express whether the same is to continue for one voyage, or for the fishing season, and shall also express that the fish, or the proceeds of such fishing voyage or voyages which may appertain to the fishermen, shall be divided among them in proportion to the quantities or number of said fish they may, respectively, have caught; which agreement shall be endorsed or countersigned by the owner of such fishing vessel, or his agent; and if any fisherman, having engaged himself for a voyage, or for the fishing season, in any fishing vessel, and signed an agreement therefor, as aforesaid, shall thereafter, while such agreement remains in force, and to be performed, desert or absent himself from such vessel, without leave of the master or skipper thereof, or of the owner or his agent, such deserter shall be liable to the same penalties as deserting seamen or mariners are subject to in the merchant's service, and may, in the like manner, and upon the like complaint and proof, be apprehended and detained; and all costs of process and commitment, if paid by the master or owner, shall be deducted out of the share of fish, or proceeds of any fishing voyage, to which such deserter hath or shall become entitled. And any fisherman, having engaged himself as aforesaid, who shall, during such fishing voyage, refuse or neglect his proper duty on board the fishing vessel, being thereto ordered or required by the master or skipper thereof, or shall otherwise resist his just commands, to the hindrance or detriment of such voyage, besides being answerable for all damages arising thereby, shall forfeit, to the use of the owner of such vessel, his share of the bounty which shall be paid upon such voyage, as is herein granted.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That where an agreement or contract shall be so made and signed, for a fishing voyage, or for the fishing season, and any fish, which may have been caught on board such vessel during the same, shall be delivered to the owner, or to his agent, for cure, and shall be sold by said owner or agent, such vessel shall, for the term of six months after such sale, be liable and answerable for the skipper's, and every other fisherman's, share of such fish, and may be proceeded against in the same form, and to the same effect, as any other vessel is by law liable, and may be proceeded against for the wages of seamen or mariners in the merchant's service. And, upon such process for the value of a share or shares of the proceeds of fish delivered and sold as aforesaid, it shall be incumbent on the owner or his agent, to produce a just account of the sales and division of such fish according to such agreement or contract, otherwise the said vessel shall be answerable upon such process for what may be the highest value of the share or shares demanded. But in all cases, the owner of such vessel, or his agent, appearing to answer to such process, may offer, thereupon, his account of general supplies made for such fishing voyage, and other supplies therefor made, to either of the demandants, and shall be allowed to produce evidence thereof in answer to their demands, respectively, and judgment shall be rendered upon such process, for the respective balances, which, upon such an inquiry, shall appear: Provided, always, That, when process shall be issued against any vessel liable as aforesaid, if the owner thereof, or his agent, will give bond to each fisherman in whose favor such process shall be instituted, with sufficient security, to the satisfaction of two justices of the peace, one of whom shall be named by such owner or agent, and the other by the fisherman or fishermen pursuing such process; or, if either party shall refuse, then the justice first appointed shall name his associate, with condition to answer and pay whatever sum shall be recovered by him or them on such process, there shall be an immediate discharge of such vessel: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any fisherman from having his action at common law for his share or shares of fish, or the proceeds thereof, as aforesaid.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the drawback heretofore allowed on the exportation of foreign dried and pickled fish, and other foreign and salted provisions, be, and the same is hereby repealed.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the money which shall remain in consequence of the abolition of the bounty on the dried fish of the United States, and of the drawback on foreign dried and pickled fish, and other foreign salted provisions, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated to the payment of the bounties granted by this act; and in case the moneys so appropriated shall be inadequate, the deficiency shall be supplied out of any moneys which, from time to time, shall be in the Treasury of the United States, and not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall declare falsely in any oath or affirmation required by this act, being duly convicted thereof in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of such offence, shall suffer the same penalties as are provided for false swearing by the act before mentioned, and to be in like manner sued for, recovered, and appropriated.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue and be in force for the term of seven years, and from thence to the end of the next session of Congress.

The bill establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States, was taken up, and, Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed until to-morrow.

THURSDAY, January 12.

The Senate resumed the consideration of "the bill establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States;" and, after agreeing further to amend the same,

Resolved, That this bill pass; that the title thereof be "An act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States;" that it be engrossed; and that the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives therein.

The bill is as follows:

An Act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, and it is hereby enacted and declared, That a mint, for the purpose of a national coinage, be, and the same is, established, to be situate and carried on at the seat of the Government of the United States, for the time being; and that, for the well conducting of the business of the said mint, there shall be the following officers and persons, namely:

A director, an assayer, a chief coiner, an engraver, a treasurer.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the director of the mint shall employ as many clerks, workmen, and servants, as he shall, from time to time, find necessary, subject to the approbation of the President of the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the respective functions and duties of the officers above mentioned shall be as follow: The director of the mint shall have the chief management of the business thereof, and shall superintend all other officers and persons who shall be employed therein. The assayer shall receive and give receipts for all metals which may lawfully be brought to the mint to be coined; shall assay all such of them as may require it; and shall deliver them to the chief coiner, to be coined. The chief coiner shall cause to be coined all metals which shall be received by him for that purpose, according to such regulations as shall be prescribed by this or any future law. The engraver shall sink and prepare the necessary dies for such coinage, with the proper devices and inscriptions; but it shall be lawful for the functions and duties of chief coiner and engraver to be performed by one person. The treasurer shall receive from the chief coiner all the coins which shall have been struck, and shall pay or deliver them to the persons respectively to whom the same ought to be paid or delivered: he shall, moreover, receive and safely keep all moneys which shall be for the use, maintenance, and support, of the mint, and shall disburse the same upon warrants signed by the director.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That every officer and clerk of the said mint shall, before he enters upon the execution of his office, take an oath or affirmation, before some Judge of the United States, faithfully and diligently to perform the duties thereof.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the said assayer, chief coiner, and treasurer, previously to entering upon the execution of their respective offices, shall each become bound to the United States of America, with one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of ten thousand dollars, with condition for the faithful and diligent performance of the duties of his office.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That there shall be allowed and paid, as compensations for their respective services:

To the said director, a yearly salary of two thousand dollars;

To the said assayer, a yearly salary of fifteen hundred dollars;

To the said chief coiner, a yearly salary of fifteen hundred dollars;

To the said engraver, a yearly salary of twelve hundred dollars;

To the said treasurer, a yearly salary of twelve hundred dollars;

To each clerk, who may be employed, a yearly salary not exceeding five hundred dollars; and, to the several subordinate workmen and servants, such wages and allowances as are customary and reasonable, according to their respective stations and occupations.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the accounts of the officers and persons employed in and about the said mint, and for services performed in relation thereto, and all other accounts concerning the business and administration thereof, shall be adjusted and settled in the Treasury Department of the United States; and a quarterly yearly account of the receipts and disbursements of the said mint shall be rendered at the said Treasury for settlement, according to such forms and regulations as shall have been prescribed by that department; and that once in each year a report of the transactions of the said mint, accompanied by an abstract of the settlements which shall have been from time to time made, duly certified by the Comptroller of the Treasury, shall be laid before Congress for their information.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That, in addition to the authority vested in the President of the United States, by a resolution of the last session, touching the engaging of artists, and the procuring of apparatus for the said mint, the President be authorized, and he is hereby authorized, to cause to be provided and put in proper condition such buildings, and in such manner as shall appear to him requisite for the purpose of carrying on the business of the said mint; and that as well the expenses which shall have been incurred pursuant to the said resolution, as those which may be incurred in providing and preparing the said buildings, and all other expenses which may hereafter accrue for the maintenance and support of the said mint, and in carrying on the business thereof, over and above the sums which may be received by reason of the rate per centum for coinage hereinafter mentioned, shall be defrayed from the Treasury of the United States, out of any moneys which, from time to time, shall be therein, not otherwise appropriated.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That there shall be, from time to time, struck and coined at the said mint, coins of gold, silver, and copper, of the following denominations, values, and descriptions, viz:

Eagles; each to be of the value of ten dollars or units, and to contain two hundred and forty-seven grains and four-eighths of a grain of pure, or one hundred and seventy grains of standard, gold.

Half eagles; each to be of the value of five dollars, and to contain one hundred and twenty-three grains and six-eighths of a grain of pure, or one hundred and thirty-five grains of standard, gold.

Quarter eagles; each to be of the value of two dollars and a half dollar, and to contain sixty-one grains and seven-eighths of a grain of pure, or sixty-seven grains and four-eighths of a grain of standard, gold.

Dollars, or units; each to be of the value of a Spanish milled dollar as the same is now current, and to contain three hundred and seventy-one grains and four-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure, or four hundred and sixteen grains of standard, silver.

Half dollars; each to be of half the value of the dollar or unit, and to contain one hundred and eighty-five grains and ten-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure, or two hundred and eight grains of standard, silver.

Quarter dollars; each to be of one-fourth the value of the dollar or unit, and to contain ninety-two grains and thirteen-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure, or one hundred and four grains of standard, silver.

Dimes; each to be of the value of one-tenth of a dollar or unit, and to contain thirty-seven grains and two-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure, or forty-one grains and three-fifths parts of a grain of standard, silver.

Half dimes; each to be of the value of one-twentieth of a dollar, and to contain eighteen grains and nine-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure, or twenty grains and four-fifths parts of a grain of standard, silver.

Cents; each to be of the value of the one-hundredth part of a dollar, and to contain eleven pennyweights of copper.

Half cents; each to be of the value of half a cent, and to contain five pennyweights and one-half pennyweight of copper.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That, upon the said coins, respectively, there shall be the following devices and legends, namely: Upon one side of each of the said coins there shall be an impression or representation of the head of the President of the United States for the time being, with an inscription which shall express the initial or first letter of his Christian or first name, and his surname at length, the succession of the Presidency numerically, and the year of the coinage; and upon the reverse of each of the gold and silver coins there shall be the figure or representation of an eagle, with this inscription—"United States of America;" and upon the reverse of each of the copper coins, there shall be an inscription which shall express the denomination of the piece, namely, cent, or half cent, as the case may require.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the proportional value of gold to silver, in all coins which shall by law be current as money within the United States, shall be as fifteen to one, according to quality in weight, of pure gold or pure silver; that is to say, every fifteen pounds weight of pure silver shall be of equal value in all payments, with one pound weight of pure gold, and so in proportion as to any greater or less quantities of the respective metals.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That the standard for all gold coins of the United States shall be eleven parts fine to one part alloy; and accordingly that eleven parts in twelve of the entire weight of each of the said coins shall consist of pure gold, and the remaining one-twelfth part of alloy; and the said alloy shall be composed of silver and copper, in such proportions, not exceeding one half silver, as shall be found convenient; to be regulated by the director of the mint for the time being, with the approbation of the President of the United States, until further provision shall be made by law. And to the end that the necessary information may be had in order to the making of such further provision, it shall be the duty of the director of the mint, at the expiration of a year after commencing the operations of the said mint, to report to Congress the practice thereof during the said year, touching the composition of the alloy of the said gold coins, the reasons for such practice, and the experiments and observations which shall have been made concerning the effects of different proportions of silver and copper in the said alloy.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the standard for all silver coins of the United States shall be four hundred and eighty-five parts fine to one hundred and seventy-nine parts alloy; and accordingly that four hundred and eighty-five parts in sixteen hundred and sixty-four parts of the entire weight of each of the said coins shall consist of pure silver, and the remaining one hundred and seventy-nine parts of alloy; which alloy shall be wholly of copper.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any person or persons to bring to the said mint gold and silver bullion, in order to their being coined; and that the bullion so brought shall be there assayed and coined as speedily as may be after the receipt thereof, and that free of expense to the person or persons by whom the same shall have been brought: And as soon as the said bullion shall have been coined, the person or persons by whom the same shall have been delivered, shall, upon demand, receive in lieu thereof coins of the same species of bullion which shall have been so delivered, weight for weight, of the pure gold or pure silver therein contained: Provided, nevertheless, That it shall be at the mutual option of the party or parties bringing such bullion, and of the director of the said mint, to make an immediate exchange of coins for standard bullion, with a deduction of one-half per cent. from the weight of the pure gold, or pure silver, contained in the said bullion, as an indemnification to the mint for the time which will necessarily be required for coining the said bullion, and for the advance which shall have been so made in coins. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the said mint, from time to time, whenever the state of the Treasury will admit thereof, with such sums as may be necessary for effecting the said exchanges, to be replaced as speedily as may be, out of the coins which shall have been made of the bullion for which the money so furnished shall have been exchanged; and the said deduction of one-half per cent. shall constitute a fund towards defraying the expenses of the said mint.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That the bullion which shall be brought as aforesaid to the mint to be coined, shall be coined, and the equivalent thereof in coins rendered, if demanded, in the order in which the said bullion shall have been brought or delivered, giving priority according to priority of delivery only, and without preference to any person or persons; and if any preference shall be given contrary to the direction aforesaid, the officer by whom such undue preference shall be given, shall, in each case, forfeit and pay one thousand dollars, to be recovered with costs of suit. And to the end that it may be known if such preference shall at any time be given, the assayer or officer to whom the said bullion shall be delivered to be coined, shall give to the person or persons bringing the same a memorandum in writing under his hand, denoting the weight, fineness, and value thereof, together with the day and order of its delivery into the mint.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That all the gold and silver coins which shall have been struck at, and issued from, the said mint, shall be a lawful tender in all payments whatsoever: those of full weight according to the respective values hereinbefore declared, and those of less than full weight at values proportional to their respective weights.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the respective officers of the said mint, carefully and faithfully to use their best endeavors that all the gold and silver coins which shall be struck at the said mint shall be, as nearly as may be, conformable to the several standards and weights aforesaid, and that the copper, whereof the cents and half cents aforesaid may be composed, shall be of good quality.

And the better to secure a due conformity of the said gold and silver coins to their respective standards, Sec. 18. Be it further enacted, That, from every separate mass of standard gold or silver, which shall be made into coins at the said mint, there shall be taken, yet apart by the treasurer, and reserved in his custody, a certain number of pieces, not less than three; and that once in every year the pieces so set apart and reserved shall be assayed under the inspection of the Chief Justice of the United States, the Secretary and Comptroller of the Treasury, the Secretary for the Department of State, and the Attorney General of the United States, (who are hereby required to attend, for that purpose, at the said mint, on the last Monday in July in each year,) or under the inspection of any three of them, in such manner as they, or a majority of them, shall direct, and in the presence of the director, assayer, and chief coiner, of the said mint; and if it shall be found that the gold and silver so assayed shall not be inferior to their respective standards hereinbefore declared, more than one part in one hundred and forty-four parts, the officer or officers of the said mint, whom it may concern, shall be held excusable; but if any greater inferiority shall appear, it shall be certified to the President of the United States, and the said officer or officers shall be deemed disqualified to hold their respective offices.

Sec. 19. And be it further enacted, That if any of the gold or silver coins, which shall be struck or coined at the said mint, shall be debased or made worse, as to the proportion of fine gold or fine silver therein contained, or shall be of less weight or value than the same ought to be, pursuant to the directions of this act, through the default or with the connivance of any of the officers or persons who shall be employed at the said mint, for the purpose of profit or gain, or otherwise with a fraudulent intent, and if any of the said officers or persons shall embezzle any of the metals which shall, at any time, be committed to their charge, for the purpose of being coined, or any of the coins which shall be struck or coined at the said mint, every such officer or person, who shall commit any or either of the said offences, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and shall suffer death.

Sec. 20. And be it further enacted, That the money of account of the United States shall be expressed in dollars or units, dimes or tenths, cents or hundredths, and mills or thousandths; a dime being the tenth part of a dollar, a cent the hundredth part of a dollar, a mill the thousandth part of a dollar; and that all accounts the end that it may be known if such preference shall at any time be given, the assayer or officer to whom the said bullion shall be delivered to be coined, shall give to the person or persons bringing the same a memorandum in writing under his hand, denoting the weight, fineness, and value thereof, together with the day and order of its delivery into the mint.

in the public offices, and all proceedings in the courts of the United States, shall be kept and had in conformity to this regulation.

FRIDAY, January 13.

The Senate took into consideration the Message of the President of the United States, of the 11th of January; and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

MONDAY, January 16.

The Senate then proceeded to the second reading of the bill, sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States."

Ordered, That this bill be committed to Messrs. BASSETT, BRADLEY, BURR, ELLSWORTH, FEW, FOSTER, HENRY, JOHNSTON, IZARD, LANGDON, LEE, MORRIS, RUTHERFORD, and STRONG, to report thereon.

TUESDAY, January 17.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have agreed to the amendments of the Senate on the bill, entitled "An act to extend the time limited for settling the accounts of the United States with the individual States."

Mr. BURR, from the committee appointed on the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," reported the bill amended; and the report was adopted.

On motion that the bill be postponed, it passed in the negative; whereupon, the Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill; and, after progress, Ordered, that the further consideration thereof be postponed.

The petition of John Harpur and others, for the adjustment of an unliquidated claim, on account of services during the late war, was read.

Ordered, That it be referred to the Secretary of War, to report thereon to the Senate.

The petition of John M'Vikar, executor of Archibald M'Vikar, for a Legislative act to enable the Auditor and Comptroller of the Treasury to liquidate his account against the United States, for certain supplies during the late war, was read; and,

Ordered, That it be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, to report thereon to the Senate.

The petition of Christopher Marshall, Jr., and Charles Marshall, was read, praying for encouragement in preparing sal-ammoniac, Glauber's salt, and volatile spirits, having erected a chemical laboratory for those purposes, near the city of Philadelphia.

Ordered, That this petition lie on the table.

The memorial of Hannah Stevens, of Concord, in the State of Massachusetts, wife of Isaac Stevens, mariner, was read, praying that Government would interpose in the liberation of the said Isaac Stevens from long captivity at Algiers. Ordered, That this petition be referred to the committee on the subject of the American prisoners at Algiers.

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

WEDNESDAY, January 18.

The following Message from the President of the United States was received:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you a copy of an exemplified copy of an Act of the Legislature of Vermont, ratifying, on behalf of that State, the articles of amendment proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States, together with a copy of a letter which accompanied said ratification.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, January 18, 1792.

The act of ratification referred to in the foregoing Message is as follows:

An act ratifying certain articles proposed by Congress as amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Whereas the Congress of the United States, begun and held at the city of New York, on Wednesday the 4th of March, 1789, resolved, that certain articles, to the number of twelve, be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, as amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which articles, when ratified by three-fourths of the said Legislatures, should be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of the said Constitution: therefore,

It is hereby enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Vermont, that all and every of said articles, so proposed as aforesaid, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed by the Legislature of this State.

STATE OF VERMONT, }
Secretary of State's Office. }
I hereby certify, that the within is a true copy of an Act passed by the Legislature of this State, the 3d day of November, 1791, and deposited in this office according to law.

ROS. HOPKINS, Secretary.

Ordered, That the Message, and papers referred to therein, lie for consideration. The second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," was further postponed.

THURSDAY, January 19.

Several committees being in session, and wanting time to perfect their reports, the Senate adjourned without doing any business.

FRIDAY, January 20.

The Senate assembled; and immediately proceeded to the consideration of Executive business.

MONDAY, January 23.

The committees not having perfected their reports, the Senate adjourned without doing any business.

TUESDAY, January 24.

The following Message from the President of the United States was received:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

Having received from the Governor of Virginia a Letter, enclosing a resolution of the General Assembly of that State, and a report of a committee of the House of Delegates, respecting certain lands located by the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line, under the laws of that State, and since ceded to the Chickasaw Indians, I lay copies of the same before you, together with a Report of the Secretary of State on this subject.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, January 23, 1792.

The Message, and papers therein referred to, were read, and ordered to lie for consideration.

WEDNESDAY, January 25.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

Mr. Bassett, from the committee appointed to take into consideration the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States," reported amendments, which were read; and, Ordered, That the amendments reported be printed for the use of the Senate.

THURSDAY, January 26.

Mr. Henry, from the committee appointed November 1, 1791, for the purpose, reported "A bill for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses;" and the bill was read the first time, and passed to a second reading.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons."

The report of the committee on the petition of Isaac Ledyard was read; and, on motion to amend the report, it passed in the negative.

Ordered, That the further consideration of the bill be postponed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed a bill, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay, and to invalid pensions;" in which bill they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives

JANUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

for concurrence, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay, and to invalid pensions," was read the first time, as follows:

An Act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay, and to invalid pensions.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the resolution of Congress of the 24th of August, 1780, as declares "that the resolution of the 15th of May, 1778, granting half pay for seven years to the officers of the army who should continue in service to the end of the war, be extended to the widows of those officers who have died, or shall hereafter die, in the service," shall be deemed and considered to extend to the cases of the widows and orphans of all officers who died or were slain in the said service, at any time between the commencement of hostilities in the late war with Great Britain, and the aforesaid 15th day of May, 1778. And the officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to settle the claims of the widows or orphans of such officers, as the case may be, and to issue certificates for the same in the usual manner.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That such officers as have been disabled in the service of the United States during the late war, whose disability and rate of allowance have been ascertained pursuant to the acts or regulations of Congress, and who, from an inability to return their whole commutation, as required by the act of the 22d day of March, 1783, have not received the said allowance, shall now be entitled to demand and receive the same, returning only such part of the said commutation as will be in due proportion to the said rate of allowance, calculating interest at six per cent. on the allowance and proportion of the commutation aforesaid, from the times they respectively became due, or were paid; and that their respective accounts be settled and adjusted accordingly.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all officers who have been disabled in the actual service of the United States, and whose degree of disability, to be ascertained in the manner hereafter prescribed, may entitle them to be placed on the pension list, at the rate of allowance equal to one-third or more of their monthly pay, shall be entitled to demand and receive such allowance during life: Provided, That the commutation received by any such officer shall be settled in the manner, and on the principles, prescribed in the last preceding section.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That any non-commissioned officer, soldier, or seaman, disabled in the actual service of the United States during the late war, by wounds, or other known cause, who did not desert from the said service, and whose name is not already on the pension list, shall be entitled to be placed on the pension list of the United States, during life, or the continuance of such disability, and shall also be allowed such further sum for the arrears of pension, from the time of such disability, not exceeding the rate of the annual allowance in consequence of his disability, as the judge of the district in which they respectively reside may think just: Provided, That in every such case, the rules and regulations following shall be complied with, that is to say:

First. That the judge of the district court of the United States, in each district, shall allot the same into convenient divisions, and appoint in each division a reputable physician residing therein, for the examination of invalids; causing due publication thereof to be made in one or more of the gazettes of the district; which physician shall act on oath, and receive the sum of one dollar for each examination.

Secondly. Every applicant shall produce to the physician of the division the following proofs, to wit:

A certificate from the commanding officer of the ship, regiment, corps, or company, in which he served, setting forth his disability, and that he was thus disabled while in the service of the United States; or the affidavits of two credible witnesses, to the same effect;

The affidavits of three reputable freeholders of the city, town, or county, in which he resides, ascertaining, of their own knowledge, the mode of life, employment, labor, or means of support, of such applicant, for the last twelve months.

Thirdly. The physician of the division, upon receipt of the proofs aforesaid, shall forthwith proceed to examine into the nature of the wound, or other cause of disability of such applicant, and having ascertained the degree thereof, shall certify the same under hand and seal, together with his opinion, whether or not the said disability is the effect of the wound, or injury, sustained while in the service of the United States: which proofs and certificate the said physician shall transmit to the district judge of the United States, within the said district, who shall retain a duplicate thereof, and transmit the originals to the Secretary of War, together with his opinion, in writing, what proportion of the monthly pay of such applicant will be equivalent to the degree of disability ascertained in manner aforesaid.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War, upon the receipt of the proofs, certificate, and opinion, aforesaid, shall cause the same to be duly filed in his office, and place the name of such applicant on the pension list of the United States, in conformity thereto: Provided, always, That, in any case where the said Secretary shall have cause to suspect imposition, he shall have power to withhold the name of such applicant from the pension list, and make report of the same to Congress at their next session.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all non-commissioned officers, soldiers, and seamen, disabled in the actual service of the United States during the late war, whose disability and rate of allowance have been ascertained pursuant to the regulations prescribed by the late Congress, and have not applied to be placed on the pension list until after the time limited by the act of Congress for that purpose, was expired, shall now be placed on the pension list, and be entitled to demand and receive their respective pensions, according to the allowances ascertained as aforesaid; anything in this act, or any act of the late Congress, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the first day of February next, no sale, transfer, or mortgage, of the whole or any part of the pension, or arrears of pension, payable to any non-commissioned officer, soldier, or seaman, before the same shall become due, shall be valid. And every person claiming such pension, or arrears of pension, or any part thereof, under power of attorney or substitution, shall, before the same is paid, make oath or affirmation, before some justice of the peace, of the place where the same is payable, that such power or substitution is not given by reason of any transfer of such pension, or arrears of pension; and any person, who shall swear or affirm falsely in the premises, and be thereof convicted, shall suffer as for wilful and corrupt perjury.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a second reading. A Letter from the Treasurer of the United States,

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[FEBRUARY, 1792.]

enclosing his indent account from the 30th of September to the 31st of December, 1791, was read, and ordered to lie for consideration.

FRIDAY, January 27.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States," and the amendments reported thereon by the committee.

On motion, to insert the following:

"That it shall be lawful for the Postmaster General, and his deputies, to receive donations from any person or persons in aid of the revenue arising from any post road, and if it shall appear, at the expiration of one year from the establishing of any post road, except the main road from Worcester to Savannah, that the revenue, arising from such post road, including donations, after deducting the compensations of the deputy postmasters, and the incidental charges of the post office, shall not amount to two-thirds of the expense of carrying the mail on the same, that then it shall be lawful for the Postmaster General to desist from sending a mail on such road."

It passed in the negative.

Ordered, That this bill pass to the third reading.

MONDAY, January 30.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States," and, after making many amendments concerning particular roads,

Resolved, That this bill pass, with amendments. Ordered, That the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the bill, as amended.

The Senate took up "the bill regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," and agreed that the consideration thereof be further postponed. Ordered, That the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay, and to invalid pensions," be referred to Messrs. HAWKINS, STRONG, ELLSWORTH, LEE, and IZARD, to consider and report generally thereon.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," and the further consideration thereof was postponed.

TUESDAY, January 31.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of "the bill for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed 'till to-morrow.

WEDNESDAY, February 1.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of "the bill for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

THURSDAY, February 2.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of "the bill for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

FRIDAY, February 3.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," was taken up, read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading, and be printed for the use of the Senate, under an injunction of secrecy for the present.

The bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, is as follows:

An Act making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the battalion of artillery and two regiments of infantry now in service, be completed in their numbers, according to the establishment.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be raised, for a term not exceeding three years, three additional regiments of infantry, each of which, exclusively of the commissioned officers, shall consist of nine hundred and twelve non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians. And the President may employ as many of the said troops as riflemen as he shall think proper: Provided, That the said three regiments shall be discharged as soon as the United States shall be at peace with the Indian tribes.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said additional regiments shall be organized in the same manner as the regiment of infantry described in the act, passed during the second session of the first Congress, entitled "An act for regulating the military establishment of the United States."

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be raised a squadron of light dragoons, which, exclusively of the commissioned officers, shall consist of three hundred and four non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, and that it shall be a condition in their enlistments to serve as infantry whenever they shall be ordered thereto. That the organization of the said squadron of light dragoons shall be as follows, viz: one major commandant, one adjutant, one quartermaster

[FEBRUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

one paymaster, one surgeon's mate, and four troops; each of which shall consist of one captain, one lieutenant, one cornet, four sergeants, four corporals, one farrier, one saddler, one trumpeter, and sixty-five dragoons; and the said squadron shall be raised for a term not exceeding three years.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, of the said three regiments of infantry, and the squadron of light dragoons, shall be enlisted for the term of three years, unless previously discharged.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That every recruit, who shall be enlisted by virtue of this act, shall receive six dollars bounty, and that the same shall be made up to the non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, now in service, who have enlisted for three years since the passing of the aforesaid act, entitled "An act for regulating the military establishment of the United States."

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the commissioned officers, who shall be employed to recruit for the establishment, shall be entitled to receive for every recruit duly enlisted and mustered, two dollars.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the monthly pay of the commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, on the military establishment of the United States, and of the three regiments and squadron of light dragoons, authorized by this act, shall be in future as follows, free of all deductions, to wit:

GENERAL STAFF.—A major general, one hundred and sixty-six dollars; a brigadier general, one hundred and four dollars; quartermaster, one hundred dollars; adjutant, sixty dollars; inspector, fifty dollars; chaplain, fifty dollars; surgeon, seventy dollars; deputy quartermaster, fifty dollars; aid-de-camp, in addition to his pay in the line, twenty-four dollars; brigade major, in addition to his pay in the line, twenty-four dollars.

REGIMENTAL.—Lieutenant colonel commandant, sixty dollars; majors commandant of dragoons and artillery, fifty-five dollars; paymaster, in addition to his pay in the line, ten dollars; quartermaster, in addition to his pay in the line, eight dollars; adjutant, in addition to his pay in the line, ten dollars; majors of infantry, fifty dollars; captains, forty dollars; lieutenants, twenty-five dollars; ensigns and cornets, twenty dollars; sergeants, forty-five dollars; mates, thirty dollars; sergeant majors and quartermaster sergeants, eight dollars; senior musicians, seven dollars; sergeants, seven dollars; corporals, six dollars; privates, four dollars; musicians, four dollars; artificers allowed to the light dragoons and artillery, and included as privates, eight dollars; matrons and nurses in the hospital, eight dollars.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the rations, or money in lieu thereof, for the commissioned, non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, of the additional troops herein mentioned, shall be the same as described in the aforesaid act, entitled "An act for regulating the military establishment of the United States," and in the act passed in the third session of the first Congress, entitled "An act for raising and adding another regiment to the military establishment of the United States, and for making further provision for the protection of the frontiers."

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the forage to be allowed to the officers of the additional regiments authorized by this act, be the same as described by the acts before mentioned.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the allowance of clothing for the non-commissioned officers and privates of the three regiments and squadron aforesaid, shall be the same as is by law established. That suitable clothing be provided for the cavalry, and adapted to the nature of the service, and conformed as near as may be to the value of the clothing allowed the infantry and artillery.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That all the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, of the three regiments and squadron aforesaid, shall take the same oath, shall be governed by the same rules and regulations, and, in cases of disabilities, shall receive the same compensations, as are described in the before-mentioned act, entitled "An act for regulating the military establishment of the United States."

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to forbear to raise, or to discharge after they shall be raised, the whole or any part of the said three additional regiments of infantry, or the squadron of light dragoons, in case events shall, in his judgment, render his so doing consistent with the public safety.

Sec. 14. And whereas, in case the forbearing to raise the whole or some part of the said three additional regiments should be deemed not consistent with the public safety, it will still be desirable that all unnecessary expense should, as far as possible, be avoided; and to that end, that the officers for the same should only be appointed from time to time, as occasion may require: Be it enacted, That the President alone be authorized to make all such appointments as may not be required previous to the close of the present session of the Senate, and may become necessary before the next session of Congress.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is authorized to engage, in lieu of the whole or any part of the three regiments authorized by this act, or in addition to the same, such number of infantry or cavalry as in his judgment the public service may require; provided, that the entire number of non-commissioned officers and privates, including such part of the said regiments as may be raised and not discharged, shall not exceed six thousand; and provided, that the infantry and cavalry shall not be engaged for a longer term than nine months, nor be allowed, the infantry, more than twenty-five cents per day, nor the cavalry, each person engaged finding his own horse, arms, and accoutrements, and at his own risk, seventy-five cents per day, and twenty-five cents per day in lieu of rations and forage; provided he furnish himself therewith. And the allowance to non-commissioned officers, whether in the infantry or cavalry, shall not exceed to those of the infantry thirty-three cents and one-third of a cent per day, and to those of the cavalry one dollar and twenty-five cents per day.

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That the President alone be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint, for the infantry and cavalry so to be engaged, the proper commissioned officers, who shall not exceed in number and rank the proportions assigned to the said three regiments and squadron, respectively; and whose pay, and other allowances, shall not exceed those of officers of corresponding rank in the said regiments and squadron.

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized, in case he shall deem the measure expedient, to employ a number, not exceeding one thousand, of Indians, belonging to the tribes in alliance with the United States, to act against the hostile Indians; and also to make them such compensations as he shall judge right, not exceeding twenty thousand dollars in the whole.

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[FEBRUARY, 1792.]

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have agreed to some, and disagreed to other, amendments of the Senate on the bill, entitled "An act to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States."

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses, and, after agreeing to sundry amendments.

Ordered, That this bill pass to the third reading. The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution of the House of Representatives, on the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States," to wit:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives doth disagree to the sixth amendment proposed by the Senate, in section 1st; and doth agree to all other amendments to the said bill, with amendments to the 15th amendment in the said 1st section.

Whereupon, Resolved, That the Senate recede from their sixth amendment on the above-mentioned bill, and concur with the House of Representatives in their amendments to the amendments of the Senate.

MONDAY, February 6

The third reading of "the bill for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," was further postponed.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States;" and, On motion, the consideration thereof was made the order of the day for to-morrow.

TUESDAY, February 7

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States;" and, after progress, the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, February 8

The following Message from the President of the United States was received:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

An article of expense having occurred in the Department of Foreign Affairs, for which no provision has been made by law, I lay before you a Letter from the Secretary of State, explaining the same, in order that you may do thereon what you shall find to be right.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, February 8, 1792.

The Message and papers therein referred to were read; and ordered to lie for consideration.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States;" and, after progress, the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, February 9

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States."

On motion to postpone the second reading, it passed in the negative.

On motion to expunge the second section, the yeas and nays being required by one-fifth of the Senators present, were taken, and stood:

Yeas.—Messrs. Bradley, Butler, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Lee, Monroe, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.—13.

Nays.—Messrs. Bassett, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Henry, Izard, Johnston, Langdon, Morris, Read, and Rutherford.—12.

So it passed in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the bill be referred to Messrs. STRONG, GUNN, MONROE, BRADLEY, and ELLSWORTH, to consider and report generally thereon.

A Letter from the Speaker of the House of Representatives, enclosing the memorial of D. L. Morel, was read.

Ordered, That the Letter and enclosure lie for consideration.

FRIDAY, February 10

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein," with amendments, in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. Few communicated an act of the State of Georgia, to empower their Senators in Congress, or one Senator and two of their Representatives in Congress, to execute a deed of the light-house on Tybee Island in the said State. The act was read; and,

Ordered, To lie for consideration.

Ordered, That the Secretary of State be requested to furnish a translation of the memorial of D. L. Morel, communicated yesterday by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to the Vice President.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of, and agreed to, the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill sent from the Senate for concurrence, entitled "An act for the encouragement of the bank and other cod fisheries, and for the regulation and government of the fishermen employed therein."

FEBRUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill, sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons;" and, after debate, adjourned.

MONDAY, February 13

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of "the bill for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses."

On motion to insert these words at the end of section 2:

"And be at liberty to pursue the same until a tender of the debt and cost in gold or silver shall be made."

The yeas and nays were required by one-fifth of the Senators present, and being taken, stood:

Yeas.—Messrs. Bassett, Burr, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Foster, Izard, King, Langdon, Morris, Read, Rutherford, and Strong.—14.

Nays.—Messrs. Bradley, Butler, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Lee, Monroe, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, and Wingate.—13.

So it passed in the affirmative.

And, after agreeing to further amendments, Resolved, That this bill pass; that the title thereof be, "An act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses;" that it be engrossed, and that the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives therein.

The bill is as follows:

An Act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all writs and processes issuing from the supreme or a circuit court shall bear test of the chief justice of the supreme court; and if from a district court, shall bear test of the judge of such court, and shall be under the seal of the court from whence they issue, and signed by the clerk thereof. The seals to be provided at the expense of the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That, until other provision shall be made, and except where, by this act, or other statutes of the United States, it is otherwise provided, the forms of writs and executions, except their style, and the modes of process and proceedings in suits at common law, shall be the same in each State respectively as are now used or allowed in the highest common law courts having original jurisdiction of the same. And the forms and modes of proceedings in causes of equity and of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, shall be, except where the laws of the United States otherwise provide, according to the course which hath obtained in the States respectively in like causes; or in States which have not courts of equity jurisdiction, or have not had courts of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, according to the course of proceedings in such courts, respectively, in any adjoining, or the nearest State in which they are or have been instituted; subject, however, to such deviations in each State, by rule of court, as a difference of circumstances may require, or as may be requisite to prevent unnecessary delay and expense: Provided, That on judgments in any of the cases aforesaid, where different kinds of executions are issuable in succession, a capias ad satisfaciendum being one, the plaintiff shall have his election to take out a capias ad satisfaciendum in the first instance, and be at liberty to pursue the same until a tender of the debt and cost, in gold or silver, shall be made.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That, from and after the passing this act, the fees and compensations to the several officers and other persons hereafter mentioned shall be as follows: That is to say: to the marshals of the several districts of the United States, for the service of any writ, warrant, attachment, or process, in chancery, on each person named in the same, one dollar; for his travel out in serving each writ, warrant, attachment, or process, as aforesaid, five cents per mile, to be computed from the place of service to the court where the writ or process shall be returned; and if more persons than one are named therein, the travel shall be computed from the court to the place of service which is most remote, adding thereto the extra travel necessary to serve it on the other: Provided, That the fee for travel shall in no case exceed fifteen dollars; for each bail bond, fifty cents; for selling goods and vessels condemned, and receiving and paying the money, three per cent.; for every commitment or discharge of a prisoner, fifty cents; for summoning witnesses, each, twenty cents, and his necessary travel, at five cents per mile, to be computed as aforesaid; for summoning a grand or petit jury, each, three dollars, and his necessary travel, at five cents per mile, to be computed in like manner: Provided, That in those States where jurors by the laws of the State are drawn by constables or other officers of corporate towns or places by lot, the marshals shall receive, for the use of such constables or officers, such part of the fees allowed for travel in summoning juries as the court to which the juries may be returned shall direct; for attending the supreme, circuit, or district courts, five dollars per day, and at the rate of ten cents per mile for his expenses and time in traveling from the place of his abode to either of the said courts; for levying an execution, and for all other services not herein enumerated, such fees or compensation as are allowed in the supreme court of the State where the services shall be rendered; to the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, ten dollars per day for his attendance in court, and for his other services in discharging the duties of his office, double the fees of the clerk of the supreme court of that State in which the Supreme Court of the United States shall be holden; to the clerk of the district and circuit courts, such fees in each State respectively as are allowed in the supreme courts of the same, and five dollars per day for his attendance on any circuit or district court, and at the rate of ten cents per mile for his expenses and time in traveling from the place of his abode to either of the said courts. And in case any clerk of a court of the United States shall, in discharging the duties of his office, perform any kind of service which is not performed by the clerks of the courts of the State, and for which the laws of the State make no allowance, the court in which such service shall be rendered may allow a reasonable compensation therefor; to each grand and petit juror one dollar per day for attending in court, and for traveling, at the rate of five cents for every mile from their respective places of abode to the place where the court is held, and the like allowance for returning;

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[FEBRUARY, 1792.]

to witnesses summoned on the part of the United States, or in behalf of any prisoner to be tried for a capital offence in any of the courts thereof, the same compensation as is above allowed to grand and petit jurors; to witnesses in other cases, the same compensation in each State respectively as are allowed in the supreme courts of the same; to the attorney of the United States for the district, such fees in each State respectively as are allowed in the supreme courts of the same, and also the like compensation for traveling as is above allowed to the clerk of the district and circuit courts; and where the amount of such fees and compensations to the district attorney shall be less in any year than one-fifth part of the salary of the judge of such district, the difference shall be allowed and paid to the attorney at the end of the year.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the marshal shall have the custody of all vessels and goods, seized by any officer of the revenue, and shall be allowed such compensation therefor as the court may judge reasonable: And there shall be paid to the marshal the amount of the expense for fuel, candles, and other reasonable contingencies that may accrue in holding the courts within his district, and providing the books necessary to record the proceedings thereof: And such amount, as also the compensations aforesaid, to the grand and petit jurors, to the witnesses summoned on the part of the United States, or in behalf of a prisoner to be tried for a capital offence; to the clerk of the supreme court, for his attendance; to the clerks of the district and circuit courts for their traveling and attendance; to the attorney of the district, for traveling to court; to the marshal for his attendance at court; for summoning grand and petit jurors, and witnesses in behalf of any prisoner to be tried for a capital offence; for the maintenance of prisoners confined in jail for any criminal offence, and for the commitment or discharge of such prisoner; and, also, the legal fees of the clerk, attorney, and marshal, in criminal prosecutions, shall be included in the account of the marshal: and the same having been examined and certified by the court, or one of the judges of it, in which the service shall have been rendered, shall be passed in the usual manner at, and the amount thereof paid out of the Treasury of the United States, to the marshal, and by him shall be paid over to the persons entitled to the same. And the marshal shall be allowed two and a half per cent. on the amount by him so paid over, to be charged in his future account.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That in every prosecution for any fine or forfeiture incurred under any statute of the United States, if judgment is rendered against the defendant, he shall be subject to the payment of costs. And on every conviction for any other offence, not capital, the court may, in their discretion, award that the defendant shall pay the costs of prosecution. And if any informer, or plaintiff, on a penal station, to whose benefit the penalty, or any part thereof, if recovered, is directed by law to accrue, shall discontinue his suit or prosecution, or shall be nonsuit in the same, or if, upon trial, a verdict shall pass for the defendant, the court shall award to the defendant his costs, unless such informer, or plaintiff, be an officer of the United States, specially authorized to commence such prosecution, and the court before whom the action or information shall be tried, shall, at the trial, in open court, certify, upon record, that there was reasonable cause for commencing the same, in which case no cost shall be taxed for the defendant.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the fees and compensations to the several officers and persons hereinbefore mentioned, other than those which are above directed to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, shall be recovered in like manner as the fees of the officers of the States respectively, for like services, are recovered.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That if any officer hereinbefore mentioned, or his deputy, shall, by reason or color of his office, wilfully and corruptly demand and receive any greater fees than those allowed by this act, he shall, on conviction thereof in any court of the United States, forfeit and pay a fine, not exceeding five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned, not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court before whom the conviction shall be.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the act passed at the last session of Congress, entitled "An act to continue in force, for a limited time, an act passed at the first session of Congress, entitled 'An act to regulate processes in the courts of the United States,'" and also another act passed at the last session of Congress, entitled "An act providing compensations for the officers of the judicial courts of the United States, and for jurors and witnesses, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby repealed.

TUESDAY, February 14.

The Secretary of State having transmitted to the Senate a translation of the memorial of D. L. Morel, it was read; and ordered that the Secretary of the Senate deliver the original, with a copy of the translation, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," and, after progress, adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, February 15.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," and,

Ordered, That the further consideration of this bill be postponed.

Mr. Strong, from the committee appointed on the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," reported the bill amended.

THURSDAY, February 16.

The Senate proceeded to the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives for concurrence, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," and the report of the committee thereon.

On motion to postpone the report of the committee, so far as to take into consideration a proposed amendment, it passed in the negative.

On motion, it was agreed to postpone the report

FEBRUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

of the committee, and to reconsider the second section of the bill rejected on the 9th instant; and, after debate, the further consideration of the bill was postponed until to-morrow.

A message from the House of Representatives, informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President," with amendments, in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The amendments to the above mentioned bill were read, and are as follow:

Section 1, to the end of the section, add "which Electors shall be equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which the several States may by law be entitled at the time when the President and Vice President, thus to be chosen, should come into office: Provided, always, That where no apportionment of Representatives shall have been made after any enumeration, at the time of choosing Electors, then the number of Electors shall be according to the existing apportionment of Senators and Representatives."

In section 2, which reads as follows: "That the Electors shall meet and give their votes on the said first Wednesday in December, at such place in each State as shall be directed by the authority thereof," strike out "authority," and insert "Legislature."

Section 9, strike out the whole section, and in lieu thereof insert, "And be it further enacted, That in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President of the United States, the Secretary of State, for the time being, shall act as President of the United States, until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected."

Ordered, That the amendments lie for consideration.

FRIDAY, February 17.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives on the bill, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President;" and, after debate, the further consideration thereof was postponed until Monday next.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States;" and,

A motion being made, and the question put, to adopt the second section, it passed in the affirmative; yeas 15, nays 12—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Burr, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, King, Langdon, Morris, Read, and Rutherford. NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Butler, Few, Foster, Gunn, Lee, Monroe, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

The report of the committee was then resumed; and on the question to agree thereto, so far as to reject the third section of the bill, it passed in the negative.

Ordered, That it be referred to Messrs. Burr, HAWKINS, READ, ELLSWORTH, and GUNN, with the amendments reported by the committee, together with the motions made thereon, to consider and report generally.

MONDAY, February 20.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives on the bill, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President;" and,

Resolved, That they agree to all the said amendments except the last, to which they disagree.

Resolved, That Messrs. SHERMAN, LANGDON, and STRONG, be a committee to join with such committee as the House of Representatives may appoint, on their part, to consider and report what business is necessary to be done by Congress in the present session, and what part of the business now depending may be, without great inconvenience, postponed to the next session; that the proceedings may be so regulated as to close this session by the first Tuesday of April next.

A petition of James Oakley and others, was presented and read, praying compensation for services during the late war.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to examine and report thereon to the Senate.

TUESDAY, February 21.

The application of James Mathers, Doorkeeper to the Senate, for compensation during the recess, was presented and read.

Ordered, That it be referred to Messrs. SHERMAN, IZARD, and JOHNSTON, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. HAWKINS, from the committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay, and to invalidate pensions," reported amendments, which were read.

Ordered, That the report lie on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House of Representatives recede from their last amendment to the bill, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President;" and that they agree to the resolution of the Senate of the 20th instant, appointing a joint committee for the purpose therein mentioned, and have appointed a committee on their part.

Also, that they have passed the bill, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[FEBRUARY, 1792.]

enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate. Mr. HAWKINS, from the committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," reported amendments; which report was read.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," was read the first time.

Ordered, That this bill pass to the second reading.

WEDNESDAY, February 22.

The amendments reported by the committee on the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," were considered and agreed to; and the bill was ordered to pass to the third reading.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act providing for the settlement of the claims of persons under particular circumstances barred by the limitations heretofore established," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

Mr. BUTLER reported from the committee to whom was referred the petition of Charles Colwell, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

THURSDAY, February 23.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," was read the third time.

On motion to expunge the last section of the bill, as it was amended, to wit:

"Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized, in case he shall deem the measure expedient, to employ such number of the Indians, and for such compensations, as he may think proper: Provided, The said compensations do not, in the whole, exceed twenty thousand dollars;"

It passed in the negative; yeas 8, nays 18, excused 1—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Monroe, Robinson, Rutherford, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Burr, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Lee, Foster, Gunn, Izard, Johnston, King, Langdon, Morris, Read, and Stanton.

Excused.—Mr. Butler.

On motion to amend the last section of the bill, as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be authorized to distribute such sums as he may think proper among the Indians in alliance with the United States, not exceeding twenty thousand dollars in the whole;"

It passed in the negative.

On motion to reduce the number of each regiment to nine hundred and twelve non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians, instead of nine hundred and sixty, reported by the committee, it passed in the negative; yeas 8, nays 18, excused 1—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Burr, Cabot, Few, Rutherford, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, King, Langdon, Lee, Monroe, Morris, Read, and Robinson.

Excused.—Mr. Butler.

On motion to expunge the second section of the bill, which provides:

"That there shall be raised, for a term not exceeding three years, three additional regiments of infantry, each of which, exclusively of the commissioned officers, shall consist of nine hundred and twelve non-commissioned officers, privates, and musicians. And that the President may employ as many of the said troops as ride-men as he shall think proper: Provided, That the said three regiments shall be discharged as soon as the United States shall be at peace with the Indian tribes;"

And substitute the following:

"Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to engage such number of expert woodmen, to serve as infantry or cavalry, as, in his judgment, the public service may require: Provided, That the entire number of non-commissioned officers and privates shall not exceed two thousand: And, provided, That the infantry and cavalry shall not be engaged for a longer term than ten months, nor be allowed, the infantry more than twenty-five cents per day, nor the cavalry, each person engaged finding his own horse, arms, and accoutrements, and at his own risk, seventy-five cents per day, and twenty-five cents per day in lieu of rations and forage, provided he furnish himself therewith. And the allowance to the non-commissioned officers, whether in the infantry or cavalry, shall not exceed, to those of the infantry thirty-three cents and one-third of a cent per day, and to those of the cavalry one dollar and twenty-five cents per day;"

It passed in the negative; yeas 12, nays 15—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Butler, Few, Foster, Gunn, Lee, Monroe, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bassett, Burr, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, King, Langdon, Morris, Read, and Rutherford.

On the question, Shall this bill pass, as amended? It was resolved in the affirmative; yeas 16, nays 11—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Burr, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Lee, Foster, Gunn, Izard, Johnston, King, Langdon, Morris, Read, and Stanton.

[FEBRUARY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

inson, Ellsworth, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, King, Langdon, Morris, Read, and Rutherford. NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Butler, Few, Foster, Lee, Monroe, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

Ordered, That the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in this bill as amended.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," was read the second time.

On motion to amend the first part of the first section of the bill, as followeth:

"That, from and after the 3d day of March, 1793, the House of Representatives shall be composed of one hundred members, elected agreeably to a ratio of one member for every thirty thousand inhabitants in each State, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution;"

It passed in the negative; yeas 11, nays 16—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Cabot, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Foster, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Burr, Butler, Carroll, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, King, Lee, Monroe, Morris, Rutherford, and Stanton.

On motion to amend the first part of the first section, as followeth:

"That, from and after the 3d day of March, 1793, the House of Representatives shall be composed of one hundred and nineteen members, elected agreeably to a ratio of one member for every thirty thousand inhabitants in each State, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution;"

And, after debate, Ordered, That the further consideration of this bill be postponed.

FRIDAY, February 24.

Ordered, That the Secretary desire the House of Representatives to return the bill, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," with the amendments, for the purpose of correcting a mistake.

The House of Representatives returned the bill and amendments to the Senate by their Clerk; and the mistake being rectified, they were by the Secretary again carried to the House of Representatives.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act providing for the settlement of the claims of persons under particular circumstances barred by the limitations heretofore established," was read the second time; and, after agreeing to amend the said bill, it was ordered to the third reading.

The further consideration of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," was postponed until Thursday next.

MONDAY, February 27.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act providing for the settlement of the claims of persons under particular circumstances barred by the limitations heretofore established," was read the third time.

Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. Ellsworth, Lee, and Strong, to report thereon.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives agree upon some, disagree to some, and agree to other amendments of the Senate, with making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the last mentioned bill; which are (so far as material) as follow: In the amendment to the second section, strike out the last paragraph in the clause proposed to be inserted by the Senate, in these words, to wit:

"And that the said regiments shall be otherwise organized, as the regiment of infantry described in an act passed the second session of the first Congress, entitled 'An act for regulating the military establishment of the United States';"

And in lieu thereof insert,

"Provided always, and be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to organize the said five regiments of infantry, and the said corps of horse and artillery, as he shall judge expedient, diminishing the number of corps, or taking from one corps and adding to another, as shall appear to him proper, so that the whole number of officers and men shall not exceed the limits above prescribed."

In the thirteenth amendment to the eighth section, after the words "three dollars" for the pay of the privates, insert:

"And at the rate of one dollar per month, to be paid according to the accumulated amount at the time of discharge to each soldier respectively; or in case of death in the service, according to the amount then accumulated, to be paid to his widow, if any, if not, to his next of kin, in equal degree; which reserved pay shall not be assignable."

To these amendments the Senate agreed in part, and disagreed as to others.

Ordered, That all bills, before they are sent to the House of Representatives, be examined by the committees respectively who brought in such bills, or to whom the same shall have been last committed in Senate.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay and to invalid pensions;" and it was agreed to amend the bill accordingly.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[FEBRUARY, 1792.]

TUESDAY, February 28.

The memorial of Moses Young, praying compensation for services rendered the United States during the late war, was presented and read.

Ordered, That this memorial be referred to Messrs. BUTLER, ELLSWORTH, and LEE, to examine and report thereon to the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay and to invalid pensions."

On motion to restore that part of the first section which was yesterday rejected, to be read as follows:

"So much of the resolution of Congress of the 24th of August, 1780, as declares 'that the resolution of the 15th of May, 1778, granting half pay for seven years to the officers of the army who should continue in service to the end of the war, be extended to the widows of those officers who have died, or shall hereafter die in the service, shall be deemed and considered to extend to the cases of the widows and orphans of all officers who died or were slain in the said service, at any time between the commencement of hostilities in the late war with Great Britain, and the aforesaid 15th day of May, 1778. And the officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to settle the claims of the widows or orphans of such officers, as the case may be, and to issue certificates for the same in the usual manner.'"

It passed in the negative.

On motion to restore the second section of the bill, which was yesterday rejected, to wit:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That such officers as have been disabled in the service of the United States during the late war, whose disability and rate of allowance have been ascertained pursuant to the acts or regulations of Congress, and who, from an inability to return their whole commutation, as required by the act of the 22d day of March, 1783, have not received the said allowance, shall now be entitled to demand and receive the same, returning only such part of the said commutation as will be in due proportion to the said rate of allowance, calculating interest at six per cent. on the allowance and proportion of the commutation aforesaid, from the times they respectively became due, or were paid; and that their respective accounts be settled and adjusted accordingly."

It passed in the negative.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that they desire a conference with the Senate on the subject-matter of the amendments to the act "for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States," having appointed managers at the said conference on their part.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the message; and

Resolved, That they agree to the proposed conference, and that Messrs. ELLSWORTH, BUTLER, and KING, be managers thereof on the part of the Senate.

The Vice President laid before the Senate a Letter from the Treasurer of the United States, enclosing his specie account to 31st of December, 1791; which was read, and, together with the account, ordered to lie on the table.

WEDNESDAY, February 29.

A petition of Moses Hazen, late Brigadier General in the army of the United States, was presented and read, praying that he may be furnished with certain papers, or copies of papers, therein referred to. Also, a memorial of the said Moses Hazen, that his petitions to Congress of the 25th of October, and the 15th of December, 1791, said to have been read in the House of Representatives, may be considered.

Ordered, That these petitions lie on the table.

A petition of John Little, a captain of militia, was presented and read, praying relief in consideration of a wound received in the service of the United States during the late war.

Ordered, That this petition lie on the table.

The petition of Gilbert Dean was presented and read, praying compensation for personal services rendered the United States during the late war.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to examine and report thereon to the Senate.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have appointed a manager of the proposed conference, in the place of one prevented from attendance by accident.

The Senate proceeded in the third reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay and to invalid pensions," and it was agreed to amend the fourth section, as follows:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That any non-commissioned officer, soldier, or seaman, disabled in the actual service of the United States during the late war, by wounds or other known cause, who did not desert from the said service, shall be entitled to be placed on the pension list of the United States, during life, or the continuance of such disability, and shall also be allowed such further sum for the arrears of pension, from the time of such disability, not exceeding the rate of the annual allowance in consequence of his disability, as the circuit court of the district in which they respectively reside may think just."

On motion to subjoin the following proviso to the end of the fourth section:

"And provided also, That the benefit of this act shall extend to the cases of those invalids referred to the Secretary of War, and respecting whom he has reported they would be entitled to pensions as invalids had they applied in time, and that they should be put on the pension list according to the allowances in the said report without taking the measures prescribed by this act to obtain the said pension."

It passed in the negative.

On motion to subjoin the following clause to the end of the last section of the bill:

"And be it further enacted, That, from and after the expiration of two years from the passing of this act, no officer, soldier, or seaman, shall receive any pension, unless such person shall be entitled thereto, in pursuance of an adjudication of the circuit court, in the manner prescribed in the second section of this act."

It passed in the negative.

Resolved, That this bill pass as amended, and

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

that the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the bill as amended.

The second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," was resumed; and,

On motion to strike out the first section,

It passed in the affirmative—yeas 16, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Carroll, Ellsworth, Foster, Hawkins, Johnston, King, Langdon, Lee, Monroe, Rutherford, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bassett, Butler, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Izard, Morris, Read, and Stanton.

Ordered, That the further consideration of this bill be postponed.

THURSDAY, March 1.

The petition of Lewis Dubois and others, officers in the New York line of the army during the late war, was presented and read, praying that the depreciation of their pay for the time they were in the service of the United States might be allowed them.

Ordered, That the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petition.

Mr. SHERMAN made report, from the joint committee appointed to consider and report what business is necessary to be done by Congress in the present session, and what part of the business now depending may be, without great inconvenience, postponed to the next session of Congress, that the proceedings may be so regulated as to close this session by the first Tuesday of April next.

And the report being read, it was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the committee appointed to consider the application of James Mathers, Doorkeeper to the Senate, for compensation during the recess, made report, which was read and agreed to.

Ordered, That the said James Mathers be allowed three hundred and forty-nine dollars and a half, for his services in the late recess of Congress.

Ordered, That the Vice President certify the balance due to James Mathers, Doorkeeper to the Senate, for services during the last recess.

Ordered, That the committee last mentioned be instructed to bring in a bill providing for the annual salaries of the Doorkeepers of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, respectively.

Ordered, That Messrs. BURR, GUNN, and MONROIS, be appointed a committee to consider the expediency of building a light-house on Montauk point, on Nassau island, in the State of New York, and, if they think expedient, to report a bill for that purpose.

The petition of Samuel Augustus Barker, an officer in the service of the United States during the late war, was presented and read, praying that the half pay allowed to the officers of the late army may be extended to him.

Ordered, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

Ordered, That the further consideration of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," be postponed until Monday next.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," and agreed so far to reconsider the resolution of yesterday, as to restore the first section of the bill as amended by the committee, as followeth:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Comptroller of the Treasury adjust the claims of the widows and orphans, respectively, as the case may be, of Colonel Owen Roberts, Captain William White, Lieutenant Colonel Bernard Eliot, Major Samuel Wise, Major Benjamin Huger, Lieutenant John Bush, and Major Charles Motte, deceased; all of whom were killed or died in the service of the United States, for the seven years' half pay stipulated by the resolve of Congress of the 24th day of August, 1780; and that the Register of the Treasury do issue his certificates accordingly."

It was agreed to insert the following as the second section:

"Section 2. And be it further enacted, That the officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to re-examine the accounts of Isaac Ledyard, late assistant deputy director, and John Berrien, late commissary of the hospital department; and if any error has taken place in the settlement of the said accounts, to correct the same."

And having agreed to further amendments, the bill was ordered to pass to the third reading.

A memorial of Samuel Howell and other merchants of Philadelphia, trading to India, China, and other parts of Asia, was presented and read, stating certain discouragements in the prosecution of that branch of commerce, and praying such interposition as Congress, in their wisdom, may deem expedient.

Ordered, That this petition lie on the table.

FRIDAY, March 2.

Mr. ELLSWORTH reported, from the managers of a conference to which they were appointed, as followeth:

"The conferees having met and conferred on the matters of disagreement between the Houses, on the bill, entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States,' have agreed, that it will be proper for the House of Representatives to recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the sixteenth section, and agree to the same. And that it will be proper for both Houses to agree to the fifteenth section amended, to read as followeth:

"And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, from time to time, to call into service, and for such periods as he may deem re-

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[MARCH, 1792.]

quisite, such number of cavalry as in his judgment may be necessary for the protection of the frontiers: Provided, That the non-commissioned officers shall not be allowed more than one dollar per day, nor the privates more than seventy-five cents per day, each person finding his horse, arms, and accoutrements, and at his own risk, and twenty-five cents per day in lieu of rations and forage, provided he furnish himself therewith."

And the report being read, it was ordered to lie on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate; that the House of Representatives agree to the report of the managers of the conference on the bill, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States."

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives, adopting the report of the managers of the conference last mentioned; whereupon,

Resolved, That the Senate concur with the House of Representatives in the adoption of the said report.

The Senate proceeded to the third reading of the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons."

On motion to restore the words "Richard Shubrick" to the bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, it passed in the negative.

On motion to strike out the clause adopted yesterday as the second section, to wit:

"Section 2. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Comptroller of the Treasury adjust the claims of the widows and orphans, respectively, as the case may be, of Colonel Owen Roberts, Captain William White, Lieutenant Colonel Bernard Eliot, Major Samuel Wise, Major Benjamin Huger, Lieutenant John Bush, and Major Charles Motte, deceased, (all of whom were killed or died in the service of the United States,) for the seven years' half pay stipulated by the resolve of Congress of the 24th day of August, 1780; and that the Register of the Treasury do issue his certificates accordingly."

It passed in the negative.

Resolved, That this bill pass as amended, and that the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in this bill as amended.

The petition of James Simons, an officer in the army of the United States during the late war, was presented and read, praying compensation for his services.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to report thereon.

MONDAY, March 5.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives disagree to the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth amendments to the fourth section of the bill, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay, and to invalid pensions," and agree to all the other amendments thereon.

The Senate proceeded to consider their amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives on the bill above mentioned; and,

Resolved, That they insist thereon, desire a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that Messrs. ELLSWORTH, STRONG, and RUTHERFORD, be appointed managers thereof, on the part of the Senate.

The following Message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

Knowing the friendly interest you take in whatever may promote the happiness and prosperity of the French nation, it is with pleasure that I lay before you the translation of a Letter which I have received from his most Christian Majesty, announcing to the United States of America his acceptance of the Constitution presented to him in the name of his nation.

G. WASHINGTON.
UNITED STATES, March 5, 1792.

[Translation.]

Very dear, Great Friends and Allies:

We make it our duty to inform you that we have accepted the Constitution which has been presented to us in the name of the nation, and according to which France will be henceforth governed.

We do not doubt that you take an interest in an event so important to our Kingdom, and to us; and that it is with real pleasure we take this occasion to renew to you assurances of the sincere friendship we bear you. Whereupon, we pray God to have you, very dear, great friends and allies, in his just and holy keeping.

Written at Paris, the 19th of September, 1791.
Your good friend and ally,

LOUIS.
MONTMORIN.

THE UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA.

Another written Message was, at the same time, received from the President of the United States, as followeth:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you a copy of the Return of the number of inhabitants in the district of South Carolina, as made to me by the Marshal thereof; and the copy of a letter which accompanied said return.

G. WASHINGTON.
UNITED STATES, March 3, 1792.

The schedule referred to in the last recited Message is as followeth:

DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.
Free white males of sixteen years, and upwards, including heads of families	35,576
Free white males under sixteen years	37,722
Free white females, including heads of families	66,880
All other free persons	1,801
Slaves	107,094
Total	249,073

The Messages and papers therein mentioned were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

MARCH, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

Agreeably to the order of the day, the Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration; and making provision for another enumeration; and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

TUESDAY, March 6.

Mr. BURR, from the committee appointed to consider of the expediency of building a light-house on Montauk point, reported, that the measure appeared to the committee expedient and necessary; and that they had prepared a draft of a bill for that purpose.

The bill was presented and read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives agree to the proposed conference on the amendments insisted on by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay, and to invalid pensions," and have appointed managers on their part.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797." And, on motion to amend the title and the first section, as follows:

"An Act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1803.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, in the year 1793, the House of Representatives shall be composed of one hundred and twenty members, elected within the several States according to the following apportionment: that is to say, within the State of New Hampshire five, within the State of Massachusetts six, within the State of Vermont three, within the State of Rhode Island two, within the State of New Jersey six, within the State of Pennsylvania fourteen, within the State of Delaware two, within the State of New York eleven, within the State of Maryland nine, within the State of Virginia twenty-one, within the State of Kentucky two, within the State of North Carolina twelve, within the State of South Carolina seven, and within the State of Georgia two."

It passed in the negative; yeas 13, nays 14—as follows:
YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rut-erford, Stanton, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Butler, Carroll, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Lee, Monroe, Morris, Sherman, and Strong.

On motion to amend the first clause of the first section, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, in the year 1793, the House of Representatives shall be composed of members elected within the several States, according to the following apportionment: that is to say, according to the affirmative; yeas 15, nays 12—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rut-erford, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Butler, Carroll, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, Lee, Monroe, and Morris.

On motion to amend the second clause of the first section, as follows:

"Within the State of New Hampshire four, within the State of Massachusetts fourteen, within the State of Vermont two, within the State of Rhode Island two, within the State of Connecticut seven, within the State of New York ten, within the State of New Jersey five, within the State of Pennsylvania thirteen, within the State of Delaware one, within the State of Maryland eight, within the State of Virginia nineteen, within the State of Kentucky two, within the State of North Carolina ten, within the State of South Carolina six, and within the State of Georgia two;"

It passed in the negative; yeas 11, nays 16—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Robinson, Rutherford, Sherman, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bassett, Burr, Butler, Carroll, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, Lee, Monroe, Morris, Read, and Stanton.

On motion to agree to the title, and the first section of the bill, amended as follows:

"An Act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, in the year 1793, the House of Representatives shall be composed of members elected within the several States according to the following apportionment: that is to say, within the State of New Hampshire five, within the State of Massachusetts six, within the State of Vermont three, within the State of Rhode Island two, within the State of New Jersey six, within the State of Pennsylvania fourteen, within the State of Delaware two, within the State of New York eleven, within the State of Maryland nine, within the State of Virginia twenty-one, within the State of Kentucky two, within the State of North Carolina twelve, within the State of South Carolina seven, and within the State of Georgia two."

It passed in the affirmative; yeas 15, nays 12—as follows:
YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Burr, Butler, Carroll, Few,

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[MARCH, 1792.]

Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, King, Lee, Monroe, Morris, and Read.
 YAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

On motion to expunge the second section of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, it passed in the affirmative; yeas 14, nays 13—as follows:

YAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Morris, Robinson, Rutheford, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.
 NAYS.—Messrs. Bassett, Burr, Butler, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, Langdon, Lee, Monroe, and Read.

On motion, it was agreed to restore the second section, so amended as to provide for an enumeration to be taken in the year 1798, instead of the year 1796.

On motion, it was agreed to expunge the third and fourth sections of the bill as it passed the House of Representatives.

Ordered, That this bill pass to the third reading. A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

WEDNESDAY, March 7.

The bill to erect a light-house on Montauk Point, in the State of New York, was read the second time, and the further consideration thereof postponed.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for the apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," was read the third time.

Ordered, That the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Tuesday next.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed a resolution agreeing to some, and disagreeing to other, amendments of the Senate on the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons."

The resolution of the House of Representatives, on the amendments above mentioned, was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

THURSDAY, March 8.

Ordered, That Messrs. Strong, Lee, and Ellsworth, be appointed a committee, to consider and report any alterations that may be necessary in the mode of entering and publishing the journals of the Senate.

MARCH, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

only as shall be affected by proposed amendments, be inserted on the journals.

That the Secretary be directed, once in each week at least, to furnish one of the printers of a public newspaper with a copy of the journals of the Senate, while in their Legislative capacity, unless otherwise specially directed.

A motion was made and seconded, that it be

Resolved, That the President of the United States of America be requested to make known to the King of the French the satisfaction with which the Senate of the United States has received the official communication of his acceptance of a Constitution, which, it is their earnest wish, may establish, on a solid basis, the freedom and prosperity of the French nation, and the happiness and glory of the Monarch presiding over it.

Ordered, That the consideration of this motion be postponed until to-morrow.

It was agreed, by unanimous consent, that the order assigning to-morrow for the third reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," be reconsidered, and to proceed at this time in the third reading of the said bill.

On motion to amend the first section, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, in the year 1793, the House of Representatives shall be composed of one hundred and twenty members, elected within the several States according to the following apportionment: that is to say, within the State of New Hampshire five, within the State of Massachusetts sixteen, within the State of Vermont three, within the State of Rhode Island two, within the State of Connecticut eight, within the State of New York eleven, within the State of New Jersey six, within the State of Pennsylvania fourteen, within the State of Delaware two, within the State of Maryland nine, within the State of Virginia twenty-one, within the State of Kentucky two, within the State of North Carolina twelve, within the State of South Carolina seven, and within the State of Georgia two;"

It passed in the affirmative; yeas 14, nays 13—as follows:

YAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutheford, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Butler, Carroll, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Lee, Monroe, Morris, and Sherman.

On motion to amend the amendment last agreed to, by inserting these words, after the word "apportionment,"

"Made by dividing the whole aggregate numbers of the people in the United States by thirty thousand, and apportioning them among the several States by that ratio, until they shall respectively have the number to which it will entitle them, and the residue of said members among those States having the highest fractions;"

2d CON — 5

It passed in the negative; yeas 7, nays 20—as follows:

YAS.—Messrs. Carroll, Dickinson, Henry, Johnston, Lee, Monroe, and Morris.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Burr, Butler, Cabot, Ellsworth, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Izard, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutheford, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

On motion to amend the first enacting clause, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the third day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three, the House of Representatives shall be composed of one hundred and twenty members, being one member for every thirty thousand persons within the United States, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution, and who shall be apportioned to and elected within the several States, according to their respective numbers;"

It passed in the negative; yeas 11, nays 18—as follows:

YAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Butler, Carroll, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Lee, Monroe, Morris, Rutheford, Sherman, Stanton, and Strong.

It was agreed to expunge the second section as adopted by the Senate on the 6th instant, and that the title of the bill be amended as follows:

"An Act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States according to the first enumeration."

On the question, Shall this bill pass as amended? It passed in the affirmative; yeas 14, nays 13—as follows:

YAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutheford, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Butler, Carroll, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Lee, Monroe, Morris, and Sherman.

Ordered, That the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in this bill as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanied with returns of the various descriptions of vessels employed during the year ending the 30th of September, 1790, in the import trade of each State at that time comprehended in the Union, together with the foreign places from whence they departed for the United States. Also, the returns exhibiting, as far as the public accounts admit, the various species of merchandise imported during the year ending on the 30th day of September above mentioned.

Ordered, That the Letter and papers referred to lie on the table.

TUESDAY, March 13.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion yesterday on the Message from the

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[MARCH, 1792.]

President of the United States, transmitting a copy of a Letter from his Most Christian Majesty to the United States of America.

A motion was made and seconded to postpone this motion, in order to take up the following:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be informed that the Senate have received with satisfaction the official intelligence that the King of the French has accepted the Constitution presented to him by the National Assembly, and are highly gratified by every event that promotes the freedom and prosperity of the French nation and the happiness and glory of their King."

It passed in the negative; yeas 6, nays 21—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Cabot, Ellsworth, King, Strong, and Wingate.
NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Burr, Butler, Carroll, Dickinson, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Izard, Langdon, Lee, Monroe, Morris, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Stanton, and Sherman.

The original motion, being amended, was agreed to. Whereupon, it was Resolved, That the President be requested to make known to the King of the French, that the Senate of the United States have received with the highest satisfaction the official communication of his acceptance of a Constitution on which, it is their earnest wish, may establish, on a solid basis, the freedom and prosperity of the French nation, and the happiness and glory of the Monarch presiding over it.

WEDNESDAY, March 14.

Ordered, That the resolution of the Senate, on the Message of the President of the United States, enclosing the Letter from his Most Christian Majesty, be signed by the Vice President, and laid before the President of the United States, by the Secretary.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House of Representatives have passed a bill, entitled "An act declaring the consent of Congress to a certain act of the State of Maryland, and to continue, for a longer time, an act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of the States of Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, so far as the same respects the States of Georgia and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations," to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The report of the managers of the conference on the matters of disagreement between the two Houses on the bill, entitled "An act to ascertain and regulate the claims to half pay and to invalid pensions," was again read, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Senate insist on their amendments to the said bill, to which the House of Representatives have disagreed; and agree further to amend the bill, by inserting, between the fourth and fifth sections, a section, as follows, to wit:

"And be it further enacted, That the Clerk of the District Court in each district shall publish this act in such manner as the Judge of the District Court shall think effectual, to give general information thereof to the people of the District; and shall give like information of the times and places of holding the Circuit Courts in such district. And, in districts wherein a circuit court is not directed by law to be holden, the Judge of the District Court shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to exercise all the powers given by this act to the respective Circuit Courts. And it shall be the duty of the Judges of the Circuit Courts respectively during the term of two years from the passing of this act, to remain at the place where the said courts shall be holden five days, at the least, from the time of opening the sessions thereof, that persons disabled as aforesaid may have full opportunity to make their application for the relief proposed by this act."

Mr. BUTLER reported, from the committee on the petition of Moses Young, as follows:

"That they have fully examined the evidences of his claim, and are of opinion that it is founded in justice. They, therefore, recommend that he may have credit for his salary at the rate of five hundred pounds sterling a year, for the time he was engaged or employed in the public service, and that the sums received by his attorney be deducted therefrom."

On motion to agree to the report, it passed in the negative.

THURSDAY, March 15.

The second reading of the bill to erect a light-house on Montauk Point, in the State of New York, was resumed, and sundry amendments agreed to.

Ordered, That this bill be recommitted, with instruction to report such further amendments as, on inquiry, may be found requisite.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act declaring the consent of Congress to a certain act of the State of Maryland, and to continue, for a longer time, an act declaring the assent of Congress to certain acts of the States of Maryland, Georgia, and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, so far as the same respects the States of Georgia, and Rhode Island and Providence Plantations," was read the first time.

On motion, it was agreed, by unanimous consent, that this bill be now read the second and third times.

Resolved, That this bill pass.

FRIDAY, March 16.

Ordered, That a committee be appointed to consider and report what may be necessary to prevent the sufferings of persons imprisoned for debt, on judgments rendered in the courts of the United States, and that Messrs. ELLSWORTH, LEE, and STRONG, be the committee.

The Vice President laid before the Senate a Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with a return of the exports from the United States for one year, ending the 30th of September, 1791, exhibiting the islands and countries to which those exports have been shipped.

Mr. BURN, from the committee to whom was recommended the bill to erect a light-house on Montauk Point, in the State of New York, reported amendments; which were read and agreed to.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading.

[MARCH, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

MONDAY, March 19.

A petition of Edward Darrell, attorney to Theodore Godet, administrator to Thomas Nelmes, was presented and read, praying compensation for a vessel and cargo of rice, said to be appropriated to the use of the United States during the late war.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, to examine and report thereon to the Senate.

The bill for erecting a light-house on Montauk Point, in the State of New York, was read a third time.

Resolved, That this bill pass, and that the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in this bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 7th of March, on the amendments to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons."

Resolved, That the Senate insist on all their amendments to the first section, except the last, from which they recede; and that they insist on their last amendment to the fourth section.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives disagree to all the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration; and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," and desire a conference on the subject-matter of the said amendments, having appointed managers at the said conference on their part. They recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of widows and orphans barred by the limitations heretofore established, and to regulate the claims to invalid pensions."

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797," and desiring a conference.

Resolved, That the Senate agree to the conference, and that Messrs. ELLSWORTH, BURN, and BUTLER, be the managers thereof on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ELLSWORTH, from the committee appointed, reported a further amendment to the bill, entitled "An act providing for the settlement of the claims of persons under particular circumstances, barred by the limitations heretofore established," which was read and agreed to.

Resolved, That this bill pass as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the committee appointed for that purpose, reported a bill for fixing the compensations of the Doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress. The bill was read the first time, and ordered to pass to a second reading.

TUESDAY, March 20.

The bill for fixing the compensations of the Doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress, was read the second time; and, being amended, ordered to pass to a third reading.

Mr. GUNN reported, from the committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States; which report was read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON obtained leave to bring in a bill to alter the times of holding certain of the circuit courts of the United States.

The bill was read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, read a second time, and referred to Messrs. JOHNSTON, SHERMAN, and STRONG, to consider and report thereon, and that it be an instruction to the committee to bring in a clause to establish such rotation in the attendance of the judges at the circuit courts as may best apportion the burden, and not impede the discharge of the duties of their office.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of certain widows, orphans, invalids, and other persons," and agree to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act providing for the settlement of the claims of persons under particular circumstances barred by the limitations heretofore established."

The following Message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

The several acts which have been passed relatively to the Military Establishment of the United States, and the protection of the frontiers, do not appear to have made provision for more than one Brigadier General; it is incumbent upon me to observe, that, with a view merely to the organization of the troops designated by those acts, a greater number of officers of that grade would, in my opinion, be conducive to the good of the public service. But an increase of the number becomes still more desirable in reference to a different organization which is contemplated, pursuant to the authority vested in me for that purpose, and which, besides other advantages expected from it, is recommended by considerations of economy. I therefore request that you will be pleased to take this subject into your early consideration, and to adopt such measures thereon as you shall judge proper.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, March 20, 1792.

The Message was read, and ordered that it be referred to Messrs. BURN, GUNN, and HAWKINS, to consider and report thereon.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[MARCH, 1792.]

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[MARCH, 1792.]

WEDNESDAY, March 21.

The Vice President laid before the Senate the petition of Thomas Claxton, praying an annual salary as an assistant Doorkeeper; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The bill for fixing the compensations of the Doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress, was read the third time.

On motion to insert these words, "and that the assistant Doorkeeper to each House shall be allowed, in full compensation for his services in said office, four hundred and fifty dollars per annum," it passed in the negative.

Resolved, That this bill pass; that it be engrossed; and that the title thereof be "An act for fixing the compensations of the Doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress."

Ordered, That the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," be the order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the committee to whom was referred the bill to alter the times of holding certain of the circuit courts of the United States, reported sundry amendments; which report was read, and agreed to.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading.

THURSDAY, March 22.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," as in committee of the whole; and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

Mr. ELLSWORTH reported, from the managers of the conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the first enumeration, and making provision for another enumeration, and an apportionment of Representatives thereon, to compose the House of Representatives after the 3d day of March, 1797;" that they had conferred with the managers appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, but had come to no agreement.

On motion to insist on the amendment to the first section of the bill above mentioned, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 14, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

NAYS.—Messrs. Butler, Carroll, Dickinson, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, Lee, Monroe, Morris, and Sherman.

On motion to recede from all the amendments to the bill, subsequent to the first section, it passed in the negative—yeas 9, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Carroll, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, Lee, and Monroe.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Burr, Cabot, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Foster, King, Langdon, Morris, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

On motion, Resolved, That the Senate insist on all the amendments subsequent to the first section of the bill above mentioned.

A petition of Augustus Christian Geo. Elholm was presented and read, praying encouragement in the prosecution of certain discoveries respecting "the fundamental law that rules our solar system, together with the cause of the motions and variations of the magnetic needle; and for compensation for a supply of arms to the United States during the late war."

Ordered, That this petition lie on the table. The bill to alter the times of holding certain of the circuit courts of the United States, was read the third time; and, being amended, it was

Resolved, That this bill pass; that it be engrossed; and that the title thereof be "An act for altering the times of holding the circuit courts in certain districts of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. BURR, from the committee appointed on the Message of the President of the United States of the 20th instant, reported a bill supplemental to the act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States; which was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

FRIDAY, March 23.

The bill supplemental to the act making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States, was read the second time; and being amended, was ordered to pass to the third reading.

It was agreed, by unanimous consent, that this bill be now read the third time, and it was so read, and passed.

On motion by Mr. MORRIS, seconded by Mr. DICKINSON, the petitions of the "Societies of the people called Quakers," resident in New England, in the States of New York, of Pennsylvania, of New Jersey, of Delaware, of Maryland, of Virginia, and of North Carolina, were severally read, praying exemption from militia duty.

Ordered, That the petitions lie on the table. The second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," was resumed, as in committee of the whole; and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

MONDAY, March 26.

Mr. STRONG reported, from the committee to whom was referred the memorial of the Illinois and Wabash land companies; which report was read, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

A motion was made by Mr. MONROE, seconded by Mr. LEE, as follows:

Resolved, That it be a standing rule, that the doors of the Senate Chamber remain open whilst the Senate shall be sitting in their Legislative capacity, except on such occasions as in their judgment may require secrecy; and that this rule shall commence and be in force on the first day of the next session of Congress; and it passed in the negative—yeas 8, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Butler, Carroll, Foster, Hawkins, Johnston, King, Lee, and Monroe.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Cabot, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Few, Gunn, Henry, Izard, Langdon, Read, Robinson, Rutherford, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States;" and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States," with an amendment, in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate took into consideration the said message; and,

Resolved, That they disagree to the amendment to the bill therein mentioned.

The Senate took into consideration the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act supplemental to the act for making further and more effectual provision for the protection of the frontiers of the United States."

Resolved, That they agree to the said amendment.

The bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for finishing the light-house on Baldhead, at the mouth of Cape Fear river, in the State of North Carolina," was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for ascertaining the bounds of a tract of land purchased by John Cleves Symmes," was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

TUESDAY, March 27.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for ascertaining the bounds of a tract of land purchased by John Cleves Symmes," was read the second time; and the petition, and other papers on which it was founded, being read, Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. STRONG, LEE, and READ, to consider and report thereon.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives, in which they adhere to their amendment to the bill establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States.

Resolved, That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the said amendment.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for finishing the light-house on Baldhead, at the mouth of Cape Fear river, in the State of North Carolina," was read the second time.

Ordered, That it be referred to Messrs. JOHNSTON, LANGDON, and SHERMAN, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. CABOT presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, on the petition of Charles Knowles and others, late regimental paymasters and agents of that State's quota of the continental army; which was read, and ordered to be referred to the Secretary of War, to consider and report thereon to the Senate.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States;" and, after progress, adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, March 28.

Mr. JOHNSTON reported, from the committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for finishing the light-house on Baldhead, at the mouth of Cape Fear river, in the State of North Carolina;" and it was accordingly read a third time and passed.

Ordered, That it be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire into, and report to Congress at their next session, the expediency of erecting a light-house on Ocracoke island, or elsewhere, near the entrance of Ocracoke inlet, and an estimate of the probable expense.

Mr. IZARD presented the petition of Laurens Manning, an officer in the South Carolina line of the late army, praying to be allowed his commutation; which was read, and ordered that it be referred to Messrs. IZARD, SHERMAN, and KING, to consider and report thereon.

Ordered, That Messrs. MORRIS, KING, and CABOT, be a committee to report a bill compensating the services of the late George Gibson.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States;" and, after agreeing to sundry amendments, as reported by the committee, Ordered, that this bill pass to the third reading.

THURSDAY, March 29.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," was read the third time.

On motion, it was agreed further to amend the

SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[APRIL, 1792.]

bill, as follows; to strike out the proviso at the end of the first section, to wit:

"Provided always, That if any person, enrolled as aforesaid, shall, by a majority of the field officers of the regiment to which he may belong, be deemed and adjudged unable to purchase the arms and accoutrements required by this act, he shall be excused from a forfeiture for any deficiency therein, until he can procure them, or until they are provided for him."

To expunge these words from section 7, "and the said Adjutant General shall have the rank of a Brigadier in the militia."

Also, these words, section 8, "prescribed to the late army of the United States by the then Major General Baron Steuben," so that the paragraph be read as follows: "Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the rules of discipline approved and established by Congress, in their resolution of the twenty-ninth day of March, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine, shall be the rules of discipline to be observed by the militia throughout the United States."

It was also agreed to expunge the 16th section, to wit:

"And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any State from establishing such further regulations for the more effectually training their militia, according to the foregoing rules of discipline, as the Legislature thereof shall think proper to direct."

On motion by Mr. RUTHERFORD, seconded by Mr. LEZ, to add the following proviso to an amendment agreed on in Committee of the Whole, as the last section of the bill:

"And provided further, That no sentence of a court martial shall extend to the taking of life or limb, or to any corporal punishment, except in case an officer or private shall hold a traitorous correspondence with the enemy, or shall desert, or attempt to desert, to them, or shall misbehave in time of action, or shamefully abandon any post, or shall speak words inducing others to offend in any of the foregoing instances."

It passed in the negative.

On the question, Shall this bill pass as amended? It was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 22, nays 1, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bassett, Bradley, Cabot, Carroll, Ellsworth, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, King, Langdon, Lee, Monroe, Read, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

Mr. Rutherford voted in the negative.

FRIDAY, March 30.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a Letter from Thomas Fielder, representing that there are certain deficiencies in the present laws respecting exclusive privileges to original inventors," which was read, and ordered to lie.

Ordered, That Messrs. CABOT, IZARD, and SHERMAN, be a committee to consider the expediency of, and, if they think proper, to report a bill respecting fugitives from justice, and from the service of masters.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to procure, and deposit in his office, the laws of the several States, for the use of the Senate.

MONDAY, April 2.

Mr. ELLSWORTH reported, from the committee appointed for that purpose, a bill for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt; which was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

Ordered, That Messrs. IZARD, MORRIS, and LANGDON, be a committee to bring in a bill further to extend the act, entitled "An act to continue in force the act therein mentioned, and to make further provision for the payment of pensions to invalids, and for the support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers."

Mr. STRONG, from the committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act ascertaining the bounds of a tract of land purchased by John Cleves Symmes," reported an amendment, which was agreed to.

Ordered, That this bill pass to the third reading.

TUESDAY, April 3.

Ordered, That Messrs. KING, STRONG, and ELLSWORTH, be a committee to consider and report whether any, and what, alterations are necessary to be made in the acts establishing the Treasury and War Departments.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for ascertaining the bounds of a tract of land purchased by John Cleves Symmes," was read the third time, and the further consideration thereof postponed.

The bill for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt was read the second time; and, being amended, the bill was ordered to pass to the third reading.

WEDNESDAY, April 4.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for ascertaining the bounds of a tract of land purchased by John Cleves Symmes," was read the third time.

Resolved, That this bill pass as amended.

The bill for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt was read the third time.

On motion, to insert these words in lieu of the second section:

"That persons imprisoned as aforesaid shall be entitled to the same allowance for support as debtors confined in the same jails by executions issuing from the courts of such States are entitled to by the laws of the same, subject to the like regulations and restrictions;" It passed in the negative.

Resolved, That this bill pass; that it be engrossed; and that the title thereof be, "An act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt."

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to bring in a bill for joining the Secretary, Comptroller, and Auditor, of the Treasury, to the Board of Commissioners for settling the accounts between the United States and the individual States.

Ordered, That the consideration of this motion be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. IZARD reported from the committee appointed to take into consideration the subject relative to Weights and Measures.

APRIL, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

Ordered, That the report be printed for the use of the Senate.

THURSDAY, April 5.

The consideration of the motion made yesterday, "that a committee be appointed to bring in a bill for joining the Secretary, Comptroller, and Auditor of the Treasury, to the Board of Commissioners for settling the accounts between the United States and the individual States," was further postponed.

Mr. IZARD reported, from the committee appointed for that purpose, a bill supplementary to the act for the establishment and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers; which was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

On motion, that it be

"Resolved, That Congress will adjourn on Saturday, the 14th of April, instant;"

A motion was made that the consideration of this motion be postponed until to-morrow; which passed in the negative.

On motion, that a committee be appointed on the part of the Senate to confer with such committee as the House of Representatives may appoint on their part, on the day proper for Congress to close the present session; it passed in the negative.

On motion, it was agreed to amend the first motion on this subject. Whereupon,

Resolved, That Congress will adjourn on Tuesday, the 17th day of April, instant.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House of Representatives agree to the amendment of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for ascertaining the bounds of a tract of land purchased by John Cleves Symmes;" and that they have passed a bill, entitled "An act to compensate the Corporation of Trustees of the Public Grammar School and Academy of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, for the occupation of, and damages done to the said school during the late war," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill last mentioned was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

The report of the committee appointed to consider the subject of Weights and Measures was read, as follows:

1. That it is their opinion, the standard for the Measures and Weights of the United States be an uniform cylindrical rod of iron, of such length as, in latitude 45° in the level of the ocean, and in a cellar of uniform natural temperature, shall perform its vibrations in small and equal arcs, in one second of mean time.

2. That the President of the United States be requested to have such a standard rod provided; that it be prepared with all the accuracy which the importance of the object merits, and circumstances admit; that this be done either by actual experiments under the parallel of 45° of latitude complete, or by actual experiments, rectified by due allowances, under any other parallel, where a superiority of means for accurate experiment may promise on the whole greater truth in the result.

3. That the expenses of the measures he shall adopt for this purpose, not exceeding ——— dollars, be defrayed by the public.

4. That the standard rod, so to be provided, shall be divided into five equal parts, one of which, to be called a foot, shall be the unit of measures of length for the United States.

That the foot shall be divided into 10 inches, the inch into 10 lines, the line into 10 points; and that 10 feet make a decad, 10 decads a rood, 10 roods a furlong, and 10 furlongs a mile.

5. That measures of surface in the United States be made by squares of the measures of length; and that in the case of lands, the unit shall be a square, whereof every side shall be 100 feet, to be called a rood; that each rood be divided into tenths and hundredths; that 10 roods make a double acre; and 10 double acres a square furlong.

6. That the unit of measures of capacity in the United States be a cubic foot, to be called a bushel, that each bushel be divided into 10 pottles; each pottle into 10 demi pints; each demi pint into 10 metres; that 10 bushels be a quarter; and 10 quarters a last or double ton.

7. That the unit of weights of the United States be a cubic inch of rain water, to be called an ounce, and to be measured and weighed in a cellar of uniform natural temperature; that the ounce be divided into 10 double scruples; the double scruple into 10 carats; the carats into 10 minims or demi grains; the minims into 10 mites; that 10 ounces make a pound; 10 pounds a stone; 10 stones a quintal; 10 quintals a hoghead.

Ordered, That the consideration of this Report be postponed until the next session of Congress.

FRIDAY, April 6.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to compensate the Corporation of Trustees of the Public Grammar School and Academy of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, for the occupation of, and damages done to, the said school during the late war," was read the second time; and Ordered, that this bill pass to the third reading.

The bill supplementary to the act for establishing and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, was read the second time, and amended.

It was agreed, by unanimous consent, that this bill be now read the third time.

Resolved, That this bill pass; that it be engrossed; and that the title thereof be "An act supplementary to the act for the establishment of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers."

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act for fixing the compensations of the Doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress," with amendments, in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate. They have passed a bill, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to the Ohio company of associates," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[APRIL, 1792.]

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for fixing the compensations of the Doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress." Whereupon,

Resolved, That they agree to the first amendment, and that they disagree to the other amendment, proposed as an additional section.

MONDAY, April 9.

The third reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to compensate the Corporation of Trustees of the Public Grammar School and Academy of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, for the occupation of, and damages done to, the said school during the late war," was postponed until to-morrow.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to the Ohio company of associates," was read the second time.

Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. RUTHERFORD, GUNN, and SHERMAN, to consider and report thereon.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, notifying the Senate that the bill, entitled "An act for an apportionment of Representatives among the several States according to the first enumeration," had been returned to that House, by the PRESIDENT, with the following objections:

"1st. The Constitution has prescribed that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers; and there is no one proportion or divisor, which, applied to the respective numbers of the States, will yield the number and allotment of Representatives proposed by the bill. 2d. The Constitution has also provided, that the number of Representatives shall not exceed one for thirty thousand; which restriction is, by the context, and by fair and obvious construction, to be applied to the separate and respective numbers of the States; and the bill has allotted to eight of the States more than one for thirty thousand."

And that, upon a reconsideration of the bill, two-thirds of that House did not agree to pass the same.

The House of Representatives farther notified the Senate, that they concur in the bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the act for the establishment and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers," with an amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate. Also, that the House of Representatives recede from their last amendment to the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act for fixing the compensations of the Doorkeepers of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress." And, that the House of Representatives concur in the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act to erect a light-house on Montauk Point, in the State of New York."

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the memorial of Joseph Ceracchi, stating the terms on which he would begin the execution of the National Monument, mentioned in his memorial of October last; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The amendment of the House of Representatives on the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act supplementary to the act for the establishment and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers," was read.

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

TUESDAY, April 10.

Mr. KING, from the committee appointed to consider and report whether any, and what, alterations are necessary to be made in the acts establishing the Treasury and War Departments, reported a bill; which was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

The memorial of Thomas Fielder was read, stating, that he had invented an apparatus for facilitating navigation, and, having been at considerable expense, praying the aid of Government to enable him to improve his plan.

Ordered, That the bill, entitled "An act to compensate the Corporation of Trustees of the Public Grammar School and Academy of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, for the occupation of, and damages done to, the said school during the late war," be referred to Messrs. LANGDON, READ, and MONROE, to consider and report thereon.

A message from the House of Representatives, informed the Senate that the House of Representatives have passed the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls," with amendments. Also, the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act for altering the times of holding the circuit courts in certain districts of the United States, and for other purposes," with amendments; in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate. And they have passed a bill, entitled "An act for apportioning Representatives among the several States according to the first enumeration;" and a bill, entitled "An act to extend the time heretofore granted for the payment of the duties on certain teas imported after the third day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one;" to which bills they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for apportioning Representatives among the several States according to the first enumeration," was read the first time. On motion, it was agreed, by unanimous consent, that this bill be now read the second and third times.

Resolved, That this bill pass. The Senate took into consideration the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls."

Resolved, That they concur in the said amendments. The Senate took into consideration the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for altering the times for holding

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

ing the circuit courts in districts of the United States, and for other purposes," and concurred in the said amendments.

The bill entitled "An act to extend the time heretofore granted for the payment of the duties on certain teas imported after the third day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one," was read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time.

Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. KING, MORRIS, and LANGDON, to consider and report thereon.

WEDNESDAY, April 11.

The bill, respecting alterations necessary to be made in the acts establishing the Treasury and War Departments, was read the second time.

Ordered, That the further consideration of this bill be postponed.

Mr. MORRIS presented the memorial of James Wilson and others, on behalf of the Illinois and Wabash land company, praying to be heard by counsel, on the report of the committee of the Senate to whom their petition of the 15th of December last was referred.

Ordered, That this memorial lie on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed a bill, entitled "An act to indemnify the estate of the late Major General Nathaniel Green, for a certain bond entered into by him during the late war."

Mr. LANGDON reported, from the committee appointed on the bill, entitled "An act to compensate the Corporation of Trustees of the Grammar School and Academy of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, for the occupation of, and damages done to, the said school during the late war."

Resolved, That the Senate concur with the House of Representatives in this bill.

The bill, entitled "An act to indemnify the estate of the late Major General Nathaniel Green, for a certain bond entered into by him during the late war," was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

THURSDAY, April 12.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to indemnify the estate of the late General Nathaniel Green, for a certain bond entered into by him during the late war," was referred to Messrs. IZARD, CABOT, STRONG, JOHNSTON, and ELLSWORTH, to consider and report thereon.

The petition of John Cleves Symmes, by Jonathan Dayton, his agent, was read, praying to have the same indulgencies extended to him and his associates, as are granted, or about to be granted, to the Ohio company, in respect to their future payments for lands purchased from the U. States.

Ordered, That this petition lie on the table.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill respecting alterations necessary to be made in the acts establishing the Treasury and War

Departments; and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

The petition of Charles Colvill and John Robertson was read, praying to be reimbursed certain sums advanced by their friends to redeem them from captivity at Algiers; also, that Congress would take into consideration the situation of Captain O'Brien and his crew; and of the crew of the schooner Maria, whereof Isaac Stephens was master, remaining in slavery.

Ordered, That this petition lie on the table.

Mr. RUTHERFORD, from the committee appointed to take into consideration the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to the Ohio company of associates," reported sundry amendments; which were read.

Ordered, That they lie on the table.

FRIDAY, April 13.

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill respecting alterations necessary to be made in the acts establishing the Treasury and War Departments, and, after progress, the further consideration thereof was postponed until to-morrow.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have agreed to all the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," except the two last, to which they disagree.

The following Message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I have thought it proper to lay before you a communication of the 11th instant from the Minister Plenipotentiary of Great Britain, to the Secretary of State, relative to the commerce of the two countries, together with their explanatory correspondence, and the Secretary of State's letter to me on the subject.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, April 13, 1792.

The Message and papers therein referred to were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The Senate took into consideration the amendments to the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States."

On motion to recede from the amendments, it passed in the negative.

On motion, it was agreed that the further consideration thereof be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. READ presented a deed executed by the Senators of the State of Delaware, "transferring to the United States the right of that State of and in the light-house of Cape Henlopen, and piers at Reeden island, with all necessary jurisdiction over the same."

SATURDAY, April 14.

The Senate took into consideration the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to the Ohio company of associates," and the amendments reported thereon by the committee; and, after debate, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[APRIL, 1792.]

The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill respecting alterations necessary to be made in the acts establishing the Treasury and War Departments; and, after debate, the further consideration thereof was postponed.

The Senate took into consideration their amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives on the bill, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States;" and, on motion to recede therefrom, it passed in the negative.

Ordered, That the further consideration of this bill be postponed.

MONDAY, April 16

The following Message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you a copy of a Letter from the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States, held for the New York district; and of their opinion and agreement respecting the "Act to provide for the settlement of the claims of widows and orphans barred by the limitations heretofore established, and to regulate the claims to invalid pensions."

UNITED STATES, April 16, 1792.

The Message and papers were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The Senate took into consideration their amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives on the bill, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States."

On motion to insist thereon, it passed in the negative.

On motion, it was agreed that the further consideration of the amendments to this bill be postponed.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to the Ohio company of associates;" and the report of the committee being read,

On the question to amend the bill as reported, it passed in the negative.

On the question to agree to the third section of the bill, as sent from the House of Representatives, to wit:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he hereby is, further authorized and empowered, by letters patent, as aforesaid, to grant and convey to the said Rufus Putnam, Manasseh Cutler, Robert Oliver, and Griffin Greene, and to their heirs and assigns, in fee simple, in trust for the uses above expressed, a further quantity of one hundred thousand acres of land: Provided always, nevertheless, That the said grant of one hundred thousand acres shall be made on the express condition of becoming void, for such part thereof as the said company shall not have, within five years from the passing of this act, conveyed in fee simple, as a bounty, and free of expense, in tracts of one hundred acres, to each male person, not less than eighteen years of age, being an actual settler at the time of such conveyance."

[APRIL, 1792.]

Proceedings.

It passed in the affirmative by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Foster, Izard, Langdon, Lee, Morris, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, and Wingate.—11.

NAYS.—Messrs. Burr, Carroll, Ellsworth, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Monroe, Read, and Rutland.—11.

The Senate being equally divided, the Vice President determined the question in the affirmative.

It was agreed to expunge the fifth section, to wit:

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the President shall be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to grant and convey, as aforesaid, to the said company of associates, in the proportion of their respective rights and interests, the residue of the said one million five hundred thousand acres of land: Provided, The said company, or any of them, or of their agents, shall, within six years from the passing of this act, pay into the Treasury of the United States therefor, at the rate of twenty-five cents per acre, with the interest thereof: Provided, nevertheless, That bounty warrants for land may be received in payment for the whole or any part of the said tract which shall remain after deducting the reserved lots."

Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading.

TUESDAY, April 17.

The Vice President requested and obtained leave of absence from the Senate, for the remainder of the session, on account of the ill state of his own health and that of his family.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill respecting alterations necessary to be made in the acts establishing the Treasury and War Departments.

On motion to agree to the twelfth section, being amended as follows:

"Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That, in addition to the compensations allowed to the Comptroller, Auditor, Treasurer, and Register of the Treasury, by the 'Act for establishing the salaries of the Executive officers of Government, their assistants and clerks,' and to the Attorney General, by 'the act for allowing certain compensations to Judges of the Supreme and other Courts, and to the Attorney General of the United States,' the said officers, respectively, shall be allowed the following yearly sums, viz: The Comptroller, four hundred dollars; the Auditor, four hundred dollars; the Treasurer, four hundred dollars; the Register, five hundred dollars; and the Attorney General, four hundred dollars."

It passed in the affirmative—yeas 20, nays 3, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Burr, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard,

[APRIL, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

Johnston, Langdon, Lee, Monroe, Morris, Read, Sherman, Stanton, and Strong.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Robinson, and Wingate. It was agreed, by unanimous consent, that this bill be now read the third time.

On motion, it was agreed to increase the salary of the Accountant of the Department of War, from one thousand to one thousand two hundred dollars.

Resolved, That this bill pass; that it be engrossed; and that the title thereof be, "An act making alterations in the Treasury and War Departments."

The Senate proceeded in the third reading of the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to the Ohio company of associates."

On motion to amend the second section, so as that the President of the United States shall be authorized to grant and convey to the said Rufus Putnam and others, one other tract of one hundred and twenty-five thousand, in lieu of two hundred and fourteen thousand two hundred and eighty-five acres of land; it passed in the negative.

On motion to add the following as an additional section:

"And be it further enacted, That the terms herein before allowed to the Ohio company of associates, so far as the same are applicable to, and respect the price of, the lands to be granted in virtue of the first payment, and the admissibility of army bounty rights in discharge thereof, be, and they are hereby, extended to John Cleves Symmes, and his associates, the purchasers of a tract of land lying upon the Ohio, and between the Miami rivers: Provided, always, and be it further enacted, That, instead of a donation of one hundred thousand acres, as mentioned in the third section, not more than sixty-six thousand acres be granted to the said John Cleves Symmes, and his associates, for the like purposes, and under the like conditions, as are therein prescribed and required."

It passed in the negative—yeas 4, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Burr, Hawkins, Johnston, and Monroe. NAYS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Few, Foster, Henry, Langdon, Lee, Morris, Read, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, and Wingate.

Resolved, That this bill pass as amended, and that the Secretary desire the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the amendment.

WEDNESDAY, April 18.

The Vice President being absent, the Senate proceeded to the election of a President pro tempore, as the Constitution provides, and the Hon. RICHARD HENRY LEE was duly elected.

Ordered, That the Secretary wait on the President of the United States, and lay before him an attested copy of this proceeding, and that he notify the House of Representatives of the election of a President pro tempore.

The petition of a number of the inhabitants of Ontario and Tioga counties, in the State of New York, was read, praying that Congress would take into consideration their present critical and dangerous situation from the inroads of the savages.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to the Ohio company of associates."

Ordered, That the consideration of the amendments of the Senate, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, on the bill, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States," be further postponed.

Ordered, That the Message from the President of the United States, of the 13th of April, instant, respecting the communication from the Minister Plenipotentiary of Great Britain, to the Secretary of State, together with the papers therein referred to, be put on file.

Ordered, That the Message from the President of the United States, of the 16th of April, instant, referring to a communication from the judges of the circuit courts, respecting the "act to provide for the settlement of the claims of widows and orphans, barred by the limitations heretofore established, and to regulate the claims to invalid pensions," together with the papers therein referred to, be put on file.

The committee appointed to take into consideration the bill, entitled "An act to extend the time heretofore granted for the payment of the duties on certain teas imported after the 3d day of March, 1791," reported that it would be inexpedient to pass the said bill; and, on the question, Shall this bill be read the third time? it passed in the negative.

On motion by Mr. Few, seconded by Mr. GUNN, "that when the Senate are sitting in their Legislative capacity, the members of the House of Representatives may be admitted to attend the debates, and each member of the Senate may also admit a number not exceeding two persons; provided the operation of this resolution be suspended until the Senate chamber is sufficiently enlarged;" It passed in the negative—yeas 6, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Burr, Few, Gunn, Hawkins, and Monroe.

NAYS.—Messrs. Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Foster, Henry, Izard, Johnston, Langdon, Morris, Read, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, Strong, and Wingate.

THURSDAY, April 19.

Resolved, That the President pro tempore of the Senate, as a member, retain his right to vote upon all questions.

Mr. MORRIS reported from the committee appointed for the purpose, a bill to compensate the services of the late Colonel George Gibson; which was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

Mr. IZARD, from the committee to whom was referred the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to indemnify the estate of the late Major General Nathaniel Green, for a certain bond entered into by him during the late war," reported amendments, which were read.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[APRIL, 1791.]

Ordered, That the consideration of the report be postponed until to-morrow.

FRIDAY, April 20.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee on the bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to indemnify the estate of the late Major General Nathaniel Green, for a certain bond entered into by him during the late war."

On motion to amend the first paragraph of the bill, conformably to the report of the committee, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States shall and will indemnify the estate of the late General Green, for the sum of eight thousand six hundred and eighty-eight pounds six shillings, sterling money, (being the amount due on the first of May, 1786, on a certain bond executed to Messrs. Mewcomen and Collet, by the said General Green, as surety for John Banks & Co.) and the interest thereon; excepting therefrom a certain conditional bond, given in June, 1786, for about one thousand six hundred pounds sterling, (the same, more or less,) being part of the aforesaid sum of eight thousand six hundred and eighty-eight pounds six shillings, which was to be paid only in case the said General Green should recover from said Banks, or Banks & Co., a sum sufficient for his indemnity."

It passed in the affirmative—yeas 17, nays 2, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Few, Foster, Gunn, Hawkins, Henry, Izard, Johnston, Langdon, Morris, Read, Sherman, and Stanton.

NAYS.—Messrs. Monroe and Wingate.

On motion, it was agreed to amend the first proviso, in conformity to the report of the committee, as follows:

"Provided, It shall appear, upon due investigation by the officers of the Treasury, that the said General Green, in his lifetime, or his executors, since his decease, have not been already indemnified or compensated for the said sum of eight thousand six hundred and eighty-eight pounds six shillings, except as aforesaid."

Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading.

The bill to compensate the services of the late Colonel George Gibson was read the second time.

Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading.

MONDAY, April 23.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, and for other purposes therein mentioned," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The following Message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I lay before you the copy of a Letter which I have received from the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States, held for the Pennsylvania district, relatively to the "Act to provide for the settlement of the claims of widows and orphans barred by the limitations heretofore established, and to regulate the claims to invalid pensions."

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, April 21, 1792.

The Message and papers were read, and ordered to be put on file.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, and for other purposes therein mentioned," was read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the bill was read the second time.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to indemnify the estate of the late Major General Nathaniel Green, for a certain bond entered into by him during the late war," was read the third time.

Resolved, That this bill pass as amended.

The petition of Moses Young was presented and read, praying allowance of depreciation on his salary as Secretary to his Excellency Henry Laurens, while President of Congress; and also on his salary as Secretary to Mr. Laurens, during his embassy to the United Netherlands.

Ordered, That the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives on the bill, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing an uniform militia throughout the United States," and,

Resolved, That the Senate insist thereon; desire a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and that Messrs. ELLSWORTH, GUNN, and KING, be managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

TUESDAY, April 24.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives agree to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act to indemnify the estate of the late Major General Nathaniel Green, for a certain bond entered into by him during the late war."

WEDNESDAY, April 25.

The Senate proceeded in the second reading of the bill, entitled "An act for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, and for other purposes therein mentioned;" and, after agreeing to sundry amendments,

Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have "Resolved, That the President of the Senate and the

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

Speaker of the House of Representatives do adjourn their respective Houses on the fifth day of May next, to close the present sessions, and to meet again on such day as may by law be directed;" in which resolution they desire the concurrence of the Senate. The House of Representatives have also passed a bill, entitled "An act to alter the time for the next annual meeting of Congress;" in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill last mentioned was read the first time, and by unanimous consent, it was read the second time; and, after having agreed to an amendment, Ordered, That this bill pass to a third reading. The resolution of the House of Representatives, that the two Houses of Congress be adjourned on the fifth day of May next was read.

Resolved, That the Senate concur therein.

THURSDAY, April 26.

Agreeably to the order of the day, the bill, entitled "An act for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, and for other purposes therein mentioned," was read the third time.

Mr. BURR presented the memorial of a number of the merchants of New York against an increase of duties on articles imported; which memorial was read.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

The consideration of the bill for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, was resumed.

On motion to amend the first section as follows:

"That, from and after the last day of June next, the duties now in force upon the articles hereinafter enumerated and described, at their importation into the United States, shall cease, until the last day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four, and in lieu thereof, there shall be thenceforth, for the space of two years from the said last day of June next, laid, levied, and collected, upon the said articles, at their said importation, the several and respective rates or duties following:"

It passed in the negative.

On motion to amend the first section, so as to limit the duration of the aforesaid duties to five years, instead of two, as proposed in the above amendment, it passed in the negative.

On motion, it was agreed to insert an amendment in the sixth section, so as that the clause stand thus:

"And that, in addition thereto, there shall be allowed and paid upon provisions salted within the United States, (except upon dried fish,) upon the exportation thereof to any foreign port or place, as follows, to wit: on pickled fish, at the rate of eight cents per barrel, and other provisions at the rate of five cents per barrel."

It was agreed to expunge these words from the last line of the amendment adopted in the second reading of the bill, as part of the 18th section, to wit: "under the laws of any State, or of the United States."

On motion to adopt the following provision, agreed to in the second reading of the bill as the eighteenth section, to wit:

"And be it further enacted and declared, That if the principal in any bond, which shall have been given to the United States for duties on goods, wares, and merchandise imported, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels, or either of them, shall be insolvent, or if such principal being dead, his or her estate and effects, which shall have come to the hands of his or her executors or administrators, shall be insufficient for the payment of his or her debts, and if in either of the said cases any surety in the said bond, or the executors and administrators of such surety, shall pay to the United States the moneys thereupon due, such surety, his or her executors or administrators, shall have and enjoy the like advantage, priority, and preference, for the recovery and receipt of the said moneys out of the estate and effects of such insolvent or deceased principal, as are reserved and secured to the United States by the forty-fourth section of the act, entitled 'An act to provide more effectually for the collection of duties imposed by law on goods, wares, and merchandises imported into the U. States, and on the tonnage of ships or vessels, and shall and may bring and maintain a suit upon the said bond, in law or equity, in his, her, or their, own name or names, for the recovery of the moneys which shall have been paid thereupon."

"And it is further declared, That the cases of insolvency in the said forty-fourth section mentioned, shall be deemed to extend as well to cases in which a debtor, not having sufficient property to pay all his or her debts, shall have made a voluntary assignment thereof, for the benefit of his or her creditors, or in which the estate and effects of an absconding, concealed, or absent debtor shall have been attached by process of law, as to cases, in which an act of legal bankruptcy shall have been committed."

It passed in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the further consideration of this bill be postponed until to-morrow.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have agreed to the conference desired by the Senate on the bill, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence by establishing an uniform militia throughout the United States," and have appointed managers on their part; that they have passed a bill, entitled "An act to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasions," was read the first time, and was ordered to pass to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act to alter the time for the next annual meeting of Congress," was read the third time.

On motion to reconsider the amendment agreed to in the second reading, and to concur with the House of Representatives in the bill:

It was agreed that the further consideration thereof be postponed until to-morrow.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[MAY, 1792.]

FRIDAY, April 27.

The Senate proceeded in the third reading of the bill, entitled "An act for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, and for other purposes therein mentioned;" and

On motion, it was agreed to amend the first clause of the amendment agreed to yesterday, as the eighteenth section, so that the clause be read as follows:

"And be it enacted and declared, That, if the principal in any bond, which shall be given to the United States for duties on goods, wares, and merchandise imported shall be insolvent."

Resolved, That this bill pass as amended.

The bill, entitled "An act to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions," was read the second time and passed to the third reading.

Resolved, That the Senate recede from their amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives on the bill, entitled "An act more effectually to provide for the national defence by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States."

It was agreed, by unanimous consent, that the bill, entitled "An act to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions," be now read the third time.

On motion by Mr. DICKINSON, to amend the bill, by inserting these words, "except that no militia man shall be subject to corporal punishment;" it passed in the negative.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in this bill.

Resolved, That the further consideration of the bill, entitled "An act to alter the time for the next annual meeting of Congress," be postponed until Tuesday next.

SATURDAY, April 28.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, and for other purposes therein mentioned," with an amendment; to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate; and that the House of Representatives have passed the bill, entitled "An act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," with amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate; and they have also passed the bill, entitled "An act for reducing the rates of postage on newspapers;" and the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to John Cleves Symmes, and his associates;" to which bills respectively, they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The petition of Samuel B. Turner, late an ensign of the Maryland battalion of levies, was presented and read, praying to be reimbursed the amount of his ransom from captivity by the savages, together with the incidental expenses.

Ordered, That this petition be referred to the Secretary of War, to consider and report thereon to the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to an amendment of the Senate on the bill, entitled "An act for raising a further sum of money for the protection of the frontiers, and for other purposes therein mentioned;" and

Resolved, That the Senate concur in the said amendment.

The bill, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to John Cleves Symmes, and his associates," was read the first time, and ordered to pass to the second reading.

The bill, entitled "An act for reducing the rates of postage on newspapers," was read the first time, and, on the question, Shall this bill be read the second time? it passed in the negative.

The amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," were read.

Ordered, That they be referred to Messrs. ELLSWORTH, BRADLEY, MONROE, BURR, and HENRY, to consider and report thereon; and that the amendments be printed.

MONDAY, April 30.

Ordered, That the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to John Cleves Symmes, and his associates," be referred to Messrs. READ, KING, and CARROLL, to consider and report thereon to the Senate.

Ordered, That Messrs. MORRIS, KING, IZARD, CABOT, and HENRY, be a committee to inquire into the value of foreign coins in circulation within the U. States; and, if they should think it expedient, to report a bill for ascertaining the rates at which they ought to pass, in conformity to the principles of an act passed the present session, entitled "An act establishing a Mint, and regulating the coins of the United States;" and, also, to report such other provisions as they shall think necessary for carrying into effect the intentions of the said act.

TUESDAY, May 1.

The President laid before the Senate the Report of the Secretary of War, on the petition of Samuel B. Turner; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The third reading of the bill, entitled "An act to alter the time for the next annual meeting of Congress," was resumed.

On motion, it was agreed to strike out of the bill "the third Monday," inserted in the second reading, and to substitute "the first Monday" in November.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in this bill.

Mr. ELLSWORTH, from the committee appointed to take into consideration the amendments of the

[MAY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," made report; which, being read, and in part agreed to,

Ordered, That the further consideration thereof be postponed until to-morrow.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have Resolved, That a joint committee of both Houses be directed to wait on the President of the United States, to request that he would recommend to the people of the United States a day of public humiliation and prayer; and, having appointed a committee on their part, desire concurrence, and the appointment of a joint committee on the part of the Senate.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have passed the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt," with amendments; and, also, "An act to authorize the remission of certain duties;" in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

On motion, that a committee be appointed to join with such committee as the House of Representatives shall appoint, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him of the proposed recess of Congress; it was agreed that the consideration of this motion be postponed until to-morrow.

The bill, entitled "An act to authorize the remission of certain duties," was read the first time; and, by unanimous consent, the bill was read the second time.

Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. CABOT, KING, and BURR, to consider and report thereon.

WEDNESDAY, May 2.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion made yesterday, "That a committee be appointed to join with such committee as the House of Representatives shall appoint, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him of the proposed recess of Congress."

On motion to postpone the consideration thereof, it passed in the negative.

Resolved, That Messrs. HAWKINS and BURR be a joint committee on the part of the Senate, with such committee as the House of Representatives shall appoint, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him of the proposed recess of Congress.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives have passed a bill, entitled "An act concerning the duties on spirits distilled within the United States;" in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, it was read the second time.

Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. HAWKINS, CABOT, and ELLSWORTH, to consider and report thereon.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses."

Resolved, That they agree to the first section, and the additional sections, except the second and fifth additional sections, with an amendment to the fourth additional section, so that it shall read as follows:

"And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Attorneys General of the United States, on any matter relative to judicial business which shall arise within their respective districts, and upon which he shall request information from them."

And they disagree to all the other amendments on the said bill.

Mr. READ, from the committee to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to John Cleves Symmes, and his associates," reported amendments; and it was agreed that the bill be amended accordingly; and, by unanimous consent, the bill was now read the third time and passed.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt."

Resolved, That they disagree to the first and second, and agree to the last amendment to the said bill.

Mr. KING gave notice that he intended, to-morrow, to move for leave to bring in a bill to continue an act, entitled "An act to continue in force the act therein mentioned, and to make further provision for the payment of pensions to invalids, and for the support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers."

THURSDAY, May 3.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act relative to the compensations to certain officers employed in the collection of the duties of impost and tonnage," to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate; that they recede from their amendments disagreed to by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of persons imprisoned for debt;" that they agree to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to John Cleves Symmes and his associates."

On motion, that a person be chosen to supply the vacancy occasioned in the Committee on Enrolled Bills, by the absence of Mr. BRADLEY, the Senate proceeded to the choice of Mr. WINGATE for that purpose.

The bill sent from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act relative to the compensations to certain officers employed in the collection of the duties of impost and tonnage," was read the first time; and, by unanimous consent, it was read the second time.

[SENATE.]

Proceedings.

[MAY, 1792.]

Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. MORRIS, SHERMAN, and MONROE, to consider and report thereon.

Agreeably to notice given yesterday, Mr. KING obtained leave to bring in a bill to continue in force the act therein mentioned, and to make further provision for the payment of pensions to invalids, and for the support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers; which was read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, was read the second time.

Ordered, That this bill be referred to Messrs. BASSETT, FOSTER, and JOHNSTON, to consider and report thereon.

Mr. MORRIS, from the committee appointed, reported "A bill for regulating foreign coins, and for other purposes;" which was read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, was read the second time.

Mr. CABOT reported, from the committee to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act to authorize the remission of certain duties," that it was not expedient that the bill should pass.
Resolved, That this bill do not pass to the third reading.

Mr. BASSETT, from the committee to whom was referred "The bill to continue in force the act therein mentioned, and to make further provision for the payment of pensions to invalids, and for the support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers," reported amendments, which were adopted; and, by unanimous consent, the bill was read the third time, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have considered the amendments disagreed to by the Senate, and the amendments of the Senate to their amendment on the bill, entitled "An act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses," and agree to some of the said amendments as amended, recede from some, and insist on others, of the said amendments, and desire a conference on the subject-matter of the amendments insisted on, and have appointed managers at the said conference on their part.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments insisted on by the House of Representatives to the bill last mentioned; and,
Resolved, That the Senate insist on their disagreement to the said amendments; that they agree to the proposed conference, and that Messrs. ELLSWORTH, KING, and HENRY, be managers thereof on the part of the Senate.

FRIDAY, May 4.

Mr. HAWKINS, from the committee to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act concerning the duties on spirits distilled within the United States," reported amendments, which were read; and it was agreed that the bill be amended accordingly.

Proceedings.

It was agreed, by unanimous consent, that this bill have the third reading at this time.

Resolved, That this bill pass with amendments. A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act to continue in force the act therein mentioned, and to make further provision for the payment of pensions to invalids," with amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill above mentioned; and,

Resolved, That they concur therein. Mr. MORRIS, from the committee to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act relative to the compensations to certain officers employed in the collection of the duties of impost and tonnage," reported amendments, which were read; and some of which being adopted, it was agreed to amend the bill accordingly.

It was agreed, by unanimous consent, that the bill should have the third reading at this time; and it was read, and passed accordingly.

The second reading of the bill for regulating foreign coins, and for other purposes, was resumed; and, being amended, was read a third time, and passed.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have resolved, that the resolution of the 24th of last month, authorizing the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 5th day of May, be repealed; and that, instead thereof, they be authorized to adjourn their respective Houses on Thursday, the 10th of May, instant, to meet again on such day as shall be by law appointed; in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution last mentioned; and,
Resolved, That they concur therein, with an amendment, to wit: strike out these words, "Thursday the tenth," and insert "Tuesday the eighth."

SATURDAY, May 5.

A Message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House agree to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the 4th, authorizing the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 8th inst. The House of Representatives also agree to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act relative to the compensations to certain officers employed in the collection of the duties of impost and tonnage." And they agree to the amendments of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act concerning the duties on spirits distilled within the United States." And they have passed a bill, entitled "An act authorizing the settlement of the demands of Anthony Walton White against the United States," in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

MAY, 1792.]

Proceedings.

[SENATE.]

The bill last mentioned was read the first time, as also the petition of the said Anthony Walton White, on which the bill originated, with sundry other papers referring thereto.

Resolved, That the consideration of this bill be postponed until the next session of Congress.

Resolved, That Messrs. HAWKINS and BURR be a committee to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him of the intended recess of Congress.

It was agreed to reconsider the above resolution, and substitute the following:

Resolved, That Messrs. HAWKINS and BURR be a joint committee, on the part of the Senate, with such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him of the intended recess of Congress on Tuesday next.

On motion, that the bills for regulating processes in the Judicial Courts of the United States; for providing for the public debt; for alterations in the Treasury and War Departments; for ascertaining the rates of foreign coins; and, for further appropriations; be passed before any other business is introduced: it passed in the negative.

MONDAY, May 7.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House concur in the resolution of the Senate, appointing a joint committee to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him of the proposed recess of Congress; and have appointed a joint committee on their part. And that they have passed a bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the act making provision for the debt of the United States; in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate."

The bill, entitled "An act supplementary to the act making provision for the debt of the United States," was read the first time; and, by unanimous consent, it was read the second time.

It was also agreed, by unanimous consent, that this bill be now read the third time.

Resolved, That the Senate concur therein.

The bill, entitled "An act for making compensations to the Commissioners of Loans for extraordinary expenses," was read the first time; and, by unanimous consent, it was read the second and third time.

Resolved, That the Senate concur therein. Mr. HAWKINS reported, from the joint committee, that they had waited on the President of the United States, and informed him of the proposed recess of Congress.

The memorial of Thomas Fielder, referring to his former petitions of 30th March, and 10th of April last, respecting his inventions for facilitating navigation, was presented and read.

Ordered, That it lie on the table.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have passed a bill, entitled "An act concerning the claim of John Brown Cutting against the United States;" in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

2d CON.—6

The bill, was read the first time, and passed to a second reading.

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Treasury do lay before the Senate, at the next session of Congress, a statement of the salaries, fees, and emoluments, for one year, ending the first day of October next, to be stated quarterly, of every person holding any civil office or employment under the United States, (except the judges,) together with the actual disbursements and expenses in the discharge of their respective offices and employments for the same period; and that he do report the name of every person who shall neglect or refuse to give satisfactory information touching his office or employment, or the emoluments or disbursements thereof.

MONDAY EVENING, May 7.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have passed the bill, entitled "An act making alterations in the Treasury and War Departments," with amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate. They recede from some and adhere to other amendments on the bill, entitled "An act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses."

The amendments to the first mentioned bill were read; and

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives, in which they recede from some and adhere to other amendments to the bill, entitled "An act for regulating processes in the courts of the United States, and providing compensations for the officers of the said courts, and for jurors and witnesses."

And, on motion to recede from the disagreement to the second amendment of the second section, which is, to strike out these words, "and be at liberty to pursue the same until a tender of the debt and cost, in gold or silver, shall be made."

It passed in the affirmative.

On motion to adhere to the disagreement to the amendment last recited, it passed in the negative—years 9, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Cabot, Carroll, Dickinson, Ellsworth, Foster, Izard, King, Morris, and Read.

NAYS.—Messrs. Few, Hawkins, Henry, Johnston, Lee, Monroë, Robinson, Sherman, Stanton, and Wingate.

It was agreed to recede from the other amendment adhered to by the House of Representatives on the said bill.

Ordered, That the Secretary acquaint the House of Representatives with the proceedings of the Senate on the bill last mentioned.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that they concur in the bill, entitled "An act regulating foreign coins, and for other purposes," with amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate. They agree to the amendment to their amendment on the bill, entitled "An act making alterations in the Treasury and War Departments." The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the amendments to the bill first mentioned; and, resolved, that they concur therein.

TUESDAY, May 8.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives concurred in the bill, entitled "An act to compensate the services of the late Colonel George Gibson." They have passed a bill, entitled "An act making certain appropriations therein specified;" in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill, entitled "An act making certain appropriations therein specified," was read the first time; and, by unanimous consent, it was read the second time.

Ordered, That the bill be referred to Messrs. MORRIS, CABOT, and ELLSWORTH, to consider and report thereon.

The bill, entitled "An act concerning the claim of John Brown Cutting against the United States," was read the third time.

Resolved, That the Senate concur in this bill.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House have passed a resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the several collectors of the revenue within the United States with certain printed clearances of a particular form; in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury cause to be provided for the use of the several collectors in the United States, printed clearances, on the back whereof shall be a printed account of the methods which have been found to answer for obtaining fresh from salt water, and of constructing extempore stills of such implements as are generally on board of every vessel, with a recommendation, in all cases where they shall have occasion to resort to this expedient for obtaining water, to publish the result of their trial in some gazette on their return to the United States, or to communicate it for publication to the office of the Secretary of State, in order that others may, by their success, be encouraged to make similar trials, and be benefited by any improvements or new ideas which may occur to them in practice."

Resolved, That the Senate concur therein.

Mr. MORRIS, from the committee to whom was referred the bill, entitled "An act making certain appropriations therein specified," reported an amendment; which was read and agreed to.

Ordered, That this bill pass to the third reading.

Resolved, That this bill pass as amended. A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate, that the House of Representatives agree to the amendment of the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act making certain appropriations therein specified;" and that they have passed a bill, entitled "An act respecting the government of the territories of the United States northwest and south of the river Ohio;" in which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill last mentioned was read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the bill was read the second and third time.

Resolved, That the Senate concur therein.

TUESDAY EVENING, May 8.

On motion, that a person be chosen to supply the vacancy occasioned in the Committee on Enrolled Bills, by the absence of Mr. WINGATE, the Senate proceeded to the choice of Mr. SHERMAN for that purpose.

After receiving several reports of enrolled bills and acting on other unfinished business, Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives, that the Senate, having completed the Legislative business before them, are about to adjourn.

A message from the House of Representatives informed the Senate that the House of Representatives, having completed the business before them, are about to adjourn.

In conformity to the resolution of the 4th instant, the President pro tempore adjourned the Senate to the first Monday in November next, being the time appointed by law for the next annual meeting of Congress.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,

AT THE FIRST SESSION OF THE SECOND CONGRESS, BEGUN AT THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA, OCTOBER 24, 1791.

MONDAY, October 24, 1791.

This being the day appointed by law for the meeting of the present Congress, the following members appeared, produced their credentials, and took their seats:

From New Hampshire, NICHOLAS GILMAN, SAMUEL LIVERMORE, and JEREMIAH SMITH.

From Massachusetts, FISHER AMES, SHEARJASHUB BOURNE, ELBRIDGE GERRY, BENJAMIN GOODHUE, GEORGE THATCHER, and ARTEMAS WARD.

From Rhode Island, BENJAMIN BOURNE.

From Connecticut, JAMES HILLHOUSE, JONATHAN STURGES, JONATHAN TRUMBULL, JEREMIAH WADSWORTH, and AMASA LEARNED.

From New York, JAMES GORDON, JOHN LARANCE, PETER SYLVESTER, and THOMAS TREDWELL.

From New Jersey, ELIAS BOUDINOT.

From Pennsylvania, THOMAS FITZSIMONS, DANIEL HEISTER, and FREDERICK AUGUSTUS MUEHLBERG.

From Delaware, JOHN VINING.

From Maryland, JOSHUA SENEY, and SAMUEL STERRETT.

From Virginia, JOHN BROWN, WILLIAM B. GILES, SAMUEL GRIFFIN, JAMES MADISON, ANDREW MOORE, and ALEXANDER WHITE.

From North Carolina, JOHN STEELE, and HUGH WILLIAMSON.

From South Carolina, DANIEL HUGER, WILLIAM SMITH, and THOMAS TUDOR TUCKER.

From Georgia, FRANCIS WILLIS.

A quorum of the members being present, the House proceeded to ballot for a Speaker, when it appeared that JONATHAN TRUMBULL, from Connecticut, was elected.

On being conducted to the chair, Mr. TRUMBULL addressed the House as follows:

GENTLEMEN: I find myself unable to express to you the full sense I have of the distinguished honor you have done me in the choice of your Speaker.

The diffidence I feel in my abilities to discharge, with propriety, the duties of the Chair, is almost insuperable in my own mind. But, encouraged by the known candor of this honorable body, and depending, as I think I may confidently do, on the kind assistance of each individual in it, I shall enter on its duties, with full assurances to you, gentlemen, that I shall endeavor to conduct myself with that impartiality, integrity, and assiduity, which become the conspicuous station in which you have been pleased to place me.

The House then proceeded to ballot for a Clerk, when there appeared an unanimous vote for JOHN BECKLEY.

The oath to support the Constitution was then administered to the members present, and the oath of office to the Speaker and Clerk.

Ordered, That the Speaker appoint committees until the House shall otherwise determine.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that a quorum of that body is assembled and ready to proceed to business; and that the Senate have informed the President of the United States that they are ready to receive any communications he may be pleased to make to them.

Resolved, That Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, Mr. LAURANCE, and Mr. WHITE, be a committee on the part of this House, to act jointly with the committee from the Senate, to wait on the President.

Ordered, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report Standing Rules and Orders of proceeding for the House. Messrs. MUEHLBERG, TUCKER, WILLIAMSON, AMES, and SMITH, of New Hampshire, were named.

JOSEPH WHEATON was appointed Sergeant-at-Arms; and GIFFORD DALLEY, Doorkeeper, and THOMAS CLAXTON, assistant Doorkeeper.

Resolved, That two Chaplains, of different denominations, be appointed to Congress for the present session, to interchange weekly.

Mr. SMITH, from the joint committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, reported that the President would make a communication to both Houses to-morrow at twelve o'clock, in the Senate Chamber.

A message from the Senate announced the agreement of that body to the resolution of this House for the appointment of two Chaplains, and had elected the Right Reverend Bishop WHITE, on their part.

TUESDAY, October 25.

The following members appeared, presented their credentials, and took their seats: ABRAHAM CLARK, JONATHAN DAYTON, and AARON KITCHELL, from New Jersey; and ISRAEL JACOBS, from Pennsylvania.

H. OF R.]

The President's Speech.

[OCTOBER, 1791.]

The House proceeded to ballot for a Chaplain, when a majority of the votes were found in favor of the Rev. Mr. BLAIR.

A message being received from the Senate, stating that they were ready to receive the Communication from the President of the United States, the Speaker, attended by the members of the House, withdrew to the Senate Chamber for the purpose of receiving the same.

On the return of the members, the Speaker laid before the House a copy of the Speech delivered by the President, (which will be found in the proceedings of the Senate, ante, page 11.) The Speech was committed to a Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

WEDNESDAY, October 26.

The following members appeared, presented their credentials, and took their seats: THEODORE SEDGWICK, from Massachusetts; ABRAHAM VENABLE, from Virginia; NATHANIEL MACON, from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a Letter from the Treasurer of the United States, accompanying his accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the public moneys, from October 1, 1790, to the 30th of June, 1791; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Resolved, That the Rules and Orders of proceeding established by the last House of Representatives, shall be the Rules and Orders of proceeding to be observed in this body, until a revision or alteration of the same shall take place.

The President of the United States transmitted to the House, by message, copies of the following Acts, which had been transmitted to him during the recess, viz: "An act passed by the Legislature of New Hampshire, for ceding to the United States the fort and light-house belonging to said State;" "An act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, ratifying, on behalf of said State, the first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as proposed by Congress;" and "An act of the Legislature of North Carolina, granting the use of the jails within that State to the United States;" which were ordered to lie on the table.

A petition of James Rumsey, by Joseph Barnes, his attorney in fact, was presented to the House and read, praying that the act entitled "An act to promote the progress of useful arts," may be amended, and rendered more effectual for securing to original inventors, property in their respective discoveries."

Ordered, That the petition lie on the table.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, on the President's Speech, Mr. MÜHLENBERG in the chair.

The Speech being read, Mr. VINING moved a resolution, of which the following is the purport:

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee that an Address should be presented to the President of the United States by the House of Representatives, in answer to his Speech, to congratulate him on the prosperous situation of the United States, expressive of the idea of delegating to a committee this power of judging, expressly given to them by the Constitution. Such a transfer of power, he conceived, would be as unconstitutional as to delegate a Legislative authority. In the British Parliament, it was true, a committee was made the judge of contested elections; but there was no higher authority there, he observed, to prevent them from delegating this power; when here, the people of the United States had clearly spoken in their Constitution, and determined the judges of the elections.

OCTOBER, 1791.]

Address to the President.

[H. OF R.]

Mr. VINING stated, that his object in wishing the resolution adopted, was to procure expedition, save expense, and secure fairness of decision in determining contested elections. He hoped the Constitution would be no obstacle to the attainment of these desiderata. Perhaps it might be found necessary to leave to the House a final vote, after the work of the committee had been laid before them.

Mr. WHITE clearly saw great inconvenience in permitting cases of contested elections to come directly before the House. The delays and consequent expense of examining witnesses would be very great. He was of opinion that a committee appointed for that purpose should examine the evidences brought forward, arrange them, and lay them in order before the House for their information; but then he insisted on the necessity of letting the determination depend upon a vote of the House.

Before any question was taken on the resolution, it was Ordered, That a standing Committee of Elections be appointed.

And a committee was appointed, of Mr. LIVERMORE, Mr. BOUDINOT, Mr. GILES, Mr. GERRY, Mr. BOURNE, of Rhode Island, Mr. HILLHOUSE, and Mr. STEELE.

THURSDAY, October 27.

Mr. MADISON, from the committee appointed, reported an Address to the President of the United States, in answer to his Speech to both Houses of Congress; which was read, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the whole House immediately.

ADDRESS TO THE PRESIDENT.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the said Address; and, after some time spent therein, Mr. MÜHLENBERG reported that the committee had had the said Address under consideration, and made no amendment thereto. Whereupon, it was Resolved, unanimously, That this House doth agree to the said Address, in the words following:

SIR: In receiving your Address, at the opening of the present session, the House of Representatives have taken an ample share in the feelings inspired by the actual prosperity and flattering prospects of our country; and whilst, with becoming gratitude to Heaven, we ascribe this happiness to the true source from which it flows, we behold with an animating pleasure the degree in which the Constitution and Laws of the United States have been instrumental in dispensing it.

It yields us particular satisfaction to learn the success with which the different important measures of the Government have proceeded; as well those specially provided for at the last session, as those of preceding date. The safety of our Western frontier, in which the lives and repose of so many of our fellow-citizens are involved, being peculiarly interesting, your communications on that subject are proportionally grateful to us. The gallantry and good conduct of the militia, whose services were called for, is an honorable confirmation of the efficacy of that precious resource of a free State. And we anxiously wish that the consequences of their successful enterprises, and of the other proceedings to which you have referred, may leave the United States free to pursue the most benevolent policy towards the unhappy and deluded race of people in our neighborhood.

The amount of the population of the United States, determined by the returns of the census, is a source of the most pleasing reflections, whether it be viewed in relation to our national safety and respectability, or as a proof of that felicity in the situation of our country, which favors so unexampled a rapidity in its growth. Nor ought any to be insensible to the additional motive suggested by this important fact to perpetuate the free Government established with a wise administration of it, to a portion of the earth which promises such an increase of the number which is to enjoy those blessings within the limits of the United States.

We shall proceed with all the respect due to your patriotic recommendations, and with a deep sense of the trust committed to us by our fellow-citizens, to take into consideration the various and important matters falling within the present session; and, in discussing and deciding each, we shall feel every disposition, whilst we are pursuing the public welfare, which must be the supreme object with all our constituents, to accommodate, as far as possible, the means of attaining it to the sentiments and wishes of every part of them.

Resolved, That the Speaker, attended by the House, do present the said Address; and that Mr. MADISON, Mr. LAURANCE, and Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, be a committee to wait on the President for him to receive the same.

A Message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by the Secretary of War, as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I have directed the Secretary of War to lay before you, for your information, the Reports of Brigadier General Scott and Lieutenant Colonel Commandant Wilkinson, the officers who commanded the two expeditions against the Wabash Indians, in the months of June and August last, together with the instructions by virtue of which the said expeditions were undertaken. When the operations now depending shall be terminated, the reports relative thereto shall also be laid before you.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, October 27, 1791.

Ordered, That the information referred to in the said Message do lie on the table.

Mr. MADISON, from the committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, to know when and where it will be convenient for him to receive the Address of this House, in answer to his Speech to both Houses of Congress,

H. or R.]

Ratio of Representation.

[OCTOBER, 1791.]

reported that the committee had waited on the President, who signified to them that it would be convenient to him to receive the said Address at twelve o'clock to-morrow, at his own house.

FRIDAY, October 28.

Ordered. That a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill or bills for registering ships or vessels, and for regulating those employed in the coasting trade and fisheries; and that Mr. GOODHUE, Mr. FITZSIMONS, and Mr. LEARNED, be of the said committee.

The SPEAKER, attended by the House, then withdrew to the house of the President of the United States, and there presented to him the Address of this House, in answer to his Speech to both Houses of Congress; to which the President made the following reply:

Gentlemen:

The pleasure I derive from an assurance of your attention to the objects I have recommended to you is doubled by your concurrence in the testimony I have borne to the prosperous condition of our public affairs.

Relying on the sanctions of your enlightened judgment, and on your patriotic aid, I shall be the more encouraged in all my endeavors for the public weal, and particularly in those which may be required on my part for executing the salutary measures I anticipate from your present deliberations.

G. WASHINGTON.

A Message was received from the President of the United States, communicating a copy of the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States, agreeable to the Census taken pursuant to a law of the Union. Also, sundry papers from the Governor of Pennsylvania, respecting several persons who have fled from justice from that State to the State of Virginia. The papers were read, and a motion laid on the table by Mr. SEDGWICK, that a committee should be appointed to whom the papers, respecting the persons fleeing from justice, should be referred; with instructions to report a bill or bills, making a general provision in cases of persons charged with felony, treason, or other crimes, who may flee from a State having cognizance thereof, &c.

The schedule of the Census was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and made the order of the day for Monday next.

The other papers referred to in the Message of the President received yesterday, were then read, viz: An act of the State of North Carolina, ceding a tract of land for the use of the United States, for the erection of light-houses, and the reports of the commanders on the expeditions against the Indians.

On motion of Mr. SEDGWICK, a committee was appointed to bring in a bill to provide for the regulation of the Post Office and Post Roads, consisting of Messrs. LIVERMORE, CLARK, STEELE, BOURNE of Rhode Island, and THATCHER.

Mr. WILLIAMSON's motion, for a committee to bring in a bill to amend the act for promoting the progress of the useful arts, was adopted, and the

NOVEMBER, 1791.]

The President's Speech.

[H. or R.]

be consequent on the plan proposed, and concluded by inquiring whether the above amendment had been adopted by the requisite number of the Legislatures? On examination it did not appear that a sufficient number of the States had made returns respecting the amendments to determine the question.

Mr. SEDGWICK said the Constitution had provided that the number of Representatives should not exceed one for every 30,000, but Congress may increase the number of constituents of each member. He read the result of a calculation of the number of Representatives which would be returned on a supposition of there being one to 30, 33, 34, and 40,000 thousand persons. According to the present census, supposing South Carolina to contain 240,000 thousand persons—thirty thousand would give 110—thirty-three, 104; thirty-four, 100; and forty thousand, 82 members. Judging from the sense of the people, so far as it could be collected from what had been done respecting the proposed amendment on this subject, he was of opinion that a ratio which would meet the general approbation was that which would give about one hundred members in the House of Representatives.

Mr. LIVERMORE was in favor of a ratio which would give the smallest number that was mentioned by the gentleman last up.

Mr. WHITE said, that the general sentiment of the people was perhaps more fully known on the subject before the committee, than on any other that can come before them. Among the objections to the Constitution, the smallness of the representation was very generally objected to. An increase of the number of this House is expected. It has been said by the enemies of the Constitution that Congress will never consent that there shall be a Representative for every 30,000 persons. The time is now come when the question is to be determined; and I hope, said Mr. W., that Congress will act with the utmost liberality on the occasion; and that they will not diminish the number of Representatives.

Mr. DAYTON considered the subject in a different light from the gentleman last speaking. He supposed the sense of the people at the present day was opposed to a great increase of the number of Representatives. He thought that one to 40,000 persons would give the most eligible number, but was willing to meet the gentleman half way, and moved to insert the word five between "thirty" and "thousand," in the resolution.

Mr. WHITE explained himself as referring particularly to the time when the Constitution was adopted.

Mr. SENEY observed, that the subject was too important, in his opinion, to come to a sudden decision upon, especially as many of the members of the House had not arrived. He moved, therefore, that the committee should rise, report, and ask leave to sit again. The committee accordingly rose.

A memorial of Joseph Ceracchi, a Roman sculptor, was presented and read, proposing to execute a monument to perpetuate American Independence. Laid on the table.

TUESDAY, November 1.

ANTHONY WAYNE, member from Georgia, and JOSIAH PARKER, from Virginia, took their seats this day.

A Message was received from the President of the United States, communicating the arrangement made in respect to the division of the United States into districts and surveys, appointment of inspectors, and compensations to officers, pursuant to the law, laying duties on distilled spirits, &c. Also, a copy of the presentment of the grand jury of the federal court for the district of South Carolina, in which the causes are stated which prevented the completion of the census of that State within the time limited by law.

These papers being read, the motion of Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, for allowing further time to complete the enumeration of the inhabitants of South Carolina, was taken into consideration, and agreed to; and Messrs. SMITH, BOWDNOT, and VENABLE, appointed to report a bill accordingly.

Mr. MUEHLBERG, of the committee appointed to report such Standing Rules and Orders as may be proper to be observed by the House, brought in a report; which was read, and laid on the table.

Mr. BOURNE, of Rhode Island, moved the following resolution:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to lay before the House, the amount of the subscriptions to the public loan, made pursuant to the act making provision for the public debt, as well in the evidences of the domestic debt of the United States as those of the debts of the respective States; the amount that remains unsubscribed; also, such measures as he may think expedient to be adopted to complete the object of the law."

This resolution was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

The House then proceeded to the order of the day on the President's Speech. The Speech being read by the Clerk—

Mr. SEDGWICK said, that the last session of Congress, the House of Representatives, by the appointment of committees, to which almost every object of discussion in the President's Speech was referred, so far monopolized the public business, that during great part of the session, the Senate had very little to attend to. He thought it of importance that a similar interference should be avoided the present session. He then recapitulated the principal objects recommended to the attention of Congress in the Speech; and informed the House it had been intimated to him that the Senate proposed to take into consideration the subjects of the Mint, Weights and Measures, Consuls, election of President and Vice President, and the establishment of Land Offices. The House, therefore, if they thought proper, might avoid a primary discussion of these subjects, and employ their deliberations on other important parts of the Speech. Some of these the House had already provided for, by the appointment of committees, others remained to be attended to; among these,

H. OF R.]

The President's Speech.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

the reference in the Speech to the law, he thought of very material consequence, and accordingly moved that a committee should be appointed to take into consideration that part of the President's Speech which relates to the carrying that law into execution, and to report such circumstances in the law, as may, with consistency, be so altered as to remove any well-intentioned objections against it; also to ascertain and report whether there exists a due proportion between the duties on foreign spirits and those of domestic manufacture.

Mr. BOUNDARY observed, that it struck him as an impropriety for the House to receive any information from the Senate, except through an appointed medium; this informal mode, if it was allowed, would be a bad precedent, and productive of great embarrassment; the difficulty which has been mentioned might be avoided by the appointment of a joint committee—which he thought to be the most eligible mode.

Mr. SEDGWICK replied, that he meant only to convey to the House the information he had received, which he supposed was of importance; he had no intention of establishing a precedent.

Mr. LAURANCE called for the reading of the Speech; which being read, committees were appointed on the several articles, as before stated.

Mr. SEDGWICK's motion occasioned considerable debate.

Mr. STEELE moved an amendment, by inserting the Secretary of the Treasury, in lieu of a committee. This officer, he observed, was more competent than any other person to give information on the subject, as he had paid the most minute attention to the operation of the law. Prejudices, he said, were entertained against the Secretary, on account of his having originally drafted the law; these prejudices he wished to be removed, as he was well satisfied that it was the wish of the House, as well as of the Secretary, that every reasonable objection against the law should be removed.

The motion for a reference to the Secretary was supported by Mr. WHITE, Mr. LAURANCE, Mr. GERRY, Mr. SMITH, (S. C.), Mr. AMES, and Mr. WILLIAMSON.

Mr. SEDGWICK contended for a committee. He was supported by Mr. VINING, Mr. PARKER, Mr. BOUNDARY, and Mr. GOODHUE. On this side of the question it was urged, that there was a manifest impropriety and want of respect in referring any part of the President's Speech, or a law of the Union, to the Head of any particular Department; that the information to be derived from the Secretary would of course be received by a committee, and by them be communicated to the House. The present subject involved considerations that should arrest the particular attention of the Legislature, as they only were competent to decide upon them. The motion has reference to the rate of duties, and the House was certainly the most competent to judge of and estimate the public taxes.

After some further debate, Mr. SEDGWICK withdrew his proposition; and a motion by Mr. AMES, for a reference to the Secretary of the Treasury for information respecting any difficulties in the execution of the law, was agreed to.

The business of offices for the sale of vacant lands within the territory of the United States, being considered as particularly connected with revenue, a committee of the House was appointed to prepare and report a bill or bills on that subject.

WEDNESDAY, November 2.

A petition of John Torrey, of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, was presented to the House and read, praying to be reimbursed a sum of money which he has been compelled to pay for wagonage on account of the United States, during the late war. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GILES called up a memorial from the officers of the Virginia line, and other papers relative thereto, which were communicated by the President, to the late Congress, but not acted upon. The papers being read, he laid on the table the following resolution:

"That so much of the Message and Communications from the President of the United States to both Houses, on the 17th of January last, as relates to the bounty lands granted to the officers and soldiers of the Virginia line on the Continental establishment, be referred to a select committee, to examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereon, to the House."

On motion of Mr. DAYTON, it was resolved, that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the House, whether any and what alterations in favor of the spirits which shall be distilled from articles of the growth or produce of the United States, or from foreign articles within the same, can, in his opinion, be made in the exercise law, consistently with its main design, and with the maintenance of the public faith.

Mr. GILES laid on the table a motion, that the Secretary of the Department of War should be instructed to lay before the House an accurate statement of all balances of pay which appear, by the books of his office, to be due to the officers and soldiers of the late army of the United States, and which either remain unclaimed, or have been claimed but not paid; together with the reasons for withholding payment from those who may have respectively entered their claims therefor.

Mr. VINING laid on the table a motion for the appointment of a committee, to report a bill or bills, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. DAYTON laid on the table a motion, that the Board of Commissioners for settling the accounts between the United States and individual States, be directed to report to the House what progress they have made in such settlement; and their opinion as to the prospect which the present state of the business affords of its speedy and final conclusion.

Mr. GERRY, from the committee to whom was referred the memorial of the Sheriff of Suffolk county, in the State of Massachusetts, made a report, tending to grant to all persons confined in any State, under the authority of the United States, the same privileges and immunities to which they would be entitled if confined under the authority of the State. Ordered to lie on the table.

NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Ratio of Representation.

[H. OF R.]

THE CENSUS.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, Mr. MUEHLBERG in the chair, and took up the bill for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the district of South Carolina.

Some gentlemen having expressed their apprehensions that, by the words of the bill, the Marshal of the district of South Carolina might be empowered to make a new enumeration of the inhabitants, which was contrary to the sense of the House, and would give that State an undue advantage over the other States, an amendment was moved and adopted by the committee, in the following words: "Provided, that in the said return" [of the enumeration of the inhabitants of the district of South Carolina] "such persons only shall be included as were inhabitants of the State at the time prescribed for taking the census," &c.

Another amendment being also proposed and adopted, the committee rose, and reported the bill as amended.

The House then proceeding to consider the amendments of the committee, some remarks were made, to show that the one above quoted might tend to violate the return, and was moreover an unnecessary precaution, as the proposition was not for making the enumeration of the whole State, but of giving in the return of the enumeration already made, and completing the census, by the addition of a very small district, that was not yet included in the general return. The amendment was therefore rejected by the House, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed.

THURSDAY, November 3.

Two other members, to wit: RICHARD BLAND LEE and JOHN PAGE, from Virginia, appeared, produced their credentials, and took their seats in the House.

An engrossed bill granting further time for making Return of the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the District of South Carolina was read the third time and passed.

Ordered, That so much of the Message and Communication from the President of the United States to both Houses, on the seventeenth of January last, as relates to the bounty lands granted to the late officers and soldiers of the State of Virginia, together with all previous proceedings of Congress, or the Legislature of the State of Virginia, and all papers relative thereto, be referred to the consideration of Mr. GILES, Mr. CLARK, and Mr. LIVERMORE, with instructions to examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereupon, to the House.

Ordered, That a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill or bills, directing the mode in which the evidences of the debt of the United States which have been lost or destroyed shall be renewed; and that Mr. SEDGWICK, Mr. GILES, and Mr. DAYTON be the said committee.

Ordered, That the Report of the Attorney General, concerning such matters relative to the administration of justice under the authority of the United States as require to be remedied, together with certain propositions of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which were offered on the third of March last, and deferred for consideration to the present session, be committed to a Committee of the Whole House to-morrow.

THE CENSUS.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Schedule of the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States.

The motion of Mr. LAURANCE was again read, viz: "That until the next enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, there shall be one Representative for every thirty thousand persons."

Mr. SEDGWICK moved to insert the word four, between "thirty" and "thousand."

Mr. DAYTON moved to strike out thirty, before "thousand," and leave the blank to be filled up.

Mr. LIVERMORE moved to insert forty thousand.

Mr. CLARK observed, that it was well known that great uneasiness prevailed among the people in various parts of the Union, on account of the salaries and compensations to the officers of Government. The expense of supporting the Government was increasing, and it must therefore be contrary to the general wishes of the people to enlarge the representation, which would add to the public burden, without being productive of any advantage. He was in favor, therefore, of striking out "thirty," and inserting forty.

Mr. WILLIAMSON, after a few preliminary remarks on the several calculations that different members had made, and applying the various results to the population of the small States in particular, observed, that such a ratio should be adopted as would leave the fewest fractions, and at the same time do as much justice as possible to those States. With respect to the general question, he thought the people were divided in opinion; some were in favor of a large representation, others were opposed to a great addition to the present number. The expense of supporting the Government is great; the people realize that in the nature of things it must increase; this consideration should lead to adopt a medium, and if possible to fix on a ratio that might give general satisfaction. At all events he wished that Congress would reserve to itself the power of increasing the number of Representatives, in case the sentiments of the people should be in favor of the measure. He observed that the lowest number of constituents which had been mentioned was thirty thousand, and the highest forty; if gentlemen could not agree in either, he hoped they would adopt the medium.

Mr. LAURANCE objected to striking out thirty. This subject, said he, has been canvassed throughout America; innumerable are the pamphlet and newspaper publications which have appeared in all parts of the United States. The smallness of the representation was early objected to; and it was very generally expected, that when the amendments to the Constitution took place, that one Representative to every thirty thousand persons would be the established ratio. The majority of the publications on this subject—the various amendments proposed by the States, all plainly declare that the sense of the people is in favor of one for every thirty thousand. And what are the objections? It is said that the public business will be impeded by a large number of members in the House, and that the expense will increase the public burdens of the people. With respect to the first objection, it seems to be a general idea of gentlemen, that about one hundred members would be the most eligible number; the proposed ratio will give about one hundred and twelve; an addition of ten or twelve cannot embarrass the public business. The objection on account of an increase of the expense, he did not consider as well founded. The increase of the representation will be in proportion to the increase of the people who pay for the support of the Government. The objection he could not consider, therefore, of sufficient weight to deter Congress from establishing such a ratio as would give a representation fully competent to doing full justice to every part of the Union. The Government is a Government by representation, and it is of the last importance that the confidence of the people should be inspired by feeling that their interests are fully represented.

Mr. L. observed, that increasing the ratio would undoubtedly excite uneasiness and complaint in some of the States, by diminishing their present representation. He concluded by saying that the few remarks he had made were crude and undigested. Not expecting the subject to be brought forward this day, he had not revolved it sufficiently in his mind. He hoped, however, that what had been said would prevent a sudden decision of the question.

Mr. GILES moved that the committee should rise, report, and ask leave to sit again. The motion was agreed to.

FRIDAY, November 4.

Another member, to wit: EGBERT BENSON, from New York, appeared, produced his credentials, and took his seat in the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a Letter from the Secretary of War, accompanying his reports on the several petitions of John Younglove, of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Albany and Washington, in the State of New York, and of John Torrey, administrator, &c., of the late Major Joseph Torrey; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The reports of committees on the memorials of F. and J. Choat, Susannah Fowle, and the Sheriff of Suffolk county, in the State of Massachusetts, being called up,

Mr. SPOWICK moved, that the House should accept the committee's report on the last mentioned memorial, viz: that a committee would be appointed to bring in a bill allowing to prisoners, confined in any State under the authority of the United States, the same privileges and immunities as are enjoyed by persons confined under the authority of the State.

Mr. LIVERMORE doubted whether the House had a right to accept the report. Certain indulgences, he observed, are allowed to prisoners in some States, which are not granted in others; and he would ask, whether the House could establish any uniform rule for such cases throughout the United States? If the indulgence was only granted in conformity to the State laws, it would not be uniform. He wished, for the sake of humanity, that in every State there were laws equally indulgent to confined debtors; and, were this the case, he would cheerfully concur in accepting the report. But, since the case was otherwise, and that the adoption of the proposed measure would establish a system not uniform, he wished that the report should be referred to the committee, that was proposed to be appointed, to bring in a bill for the establishment of an uniform system of Bankrupt laws throughout the United States.

Mr. SPOWICK, after several remarks in support of his motion, concluded by expressing his hope, that the House possessed sufficient authority to make such provisions in favor of unfortunate debtors as humanity itself dictated. He did not recollect to have ever heard so many disagreeable observations made on any subject, as on the confinement of prisoners under the authority of the United States, which was more rigorous than could be the case under the laws of the State which he represented.

Mr. WHITE was against the appointment of a committee on this particular case, as it was one of many that would, of course, occur in the execution of the Judiciary system. He wished the case in question should be referred to the committee appointed yesterday, on the Report of the Attorney General; and that every inconvenience that might be foreseen in the Judiciary system should, as far as possible, be remedied.

Mr. SPOWICK having consented to withdraw his motion in favor of Mr. WHITE's proposal, The report was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the revision of the Judiciary system.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, the petition of Susannah Fowle, and the committee's report thereon, was referred to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The report of the committee on the petition of F. and J. Choat, that the prayer of the said petition cannot be granted, was accepted by the House.

Mr. FITZSIMONS moved for the appointment of a committee to bring in a bill to regulate the pilots, and to provide for the superintendence of the light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers of the district of Pennsylvania.

A proposition being made to extend the effects of the bill in contemplation, to the United States, in general, it was, after some remarks made by Messrs. LEE, FITZSIMONS, and WILLIAMSON, ordered that the motion should lie on the table.

Mr. LAURANCE suggested the propriety of postponing the order of the day (the consideration of the census) until some day next week, when a fuller House might be expected. It was accordingly postponed till Thursday next.

MONDAY, November 7.

Several other members, to wit: From Pennsylvania, WILLIAM FINDLAY; from North Carolina, JOHN BAPTIST ASHE; and from Georgia, ABRAHAM BALDWIN; appeared, produced their credentials, and took their seats in the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanying his report of certain estimates of sums necessary to be appropriated for various objects therein specified, including the service of the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two; which was read, and ordered to be referred to Mr. LAURANCE, Mr. BALDWIN, and Mr. ASHE, with instructions to prepare and bring in a bill or bills pursuant thereto.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed the bill entitled "An act granting further time for making return of the enumeration of the inhabitants of the District of South Carolina," with several amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the House.

The House proceeded to consider the said amendments; and the same being read, were agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Commissioners appointed by the act entitled "An act making provision for the reduction of the public debt," stating the amount of the purchases which have been made of the public debt, in pursuance of the powers vested in them by the said act; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

CASE OF JOHN TORREY.

The Report of the Secretary of War on the petition of John Torrey was taken into consideration. This report was against the prayer of the petition; as the late Major Torrey died before the expiration of the war, and, leaving no widow or orphans, his heirs are not entitled by any law to commutation or half-pay.

Mr. AMES observed, that Congress stipulated with the officers of the army that those which continued in the service to the end of the war should be allowed half-pay for life, or commutation. The question, then, was, whether Major Torrey had performed his part of the contract? In his opinion he had; for, though the army was continued in pay till November, yet it is well known that hostilities had ceased before the period at which Major Torrey died. Mr. A. further observed that this was a case aut generis; that the application was founded in the strictest justice; and, were he to determine it in a judicial capacity, he should be as clear to decide it in favor of the prayer of the petition as he should in the case of a simple note of hand. He added several other remarks, and concluded by a motion that the petition, together with the report thereon, be referred to a select committee, in order that the principle for which he contended might be fully discussed in the House.

Mr. WHITE opposed the motion for a reference to a select committee. He mentioned several difficulties which must occur in the course of the discussion, on account of past decisions of Congress. The petition (said he) appears to create a debt which is not cognizable by Congress, as it did not exist agreeably to the act of limitation at the time of adopting the new Constitution. He should rather be in favor of a reference to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. AMES observed, that he considered the application in a quite different light from the gentleman last up. It is not a petition for a grant from Government; but for the settlement of a just account and payment of a just debt, which really existed prior to the organization of the present Government.

Mr. BOURDINOT observed, that all the difficulty in the case appears to arise from a difference of opinion as to the time when the war ceased. This, he conceived, might easily be determined by the period to which the army of the United States had been paid and discharged.

Mr. CLARK was against a reference to a Committee of the Whole. He saw no difficulty in determining the business; but, if we go into a Committee of the Whole, it will appear as if we were fishing for applicants. This has been called a single case; but he believed, if the door was once opened, we should soon find a great many like it. He wished, rather, that the business should rest where it was.

Mr. WILLIAMSON said he was equally opposed to a Committee of the Whole and to a select committee. He was in favor of proceeding in the usual way, and coming to a vote upon the report. Congress promised that the widows and orphans of those officers who died in the service of the country should be entitled to half-pay for life. In the present case it happens that there are neither widows nor orphans, but some more distant relations who want it. He enlarged on the confusion which would be consequent on establishing a precedent like that proposed, and concluded by saying that he had heard nothing sufficient to induce a deviation from the line already prescribed.

Mr. PAGE was in favor of a reference to a Committee of the Whole; for though he had a high respect for the opinion of the officer who had made the report, yet, if an individual member of the House should at any time express a wish to have a report from the Head of any Department whatever discussed in the Committee, he should be in favor of his being gratified.

The motion for a select committee was negatived.

Mr. AMES then moved that the report should be rejected.

This motion was followed by one for a reference to a Committee of the Whole, by Mr. WASHINGTON, who observed, that he considered the application as involving this question: Whether the heirs or representatives of every officer who died in the service of the United States, at any period of the war, should not be entitled to commutation or half-pay for life?

The question for a reference to a Committee of the Whole was carried in the affirmative, to be taken up to-morrow.

JOHN YOUNGLOVE.

The Report of the Secretary of War on the petition of John Younglove, and a counter-petition thereto from sundry inhabitants of the State of New York, was next taken into consideration. The counter-petition contained sundry charges of unfair conduct in procuring the pension granted to Mr. Younglove. The report exculpates the petitioner from any imputation of deception in respect to the means employed in obtaining the pension, and assigns the reasons on which it was granted by Congress, and concludes by stating this inquiry: Whether it would be expedient to repeal that part of the law which assigns a pension to the petitioner, agreeably to the prayer of the counter-petition?

Mr. LAURANCE moved the following resolution: "Resolved, That it would be inexpedient to repeal that part of the law on which the pension to John Younglove was founded."

Some discussion of the subject took place in consequence of this motion, which was eventually superseded by a motion offered by Mr. Benson, to this effect: That the prayer of the petition of sundry inhabitants in the State of New York, that so much of a law of the United States as grants a pension to John Younglove may be repealed, cannot be granted.

This motion was laid on the table, and the further consideration of the subject postponed.

JOSEPH TUCKER.

On motion of Mr. THATCHER, the Report of the Secretary of War, made to the first Congress, on the petition of Joseph Tucker and others, praying compensation as agents to certain regiments, last war, was taken into consideration. This report was against the petition. The same being read,

Mr. THATCHER moved that the report be rejected by the House, and that there be allowed to the said Joseph Tucker and others the sum of one per cent. on the amount received and paid by them respectively, including the sums granted by the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. BORDINOR objected to this motion. He thought the proper question before the House was, Whether the report of the Secretary should be agreed to or not? The motion involved a partial decision on a case which was by no means singular, as similar applications had been made to Congress. He moved that the report should be agreed to by the House.

Mr. SMITH, of New Hampshire, inquired whether the amount of the sums received by those agents from the public had been all paid over by them to the uses for which they were received; and what was the actual amount of their commissions on the sums paid?

The amount of the sums received was only mentioned in the Secretary's report.

Mr. SEDGWICK observed, that the accounts of the petitioners, it appears, have been settled by the Legislature of Massachusetts; and, should the motion be agreed to, it would lead to a revision of all the accounts which had been settled at that period on similar principles.

Mr. THATCHER, in reply, said that his colleague was mistaken in respect to the accounts being settled, as some of the parties had informed him that they never acquiesced in such settlement, and would not receive the certificate tendered them as compensation for their services, as its intrinsic value was much less than their just demand.

The motion for agreeing to the report of the Secretary of War being put, was carried in the affirmative; and Mr. THATCHER's motion was superceded of course.

TUESDAY, November 8.

Another member, to wit: ANDREW GREGG, from Pennsylvania, appeared, produced his credentials, and took his seat in the House.

JOHN TORREY.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Report of the Secretary of War on the petition of John Torrey, administrator of Major Joseph Torrey, deceased.

Mr. AMES objected to the motion for accepting the Report of the Secretary of War. He said, it must be apparent that he was placed by accident in a relation to the subject of choice. With very little knowledge of the parties and their connections, and the interests that would be involved by the decision, he seemed to be considered as standing sponsor for the petitioner. He might justify this active support of the petition, by assigning motives which were common to other gentlemen; but as they have continued silent, I will assign a reason for speaking, which is peculiar to myself. Nothing excites a person to a more fervid defence of his opinions, than the supposed discovery that they are misunderstood, and the force of the reasons on which he had formed them, unduly estimated.

Congress promised half-pay to the officers who should continue in service to the end of the war—This was afterwards made a commutation for half-pay. Major Torrey continued in service till September, 1783, when he died. The question is, did he continue in service to the end of the war? The provisional articles of peace were signed on the 30th November, 1782; but they were to remain without force till terms of peace should be agreed upon between Great Britain and France. This took place on the 30th January, 1783, and the ratifications were exchanged on the 3d February, 1783, at Paris. The provisional treaty between Great Britain and America was then a treaty of peace, and according to the words of that treaty of peace, concluded. Accordingly, on the 11th April, 1783, Congress by a proclamation made known those facts, and the stipulations made, in regard to the periods when hostilities should cease, by the contracting parties to the treaty. Hostilities did cease, and before the end of April, 1783, all America was in perfect peace. The late hostile nations shook hands, our vessels sailed in safety, and by sea and land reconciliation succeeded to hostility.

But did all this put an end to the war? The children in the street would answer this question: They would say, it is peace when it is not war. Of all facts, the most notorious seems to be the state of war; and it is the fact that the war was at an end, (and not any after resolve of Congress) that the commutation of Major Torrey was made to hinge upon. When the meaning of a bargain is disputed, it is usual to search out the intention of the contracting parties when it was made. Supposing, instead of interpreting a resolve of Congress, any twelve of this body had to try a case between two private persons; suppose that a man had given his note of hand for a sum to be paid at the end of the war. Would twelve of this House, or would any jury in the country say that the war continued longer than hostilities? In private life, a man would think it touched his character to refuse paying his note in such case. Surely a Government ought to perform its promise with as much delicacy and exactness. Congress did not promise the half-pay, and afterward the commutation on the condition that a man should serve till they should think proper to say the war was at an end. He depended on the stubborn fact that it did end, which no resolution of Congress could change; and not on the refining opinion when the officers might safely be discharged—for that we see might be differently formed, according to the different views of policy and safety at the time. An officer having this promise of Congress, has a right to this commutation on the cessation of hostilities, in pursuance of the treaty. "The end of the war," meaning of the words "the end of the war," should be decided as it was understood at the time of the promise. Will any one believe that the 3d November, 1783, was the term, after the state of war and all the treaties which put an end to it, had been long passed? If any doubt still remains, writers on the law of nations should be consulted. For the officer may justly claim an execution of the promise according to law; that is the umpire between Government and the people. On appealing to the law of nations, we find that war is defined to be "the state in which a nation prosecutes its right by force." "Peace is opposed to the state of war—an accommodation is proposed and conditions agreed on, and thus peace puts an end to war." "When the Powers at war agree to lay down their arms, the agreement is the treaty of peace." "The general and necessary effects of peace, are the reconciliation of enemies and the cessation of hostilities; it restores the two nations to their natural state." Would any jury in this country say, that the matter of fact and the principles of law were not in favor of the petition? Apply these maxims of law to the case. The provisional articles of November, 1782, were of themselves nothing, it is true, but they were to constitute tute the treaty of peace, whenever Great Britain and France had agreed on the terms of peace. As these two Powers did agree on the 30th January, 1783, and ratified the terms on the 3d February, 1783, then the provisional articles, to use the very words of the preamble, did constitute the treaty of peace; it was then a concluded thing; and peace in fact took place in the several parts of the world on the appointed days.

It has been said, that the preliminaries were no more than a suspension of arms—that the state of war still continued, until a definitive treaty. To this it is answered, that preliminaries bind the national faith, if violated, the perjured faithless nation would kindle a new war. By the law of nations there is not such a distinction as that which is alleged, between preliminary and definitive treaties. Let the authorities for such a distinction be produced by those who make it. But they do not exist—a truce does not put an end to a war—a truce is, however, a suspension of war for a specified term. At the end of this term, the war begins again, of course, without any fresh declaration. But a suspension of hostilities for an indefinite period, is not a truce, but a peace; especially if it is added, that it is agreed upon by the belligerent nations in consequence of a settlement of their disputes, and if it happens in fact that the war is not revived. Those who make so much of a definitive treaty, and so light of preliminaries, should consider that, on their own system, the former is a kind of defeasance which annuls the latter. But when the definitive treaty is signed, the preliminaries, which before were liable to be annulled, now become of force, and the treaty, now become indefeasible, takes its date from the preliminaries. Though this mode of reasoning has not much weight on my mind, it ought to have some with those who have set up the distinction which it is adduced to overthrow.

These are the reasons on which I have formed my opinion that the war ended in fact in April, 1783, when hostilities ceased by mutual agreement of the Powers at war. My opinion is supported by authority much more reputable than any I can give to it. The law courts in this country have decided it judicially; cases of captured vessels, and the question of interest on British debts, have produced decisions in every State of the Union, unless I am misinformed, that the war ended in March or April, 1783. The courts in England, and in every country where the war spread, on trials of property, have made similar decisions. Major Torrey died in September, 1783; shall this body decide against the settled rule of all the law courts?

It remains to remove some objections:

It is alleged, that Congress have by various resolves fixed the period of the war, and have declared that the 3d November, 1783, is the term. If they had declared that it should be computed from the end of the world, it would not alter the truth of the fact. After declarations ought not to be received to change their own promises. But a declaration, or a dozen of them, made for another purpose, and not to declare the meaning of the contract, cannot on any principle be received to interpret it. It is not necessary, however, to contend against those resolves of Congress. They are irreconcilable with the former engagement to Major Torrey. In undertaking to reconcile them, I feel that I impose a task on myself, which is made heavy by the prepossessions of many of my friends; I believe the minds of gentlemen are perfectly fair, and well-disposed to doing the petitioner justice. But I hope I shall not be thought to intend any offence, when I remark that certain ideas, such as that this claim is cut off by resolves of Congress, and that on allowing it, confusion would take place in the business of the public offices, were started with the discussion, and they have remained so woven into the texture of the debate, that I think it hard to unravel them. It was soon manifest that there was a general disposition to vote against the petition. This opportunity for debate seems to have been accorded as of grace, rather than as a means of removing any existing doubts of their own. Having adopted these opinions, this is rather a form of refusal than a mode of inquiring; and it seems to have been chosen with every circumstance of decency, and with all possible steadfastness of purpose. Yet I will proceed to state, that the point whether the war was at end when hostilities ended in April, 1783, being already considered fully, we are to look for other reasons than such as relate to the commutation, to explain the resolves of Congress which continued the service of the officers beyond the end of the war, and as late as November, 1783. A mistake seems to have crept in here. It seems to be supposed that the officers were engaged to serve to the end of the war, just long enough to secure their commutation. But the commutation depended on one thing—the term of their service on another. The former was their right at the end of the war; but they were to remain in service till dismissed, unless they should think fit sooner to resign. They held their commissions during the pleasure of Congress. Though when the war ended they had a right to the commutation, they had no right to say their service was at an end. They did not choose to resign: Congress, for wise reasons, did not choose to dismiss them. A foreign army was still in New York. They were sent home on furlough, but drawing pay, and liable to be called into the field. Congress, in their resolves, did not say that it was not peace, but in effect that it was unsafe to disarm. Gentlemen are not well agreed among themselves as to the end of the war. Some fix it at the definitive treaty of September 3, 1783; others at November 3. Their conclusions agree as illy with their principles; for if the definitive treaty put an end to the war, how can the same gentlemen say that the war was kept alive, on the journals of Congress, till November, 1783? Here, then, were Peace and War subsisting quietly together during two months.

H. or R.]

John Torrey.

[NOVEMBER 1791.]

The fears of making confusion by opening a door to many applications, seem to be groundless. A man must have died between the end of hostilities and November, 1783, to place a claim on the like footing. The living have had their commutations; they cannot come; and no other officer died in that period, as far as I can learn. I have inquired, and cannot find at the office of the Secretary of War any precedent which militates with this claim, nor any reason to suppose that any similar one will be offered. The case is a new one; it stands alone, and probably ever will, and it must be decided on its own merits. Believing the fact to be indisputable, that Major Torrey served to the end of the war, confiding in the principles of the law of nations, and the settled decisions of the Judicial Courts, I have endeavored to explain my ideas with perspicuity, and to impress them with force. I have said more than questions touching an individual will often be found to merit; but when public principles are construed to the prejudice of private rights, the debate cannot be treated too seriously.

Mr. Boudinot said, he differed in opinion from the gentleman in his construction of the business. He did not coincide in the idea that the decision of the present question should be on a strictly judicial principle. The petition is founded on certain resolutions and laws of Congress; and as there are certain established rules which have been observed in settling with every other officer similarly circumstanced, Congress cannot now with propriety break through those rules; to these they ought to adhere, till by the decision of some Judicial Court it shall appear that they are contrary to the rules of justice. [Here Mr. Ames requested Mr. Boudinot to point out the rules to which he referred.] Mr. B. referred to the report now under consideration, which was founded on a resolution of Congress, that the time for which the army was engaged should expire in November, 1783. This has been made a rule in all the settlements with the officers of the army.

The terms of the contract, between the officers and the United States, depended, he said, on the decision of the sovereign power; that was authorized alone to determine when the war should cease. That power was vested in the then-existing Congress, who, although they entered into provisional articles in November, 1783, did not, however, think proper immediately to disband their armies or put an end to the war, as it was yet uncertain whether those provisional articles would be ratified by Great Britain, or a treaty of peace concluded between Great Britain and France; a circumstance which was necessary before those articles could be definitively binding. It was only when the definitive treaty was made, that Congress determined the period of the war. The army, when finally disbanded and paid up to that day, acknowledged, by accepting their pay, that it was then only the war ended; and, as far as was in their power, assented to the principle which he maintained, that the provisional articles had not before put an end to the war. Suppose that, on the arrival of the definitive treaty, Congress had not agreed to the terms, would the war have then been considered as at an end? Would not Congress have been in the same situation as before the signing of the provisional articles? It was necessary that Congress should, by a definitive act, determine when the war ceased. Congress had passed such an act; and the House at present cannot with propriety enter into a resolution to alter the period. The argument of inconvenience ought also to have some weight with the House; for if any alteration were now to be made in the law, it must have a retrospect to all the widows and children of deceased officers, who have received half pay for years past. Besides, many officers who have not hitherto considered themselves as entitled to half-pay, would, in consequence of such an alteration, have a right to apply for it.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

John Torrey.

[H. or R.]

Mr. LAURANCE said, he doubted not the gentleman who supported the petition was fully satisfied as to the justice of the claim which he advocated with so much ardor; he begged leave to state his opinion, however, on the subject, in which he should differ from that gentleman.

The contract with the officers of the late army was, that those should be entitled to certain benefits who served to the end of the war. But Major Torrey was not thus circumstanced, as he died previous to the period when the war ceased, and left neither widow nor orphan to receive the benefit of the provisions allowed by law; his case is not contemplated by any existing resolution of Congress.

It is well known that hostilities ceased at the time of publishing the provisional articles which formed the basis for the treaty of peace; but can any man say that every soldier had a right on that event to demand a discharge? Surely not. The provisional articles had the peace in contemplation, but the army was not to be discharged till the articles of the definitive treaty were ratified by the belligerent Powers. The army of the United States was, therefore, only furloughed, and Congress retained the power of recalling them into service; and had the officers and soldiers been recalled from their furloughs to take the field, it would have been a continuance of the same war; but if the definitive treaty had been signed, and hostilities had commenced the very next day, it would have been a new war, and would have been prosecuted on entirely new principles. The second article of the provisional treaty looks forward to a future period for a conclusion of the war; and he inferred, that the definitive articles being ratified, and the ratifications exchanged, alone constituted a termination of the war. Mr. L. added some observations on the legal ideas of Mr. Ames, in which he also differed from that gentleman; and concluded by expressing his approbation of the Report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. Ames's remarks were further combated by Mr. WILLIAMSON, Mr. DAYTON, Mr. HULLHOUSE, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. CLARK, and Mr. WHITE.

Mr. WAYNE was opposed to the report, and stated certain particulars to show that the army was not furloughed by Congress because it was apprehended there would be any further demand for their services, but because it was inconvenient to give them an absolute discharge at that period. The motion for accepting the Secretary's Report was carried by a large majority.

WEDNESDAY, November 9.

Two other members, to wit: from Maryland, WILLIAM VANS MURRAY; and from South Carolina, THOMAS SUMPTER; appeared, produced their credentials, and took their seats in the House.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter from the Governor of Maryland, enclosing a Letter to him from WILLIAM PINKNEY, a member returned to serve in this House for the said State, containing his resignation of that appointment; also a return of JOHN FRANCIS MERCEN, elected a member to serve in this House, in the room of the said WILLIAM PINKNEY; which were read, and ordered to be referred to the standing Committee of Elections.

Mr. SEDGWICK, from the committee appointed, presented, according to order, a bill directing the mode in which the evidences of the debt of the United States, which have been lost or destroyed, may be renewed; which was received, and read the first time.

Ordered, That the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from considering certain propositions of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which were committed to them on Thursday last; and that the said propositions of amendment be referred to Mr. SEDGWICK, Mr. HULLHOUSE, Mr. BENSON, Mr. BOUDINOT, Mr. MADISON, Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, and Mr. STERLE.

Resolved, That the Attorney General be directed to report to this House such farther information as he may be in possession of, relative to the operation of the Judicial System.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill or bills to establish a uniform system on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States; and that Mr. VINE, Mr. BOUDINOT, Mr. GILES, Mr. LAURANCE, and Mr. GERRY, be the said committee.

Ordered, That a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill or bills to regulate pilots, and provide for the superintendence of the light-houses, and the beacons, buoys, and public piers, in the bay and river of Delaware, and the bay of Chesapeake, with the rivers emptying into the same; and that Mr. FITZSIMONS, Mr. LEE, and Mr. SHERIDINE, be the said committee.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the Secretary of War on the petition of John Younglove, and of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Albany and Washington, in the State of New York; whereupon,

Resolved, That the prayer of the said petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Albany and Washington, in the State of New York, for a repeal of so much of the act of Congress, entitled "An act for the relief of disabled soldiers and seamen lately in the service of the United States, and of certain other persons," as relates to the pension of the said John Younglove, cannot be granted.

Mr. VINING called up a motion, heretofore made by him, for the appointment of a committee to prepare a bill or bills to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

The question being taken on the motion, and carried, a committee was accordingly appointed.

A committee was also appointed (pursuant to a motion heretofore made by Mr. FARRINGTON, and since amended) to bring in a bill or bills for the regulation of pilots, and public piers in the bay of the beacons, buoys, and public piers in the bay of Chesapeake, and the rivers disembodying thereinto.

The Report of the Secretary of the Department of War, on the petition of John Younglove, and the counter-petition of sundry inhabitants of the State of New York, being then called up, a resolution was moved,

"That the prayer of the petition of sundry inhabitants of the counties of Albany and Washington, in the State of New York, for the repeal of so much of the act, entitled, 'An act for the relief of disabled soldiers and seamen lately in the service of the United States, and of certain other persons,' as relates to the pension of John Younglove, cannot be granted."

[John Younglove having been, but not then actually being, in the service of the United States, was disabled in his own house, in repelling an attack of the enemy during the late war. He obtained from the late Congress a pension; and the contra-petitioners endeavored to effect the revocation of the grant. All the papers on this subject being referred to the Secretary of the War Department, he reported, as his opinion, that Mr. Younglove did not, by any of the existing acts of Congress, seem entitled to a pension.]

An interesting debate took place on the propriety of withdrawing the pension. On the one hand, it was urged, that if Mr. Younglove's title was admitted, every man who might suffer in his person or property, from an attack of the Indians or of any other assailant, would have an equal right to claim a compensation, at the national expense, and that the multitude of such claims would drain the public coffers; that Congress was not infallible; and if the late Congress had committed an error in granting a pension where it was not justly due, the present Congress have a right, and are, in duty to their constituents, bound to rectify the mistake, by revoking the grant. On the other hand, it was said, that although Mr. Younglove was not, under the then existing laws, entitled to a pension, yet, as the late Congress thought him deserving of one, and conferred it on him, it would ill become the present Congress to revoke the grant. They ought to suppose that their predecessors had sufficient reasons to influence them in making it; at all events, the grant being once made, and the public faith pledged for the continuance of the pension, they could not now withdraw it, without destroying the public confidence in the promises of the Government.

The question being taken on the motion, it was carried in the affirmative.

THURSDAY, November 10.

A bill directing the mode in which the evidences of the debt of the United States, which have been lost or destroyed, shall be renewed, was read the second time, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the Whole House to-morrow.

THE CENSUS.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Schedule of the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States.

Mr. LAURANCE had previously moved, that until the next enumeration the number of Representatives should be one for every thirty thousand persons.

Mr. DAYTON moved to strike out "thirty," before "thousand." This amendment was under consideration.

Mr. GERRY observed, that in all the decisions of the Legislature, we ought to follow as far as possible the opinion of the great body of the people. If this opinion should be found to be against the ratio of thirty thousand, the amendment ought to be adopted; but if we refer to the amendments proposed by the Conventions to the Constitution, we shall find that five States are in favor of one Representative to every thirty thousand persons, till the number should amount to two hundred.

None of the propositions now moved as amendments to the motion of the gentleman from New York, amount to that number. Several others of the Conventions were of opinion that the representation was too small to secure the liberties of this country. This Government, said he, is a Government of representation: the people may control their Representatives, but their influence is small in respect to the Senate and the Executive, and still less over the officers of Government. On what then do the people depend for checking encroachments, or preventing abuses? On their Representatives? If these should be too few, or if they should fail them, they never can redress their grievances without having recourse to violence. If the number is small, a majority may be the more easily corrupted. On the other hand, too large a number will be attended with difficulties; a medium then is most eligible. An adequate number is absolutely necessary; and to show that one to thirty thousand would not produce more than an adequate number, he referred to the ratio of representation in England and France, in which there was a greater proportion of Representatives than in the Legislature of the United States.

It has been objected to an increase of Representatives, that it would lead to encroachments on the part of the General Government, over those of the individual Governments. He thought that the reverse of the objection was true, and instanced the opinion and plan of Governor Hutchinson, of Massachusetts, who proposed and advised a reduction of the representation of Massachusetts, as a necessary step in order to effect the designs of Great Britain; decreasing the number, therefore, will be lessening in proportion the security of the liberties of the people.

He then adverted to the objection arising from the additional expense; but, he observed, after Congress shall have passed a few more of the most important acts, it is not probable that the public business will in future require that the sessions should be for more than four months annually; this would reduce the expense greatly, in the first instance; and, agreeably to a calculation, an addition of forty-seven members to the present number, would make the aggregate expense but about one-eighth part more than at present, supposing the sessions to be four months long. But he considered the objection on account of the expense as merely speculative.

Although Congress is not positively bound by the Constitution to give one member for every thirty thousand inhabitants, yet he would ask, whether the citizens of the United States did not expect that this ratio would be adopted? and whether they would not consider it as an abuse of power, if Congress, instead of one to thirty thousand, should settle the representation at one to forty thousand? Eight States have already adopted the first article of the proposed amendments to the Constitution: and if the House should either settle the number of the Representatives at one hundred, or reduce it, or establish it at one hundred, perhaps they might, before the end of the session, be obliged to repeal their act—as they would be bound by the amendment, as soon as it is ratified by a sufficient number of States. If gentlemen thought it probable that the proposed amendment would be ratified by the several States, they ought already to consider it as a rule for their conduct, and be restrained by it, from giving less than one Representative for thirty thousand inhabitants. After the representation amounts to one hundred, Congress will, no doubt, have a right to fix it there, until it is increased by the ratio of one to forty thousand; but that is a power which, he presumed, Congress will not exercise; but that they then will establish some ratio, by which the increase of representation shall keep pace with the increase of population, until the House consists of two hundred members.

Mr. BOUNDINOT was convinced of the propriety of striking out the word "thirty." The House ought to consider what would be an adequate number for doing the business of the Union; and that number ought not to be exceeded, except to answer some very valuable purpose. Business would proceed with difficulty, if the representation was so numerous as it would become by the ratio of one to thirty thousand. The present Representation of the United States is in a ratio very different from that of one to thirty thousand; and yet he thought it fully adequate. From a rough calculation, the ratio of thirty thousand would produce one hundred and thirteen members; thirty-five thousand would give ninety-seven; and forty thousand would produce eighty-one. If the number once settled was to rest there, he would not be over anxious to oppose the increase; but if gentlemen would take into view the increase consequent on the next enumeration, they would find that the number will by far exceed the due bounds. The increase of expense had been mentioned.

He thought it would greatly exceed the calculation.

tion of the gentleman, and, for his part, although he was willing to tax the people for the necessary purposes of Government, yet he would never consent to subject them to unnecessary burdens. Every man must see, that if the number was doubled, it would take almost double the time to do the business, as every member would have an equal right to deliver his sentiments, and thus protract their deliberations.

He thought the people of the United States would be duly represented, and to their entire satisfaction, if the ratio was set higher than thirty thousand; nor could he imagine that such an exact proportion, between the Representatives and the represented, was at all requisite to secure their liberties, or to do the necessary business of Government. This indeed might be the case, if the power vested in Congress was proportionate to their number: but, since the House would possess the same powers, whether it consisted of a greater or a smaller number, he thought the people equally secure in either case. The ratio of thirty-five thousand, which would produce ninety-seven members, would, in his opinion, be a very proper one. If, however, the people should think otherwise, they had it in their power to correct the mistake, by ratifying the proposed amendment. Their not having as yet ratified it, was to him an argument that they thought the ratio too low; or, at least, that they considered the question as doubtful. Some of the States, he observed, have postponed the consideration of the amendment; and eight only have as yet agreed to it. On the whole, the House might safely adopt the ratio of one to thirty-five thousand; for that the increasing population of the United States would ever supply a representation sufficiently numerous to answer every good purpose.

Mr. CLARK observed, that his objection was not merely on account of the pay of the members, but an increase in the representation would bring an additional expense on the people, by increasing the number of public officers; as almost every man would wish to see his friend provided for. The liberties of America could be in no danger from the present ratio of representation. The doors of the House are open, and the people know what their Representatives are doing.

Mr. STEELE was in favor of the motion for striking out thirty. In discussing the important subject before the Committee, he observed that there were two inquiries to be attended to: What is the proper number to constitute a Representative body for the United States, and what ratio will leave the fewest fractions in the respective States? One member to thirty thousand, he conceived, would give too numerous a representation. According to the present number of inhabitants, it will almost double the present number; it will divide and diminish the responsibility, make the House too unwieldy, retard public business, and increase the public expenses unnecessarily. An adequate representation, he thought, would be comprised within a much smaller number.

Gentlemen have called our attention to the House of Commons of Great Britain, and the National Assembly of France; but, God forbid that we should draw our precedents from such examples as may be cited from European representation. He was opposed to thirty thousand as the ratio; it would, in fractions, throughout the United States, leave above three hundred and sixty-nine thousand citizens unrepresented. Thirty-five thousand he thought the most eligible number, as it would leave the fewest fractions.

Some gentlemen seem to favor the ratio of thirty thousand, because that number has been recommended by some of the Conventions, in their proposed amendments to the Constitution; but he hoped that no decision would be founded on those subsequent amendments. It would be well to recollect the sentiments of gentlemen in the several Conventions: in many of them, they were agreed to without any wish or expectation that they should ever be taken into consideration, and therefore he thought that no argument ought to be drawn from them: neither ought Congress to be influenced by the example of the State Governments; business is so transacted in most of them, on account of their numerous representation, that there is very little permanency or consistency in their systems. Too numerous an Assembly is perpetually liable to disorder; and, when that is the case, Government becomes contemptible. This consideration had greater weight with him than an additional expenditure of a few dollars. He again objected to any example from Great Britain or France; their Assemblies are too numerous and unwieldy to transact business without confusion; and, compared with what he considered as an adequate number, are mere mobs.

With respect to the proposed amendments, they have not been adopted by three-fourths of the States; and from thence he inferred that they would be finally rejected. He thought the amendment respecting the ratio of Representatives not so good as the original clause in the Constitution, and said he would not hesitate to declare that it ought never to be adopted as a part of it. It has been said that the voice of America is in favor of the ratio of thirty thousand; were this the case, he would obey the voice of America: but he believed that the opinion of enlightened America was that forty or fifty thousand would not be too high a ratio. He should give the preference to either of those numbers to thirty or thirty-five thousand, were it not on account of the fractions that would remain. He concluded by saying he should vote for thirty-five thousand.

Mr. LAURANCE agreed that an adequate number was the great object to be attended to; but he contended that the original motion would give this number more completely than a larger ratio: and it ought to be considered, that, before the next enumeration, it will not be probably more than one to fifty thousand. As to the increase of expense, he observed that the great objects being accomplished, the future sessions will be short; besides which, the compensation of the members may be diminished. But he considered a necessary increase in the expense to be fully counterbalanced by affording greater security to the Liberties of the People. The firmness of a Government depends on a strong Executive; but this Executive should be founded on a broad bottom; and the broader the basis, the more secure is the public freedom under a vigorous Executive.

The existence of the Union may depend on the fullness of the representation. The inequality in the proportional increase of the number of inhabitants in different States, ought also to be taken into consideration; for it is very probable that, in a short time, while some of the smaller States had a Representative for every thirty thousand, others would not have one to forty thousand. He was governed by general principles, and not by any calculations of fractional numbers: the Constitution contemplates the ratio he had proposed, and therefore he hoped the motion for striking out would not obtain.

Mr. GOODRICH observed, that the situation and circumstances of the Government of the United States are so different from those of France or Great Britain, that no parallel could be drawn respecting them. Nor is there an absolute similarity between this Government and those of the State Governments. The objects of legislation which come under the cognizance of Congress, are but few compared with those which engage the British House of Commons and the National Assembly of France. A much larger representation for them, and in our State Legislatures, is therefore more proper, than is necessary for us in the General Government. He doubted the opinion that a large representation was less liable to corruption than a small one: some facts appear to confirm the former sentiment. He did not consider the expense as a material objection, if an increase of the number be necessary to doing more ample justice, or for the greater security of the Liberties of the People; but, as he thought this was by no means the case, he was in favor of striking out "thirty," in order to insert a larger number.

Mr. BARNWELL agreed with the gentleman last up. He should vote for striking out "thirty," in order to substitute the largest number that had been mentioned. Mr. B. entered into an abstract and philosophical discussion of the principle of representation in Government. The leading sentiment was, that a large proportion of Representatives is not necessary to obtain the best objects of legislation, in expressing the will of the people, or to secure the Liberties of the constituent body. The great point, he observed, was, to combine the greatest portion of honesty with a due degree of activity. That number which would comprise a due proportion of these, would be competent to all the purposes of legislation, whether the number for which it legislates is ten thousand, or five hundred thousand. On this principle, he was decidedly against a large number, and in favor of a small one. Adverting to the British House of Commons and the National Assembly of France, with respect to the former, he said, their corruption is, in a great degree, owing to their numbers: as to the latter, he observed, that the National Assembly had acted, in his opinion, politically and wisely. They set out with a large representation, in conformity to the sentiments of the people at the moment; but, on experience, finding the number too great, they have reduced it from twelve hundred to about two hundred and fifty. He believed that the general sense of the people was against a large representation in Congress; the inconveniences experienced from numerous bodies in the State Legislatures has led several of the States to lessen the number. He instanced Georgia, South Carolina, and Pennsylvania.

Mr. BALDWIN was opposed to the motion. One Representative for thirty thousand, appeared to him by no means a great representation. The opinion that, of late, had been so often advanced from the press, and in public discussion, for reducing the Representative branch in Government to a small number, he held to be full of dangerous error. He was sensible that the terms great and small were so merely relative in their signification, that it was difficult precisely to understand each other in the use of them. Perhaps they may most properly, both of them, be considered as extremes. No doubt representation, which of late seems to be used as the character of Republican Government, is a great improvement upon Democracy, or legislation by the whole body of the people. He could conceive that a representation might be so large as to partake of the evils of assembling the whole body of the people; but it was a very improbable and not a dangerous extreme: the other extreme was full of danger. These observations acquire much force, when applied particularly to the Governments of this Country: enfeeble the Representative part of them, and you sap the very principles of life. They stand on a different basis from the Governments which have gone before them, and may justly be said to be new experiments in Government; time, as yet, has scarcely given room to judge of the probable issue; but this we may pronounce with much certainty—Let the principles of representation languish, and they have no chance of success.

It had not been found practicable to ground representation in the Federal Constitution upon any other principle than that of numbers; but extent of territory is unquestionably one of the natural principles on which it rests, and should if possible be regarded. One for thirty-four or thirty-five thousand may be deemed a proper representation in the Kingdom of France, or of Great Britain. The four millions which compose the United States, compactly settled where there was great sameness in the country, and pretty equally distant from a common centre, would be properly represented by a smaller number than in their present sparse settlement. But, still further: the settlement of the United States is a fillet stretched along the sea-coast for seventeen hundred miles, comprehending as great a variety of climate and interests as one of the other quarters of the globe. It is difficult to conceive of a situation which calls for a greater extension of the principle of representation.

It has been said, that one for thirty thousand will make too large and unwieldy a body. He has been said, that one for thirty thousand will make too large and unwieldy a body. He was sensible that was a point that did not admit of being determined by any conclusive reasoning; it was a mere matter of opinion; sound judgment only is to be used, time and experience will come on and confirm or correct the opinion. In such a case, it is wise to inquire how this has been judged of by others who have had a Representative body. In France, one thousand two hundred was not thought too great a representation in forming their National Assembly; and the number established by their new Constitution for their stated Legislature was not two hundred and fifty, as the member last up had stated, but, if he had not been misinformed by the publications in this country, it was nearly seven hundred and fifty.

In the Kingdom of Great Britain, five hundred is not thought too great a representation: and can one hundred and thirteen, which is the greatest number contended for, be considered in this country as a huge and impracticable mass of representation?

It had ever appeared to him to be among the strongest marks of our youth and inexperience, that we grow wise too suddenly. He was afraid this instantaneous wisdom which sprung up so at once, and set at naught, or removed to the extreme of absurdity and folly, the deliberate and tried opinions of the most profound and enlightened among men, in circumstances peculiarly favorable to honest decision, will itself be left by time on that extreme.

And how does this compare with the opinion and experience of this Country in the State Governments? The idea had before been called up, but in his opinion justice was by no means done to the comparison. It had been said, that the States in general had found their representation too large, and were diminishing it. Let another view be taken of the comparison: A state will not suffer the ordinary business of its own internal legislation to be intrusted to fewer Representatives than from one to two hundred, and in some instances more, and yet in the Federal Government they are obliged to submit to a legislation which can much more substantially affect their happiness and prosperity, and perhaps they have there but a single Representative, or at most but five or six. The slightest comparison shows, that there is no manner of proportion between them; that they are irreconcilably distorted. Surely gentlemen of the opposite opinion will not have the effrontery to attempt to draw an argument from that source for diminishing the present representation.

The several State Conventions which had thought proper to animadvert at all upon the Federal Constitution, had pretty uniformly expressed their wish that the representation should be increased. Theorists in Government, so far as he had been informed, had generally given their opinion that this part was too small, and out of proportion. He was as far from venerating mere theories of Government as any man, and was sensible they must adjust themselves to the times and circumstances of the people. But it would not be useless to inquire—How does this appear in practice? He could say, for himself, that it brought his own mind to the same conclusion, that it was the part of the Federal Constitution, of all others, most defective and insecure. Thirty-three members had formed the House, seventeen was a majority, and equal to the decision of any question. Questions had already occurred involving property to the amount of from fifty to eighty millions of dollars, and much of it in the hands of the most daring individuals, rendered desperate by their speculations. He did not say there had been any foundation for uneasy apprehensions from that quarter; but he did say, that in other countries it would be supposed to be a most dangerous experiment upon the passions and imperfections of human nature. But it had been said, and with an unexpected assurance, that increasing the numbers did not increase the security against these evils. If so, why not reduce it at once to the venerable number thirteen; or, indeed, three; which would give us as great a security as the whole body of the people? It is idle to pursue observations on such a point: the mind that can ask for reasoning upon it, can scarcely be supposed in a situation to be benefited by reasons.

The Federal Government, it must be admitted, is in fact pretty highly seasoned with prerogative; practice has already evinced the necessity, in many instances, of increasing it, by devolving much of the Legislative power upon the Executive Department, arising from the difficulty of making particular provisions and details in our laws, and accommodating them to the various interests of so extensive a country.

The other branch of the Legislature has many traits of a perpetual—at least of a very solid constituent part of the Government. He did not mention these as imperfections in the Government; they are perfections, if the other parts can be in due proportion: but it is surely a sound reason against taking positive measures at this time to diminish the Representative branch. For his own part, he was not well satisfied as to the intention. If there is any reason to apprehend that the Government will depart from the point on which it was first placed, he could scarcely suppose that any one could be honestly alarmed with the fear that the departure would be towards Democracy.

He concluded, by expressing his hopes that the representation to the next Congress would be fixed at one for thirty thousand, as it had hitherto been, and that the motion for striking out would not prevail.

At this point the Committee rose, and had leave to sit again.

FRIDAY, November 11.

The House met pursuant to adjournment; but as a great proportion of the members were on committees, who were not ready to report, Mr. SREBLE moved that, in order to afford those committees time to prepare and bring in their respective reports, the House should adjourn until Monday next; which motion was unanimously agreed to.

JOHN W. KIRKPA, from Pennsylvania, appeared, produced his credentials, and took his seat in the House to-day.

MONDAY, November 14.

A petition of James Jackson, of the State of Georgia, was presented to the House and read, complaining of the undue election and return of ANTHONY WAYNE, one of the members returned to serve in this House for the said State.

Mr. BALDWIN moved that the petition should be referred to the Committee of Elections. He offered several observations to show the propriety of giving early attention to the business, particularly as the contested election took place in the remotest part of the remotest State in the Union. It was observed that a reference to the committee appointed to bring in a bill for establishing an uniform mode of proceeding in cases of contested elections, appeared to be the most eligible. A reference to the Committee of Elections was objected to, as the subject did not come within their cognizance, as that committee can only determine respecting the certificate, &c., which are required from the Executive of the State to entitle to a seat in the House. A reference to the committee appointed to report a bill was also objected to, as that committee was not authorized to take notice of past transactions, or to report a retrospective regulation. A select committee was mentioned, agreeably to the mode adopted in the two contested elections which occurred in the first Congress; but, it being observed that the petition was unaccompanied with the requisite documents mentioned in it, Mr. B. withdrew his motion, and the petition was laid on the table.

A petition of Moses Hazen was presented to the House and read, praying the settlement of a claim against the United States as an officer in the late army.

Ordered, To lie on the table.

A Message was received from the President of the United States by Mr. Secretary Lear, with a copy of a resolution of the Legislature of Virginia, ratifying the first article in the amendments proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States; also, sundry papers relative to a purchase of land on the Great Miami, by John C. Symmes.

Ordered, That the papers relating to the Miami purchase be referred to the committee appointed to prepare and bring in a bill or bills to establish offices for the purpose of granting lands within the territories of the United States.

The petition of Stephen Zachary, merchant, of Baltimore, was read, stating that, in consequence of an unintentional error in a bill of sale of a vessel purchased at Port-au-Prince, he had been obliged to pay extra tonnage duties, and praying relief. On motion, this petition was referred to a select committee, consisting of Messrs. FITZSIMONS, HUGER, and GILMAN.

A petition of the distillers of spirits in the town of Baltimore was presented to the House and read, praying a reduction of duties, and farther revision and amendment of the act passed at the last session, for laying duties upon spirits distilled within the United States. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter and Report from the Board of Commissioners for settling the accounts between the United States and the individual States; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

A member, in his place, produced certain papers respecting the sale and disposition of the marine hospital in the State of Virginia; which were read, and ordered to be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, with instruction to examine the same and report his opinion thereupon to the House.

A petition of sundry persons, citizens of the State of New York, who are holders of certain bills of credit emitted under the authority of the late Congress, in the year one thousand seven hundred and eighty, was presented to the House and read, praying that adequate provision may be made for the redemption of the principal and interest of the said bills of credit, and that they may be put on a footing with other public creditors of the United States.

Ordered, To lie on the table.

The House proceeded to consider a Report of the Secretary of War on the petition of Rufus Hamilton, which was made to the House of Representatives the twenty-second of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, stating sundry reasons in opposition to the claim of the said Rufus Hamilton. Whereupon,

Resolved, That the prayer of the said petition cannot be granted.

RATIO OF REPRESENTATION.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Schedule of the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States.

Mr. FINDLEY declared himself to be in favor of one Representative for every thirty thousand persons. The opinion of the people should be the guide of the committee; that opinion, he conceived, to be in favor of the ratio he had mentioned.

The representation ought as nearly as possible to express not only the will, but to participate in the wishes and interests of the people. A large representation embraces these interests more fully, and is more competent to giving and receiving information. The objects of legislation are such as come home to the doors, to the feelings of every man; the Government ought therefore to secure the confidence of the people by a large representation. The expense he considered as trifling compared to the benefits—and the people expect and are willing to pay for being well governed, and having their liberties secured. An increased representation, is an additional security against corruption. As to delays occasioned by a numerous body, he observed, that the Representatives were chosen to deliberate and to mature every subject before decision; he instanced the advantages derived from the numerous representation of the States, whatever inconveniences may attend them, plainly show the sense of the people on the subject. Mr. G. then took a view of the objects of legislation to the State Assemblies, and of those of the General Government. In the former, above one thousand persons are employed, though their attention is confined to their internal police. Those of the General Government, on the other hand, are on the great objects of the whole finance of ations in France and in Ireland; the former had framed a Constitution in two years for twenty-six millions of citizens, and provided for securing the Liberties of their Country—and the latter had proved a successful barrier against the encroachments of the arbitrary power of England. He concluded, by asserting that the voice of the people was in favor of the amendment proposed to the Constitution, which would give one Representative to every thirty thousand persons.

Mr. GILLES said this subject had struck him in two points of view: whether Congress are not precluded from exercising any discretion on the subject? and whether, if they are not, it is expedient for them to exercise this discretion at this time? The ratio of representation is a Constitutional, and not a Legislative act. He referred to the Constitution, in which it is said that there shall be one Representative to every State; and secondly, that until the enumeration, the number should be as therein appointed to each State. After the enumeration, the number is mentioned below which it shall not be placed; but there is a negative power to increase the ratio, and from this negative power, a positive discretionary power is inferred. But, he observed, that Congress had precluded itself from a right to exercise this discretionary power, by sending out to the several State Legislatures an amendment on this very subject. This amendment he considered in a serious point of view; and had this idea been attended to at the commencement of the discussion, he conceived that it would have prevented the opinion from being brought forward, whether it was expedient that any change in the ratio of the representation should take place. The idea of one to thirty thousand, he considered as fully settled in the minds of the people; and a change on the part of the Government would indicate a changeable disposition, and a mutability of counsels, which is but another name for weakness.

The sense of the people has been resorted to by gentlemen on both sides of the question. This, if it can be ascertained, is undoubtedly the best guide; and he thought those in favor of one to thirty thousand had with great propriety referred to the Conventions, and to the acts of Congress itself. But the amendments are said to have been a matter of compromise, and were insincerely acceded to by the majority; but even on this ground, he conceived, that the sense of the people was equally as well declared. He, however, differed from gentlemen in respect to the motives which produced those amendments. In the State he came from, both Federalists and anti-Federalists are fully of opinion that further security as to the representation is requisite.

The numerous representations of the States, whatever inconveniences may attend them, plainly show the sense of the people on the subject.

Mr. G. then took a view of the objects of legislation to the State Assemblies, and of those of the General Government. In the former, above one thousand persons are employed, though their attention is confined to their internal police. Those of the General Government, on the other hand, are on the great objects of the whole finance of the Union, a sum of more than eighty millions of dollars, &c., &c.

[H. OF R.]

Ratio of Representation.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

It is said that we shall want abilities, but I should be sorry if a representation of ten times the present number of this House should comprise the abilities of a single State.

He assigned different causes than numbers, for the corruption in the British House of Commons; among these were the frequent mortgages of the funds, and the immense appropriations at the disposal of the Executive, the mode of their elections, &c. A large number is not so easily corrupted as a small body.

An inequality of circumstances, he then observed, produces revolutions in Government, from Democracy to Aristocracy and Monarchy. Great wealth produces a desire of distinctions, rank, and titles. The revolutions in property in this country have created a prodigious inequality of circumstances. Government has contributed to this inequality; the Bank of the United States is a most important machine in promoting the objects of this moneyed interest. This Bank will be the most powerful engine to corrupt this House. Some of the members are directors of this institution; and it will only be by increasing the representation that an adequate barrier can be opposed to this moneyed interest. He next adverted to certain ideas which he said had been disseminated through the United States; and here he took occasion to observe, that the Legislature ought to express some public disapprobation of these opinions. The strong Executive of this Government ought to be balanced by a full representation in this House. He hoped the motion to strike out thirty thousand would not obtain.

Mr. BOURNOR closed the debate of this day, by a few remarks, reinforcing his former observations in favor of an increased ratio.

TUESDAY, November 15.

Mr. SENDWICK, from the committee appointed, presented a bill respecting fugitives from justice, and from the service of masters; which was received, read twice, and committed.

RATIO OF REPRESENTATION.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Schedule of the Enumeration of the Inhabitants of the United States.

Mr. PAGE addressed the Chair as follows:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I can no longer refrain from expressing my sentiments respecting the question before the Committee; not only because I wish if possible to remove the error which I think several members, for whom I have the highest respect, have fallen into, but because I feel myself more interested in the question than I ever was in any one I have had to decide on.

Sir, it gave me pain to find those worthy members calculating and coldly applying the rules of arithmetic to a subject beyond the power of numbers to express the degree of its importance to their fellow-citizens. I was distressed, sir, to find that, in their honest zeal for securing order, despatch of business, and dignity in respectability of members in the General Legislature, they used arguments which have been applied in other countries to the establishment of insolent Aristocracies—in some, tyrannical Despotisms—and in others, Kings; those countries which were most on their guard with a semblance of a free Government.

Sir, the errors I wish to correct are these: They think that because it is proposed, by a proposed amendment to the Constitution, to authorize them to interfere in the business of ascertaining and fixing the ratio of representation to the population of the States, that Congress ought, without any hesitation, to enter on that business; but I humbly conceive that Congress, as this is a delicate question in which their own weight and importance must unite with the weight and substantial interest of their constituents, ought to listen to the suggestions of delicacy, and leave its decision to a disinterested convention of the States. I say it appears to me no small error to quit the plain path of legislation, marked out for us by the Constitution, needlessly to wander into the field of political speculation respecting its supposed defects.

Let me, therefore, advise to leave the restriction of the numbers of members of this House to the people, or to some future Congress, which can see more plainly than can now be described, the evils of a too numerous representation. By so doing, we shall avoid, if not an improper measure, at least a rash step—at least we shall stand clear of a charge of indelicacy, and deprive our enemies of the triumph they expected in the completion of their predictions, that Congress would never propose any amendments to the Constitution but such as would be subservient to their own views and aggrandizement. Let us not give the enemies of our new Government cause to exult, and its friends to sigh and mourn. Let us not give our friends occasion to repeat what many have said, that so many of our citizens have been led away by theoretical writers on Government, as to render it problematical whether the American States are not at this time as much indebted to the National Assembly for its remains of Republican principles, as France was to Congress, in 1776, for their first ideas of that Liberty which they now enjoy. Let us not, in this moment of general exultation of the friends to the Rights of Man, take a step which may damp their joy, and lead them to fear that Americans, who were foremost in the glorious career of Liberty, have stopped short.

But, sir, granting that we were now sitting in full Convention, convened for the sole purpose of altering that article of the Constitution which respects the number of Representatives, would it not become us to consider rather what was the sense of the members who framed that Constitution, and what was and is the sense of their constituents and our own respecting it, than what may be the result of our inquiries concerning the speculative opinions of writers on the subject of Government, or even the real consequences of the most plausible theories reduced to practice in other countries?

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Ratio of Representation.

[H. OF R.]

But, not to take up the precious time of this House with relations of facts to show what was and is the opinion of our fellow-citizens on this interesting subject, I will only state a few arguments which have weight with me as being in themselves evident truths, viz: Our Constitution being framed by the people, and introduced to us in their name, and Congress being the creatures of their will, spoken into existence by the word of their power, for Congress to lessen their weight, to diminish their importance, and to exclude them from as full a share in their own Government as can be consistent with the nature of it, and indeed from that share which they claim, must be impolitic and dangerous.

But, granting that the people wished not a greater share in the General Government than is proposed by the amendment, as it is impossible, in a country like the United States, that one man can be sufficiently informed of the opinions, wishes, and real interests of thirty-five thousand of his fellow-citizens, and therefore laws might be enacted contrary to the opinions, wishes, and interests of the people, in which they might nevertheless acquiesce, sacrificing their interests for the sake of peace and quiet to the wills of their Representatives, one thirty-five thousandth part of their own number, what friend to his country would wish to see such a dangerous influence on the one hand, and such a blind submission on the other? How long could an enlightened people remain in such a state of insensibility and torpor? And what might not be the consequence of their awakening from their lethargy? If not an expensive revolution, an expensive repeal of laws. And here I will remark, that the smallest number of Legislators, and they, too, well selected for their wisdom and respectability, if unacquainted with their constituents, might pass well-framed laws, founded on the wisdom of other countries, and yet find them disagreeable to their constituents, and be under a necessity of repealing them; but this could not be the case, if the people had in that Legislature a sufficient number of Representatives on whose fidelity, attachment, and disinterestedness they could rely. This, sir, is a truth worthy of our attention—an ignorance of which, or inattention thereto, I suspect has been the occasion of much political evil in the world. Happily for France, the people had such a number of Representatives in the National Assembly as could engage their feeling, inform their judgment, attach their interest, and establish their confidence in their fidelity and disinterestedness; had that number been much smaller, it is probable France would never have been delivered from oppression by their exertions.

I believe the National Assembly have judged about seven hundred and fifty members sufficient to represent their people, which on a supposition that they amount even to twenty-six millions, will be one Representative for every thirty-four thousand; a larger representation than is proposed by the amendment before us; but, sir, it is not and cannot be the interest or wish of the people at large to have a small representation in Congress under the present Government. We are told, however, that to avoid expense the people wish it; and that to avoid confusion in this House we should comply with that wish. With respect to the article of expense, I think we may with propriety make use of arithmetical calculations, and find how much at six dollars per day paid to one Representative it would cost the thirty thousand, divide six hundred cents by thirty thousand, the number of citizens—and we have one-fiftieth of a cent per diem, the expense of each citizen, if to be equally divided amongst them; that is, one cent for every fifty citizens per diem, or which must be the same thing, one cent must be paid by each citizen for every fifty days session of their Representative in Congress. Sir, I have the consolation to find that if our Constitution had one Representative for every fifteen, instead of thirty thousand, they could well afford to pay them, and that if it were even more expensive as to the payment of members, yet the people would most certainly be better satisfied with the laws which they would then have so great a share in framing. The people see that if their interests are not well guarded by a sufficient number of their fellow-citizens, who have a fellow-feeling, a common interest, they may be sacrificed to the ambition of some, or the vanity of others. I trust, sir, that they know too well the high price they have paid for the purchase of their Liberties, to be unwilling to pay a few farthings for the only possible means of preserving them. They see now that the Monarchical and Aristocratical part of Government is to be restrained—the former from absolute tyranny, and the latter from an insufferable insolence, by a very numerous body of the Representatives of the people alone. Americans know, sir, that Monarchical Governments were necessary for the protection of weak, ignorant people, against the encroachments of ambitious and ferocious neighbors; and for the preservation of order amongst themselves: that an Aristocratical form became convenient to protect them against the oppression of tyranny springing up out of Monarchy; that this form was adapted to a small progress in the science of Government, and that these two forms properly checked and controlled by the Democratical form, is still better suited to a general knowledge of that science; that a Representative Government, such as their own is, every part of which is more or less pervaded by the spirit of representation, cannot by any other means be so perfectly secured, as by their having at least as full a share as they have claimed in the Democratical branch of their Government.

I know, sir, that many friends of our Constitution thought that the Convention did not pay a sufficient attention to the interests of their constituents, when they restrained them from having more than one Representative for every thirty thousand citizens. I know that there is a report that the people are indebted to their President, even for this share in their Government; and I believe, sir, if this report be true, that whatever has been so justly said of him, as compared to Fabius, to Hannibal, to Alexander, may be forgotten: when this instance of his wisdom, disun-

H. OF R.]

Ratio of Representation.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

terestedness, and attachment to the interests of his fellow-citizens, will be more and more known and applauded, and be forever engraved on the hearts of their posterity. Shall we, then, Mr. Chairman, the direct Representatives of the people, be less attentive to their interest, and that too respecting their share in the deliberations of their own House of Representatives, than the President of their Convention was? I trust not.

I will not pretend to say, however, whether in an Assembly where attempts are frequently made to carry into effect the projects of Monarchical or Aristocratical juntos, the virtuous struggles of patriotic members may not produce mob-like disorders; but in an Assembly like Congress, where I should suppose no such question can be agitated; none which may not be discussed with temper and decency, such disorder need not be apprehended. I should suppose there would be less danger of animosities and disorderly debates in Congress, amongst twelve hundred members, than in the British Parliament, if it consisted but of one hundred. Where we have all but one and the same great object in view, the happiness of our country, (not the interests of a particular body of men born with privileges insulting to the feelings and rights of freemen, nor the whims of an individual, born to trample on his fellow creatures,) we can have no cause to be dissatisfied with one another.

Surely, sir, unless these gentlemen suppose the members of Congress void of sense, or of every idea of decency and propriety, they cannot suppose that even five hundred members would not be easily restrained within the bounds of order.

Upon the whole, I conclude that neither an apprehension of expense, nor of disorderly debates, ought to induce this Committee to run the risk of being charged with indecency, if not of sacrificing the interests of their constituents. I hope, therefore, that the worthy and ingenious members who, by supporting the amendment, have produced a full discussion of the question, will now join with me, and a great majority, in voting against it.

Mr. STEELE said he should not have troubled the Committee again if his observations had not been distorted by the remarks which had been made on them. He hoped that what he should offer on some of the opinions which had fallen from gentlemen in opposition to him would be received with that candor with which he should deliver them. He professed to be as warm a friend to the Liberties of the People as any man, but he differed in his ideas respecting the measures which would most effectually secure them. The present question, he thought, was not particularly interesting to the Liberties of the People, as the point of difference would not make a very great variation in that number of the representative body which appeared to be the most eligible to the majority of the committee. But the principle he contended for, he conceived, had a very important aspect on the stability of the Government. The subject, therefore, should be considered principally with respect to legislation, the great and essential principles of which were involved in the discussion. And here he thought that our own experience was the best instructor, for the examples quoted from Great Britain did not, in his opinion, apply to this country in all respects; the circumstances of the people of the respective countries being essentially different.

The States, experiencing the difficulties arising from numerous Representative Assemblies, have, in several instances, diminished them. The end, less divisibility of power consequent on such numbers, had fully satisfied the people that the want of representation was the pernicious effect of a large unwieldy bodies as fast as they can. Pennsylvania appeared to be far happier since the reduction of its Assembly.

A large sphere of representation gave the people a fairer opportunity to select the best characters. They could exercise their own judgments unbiassed and uninfluenced. The trust was greater which was conferred; and in proportion to its magnitude would be the public solicitude that it should not be improperly delegated. Besides which, it is impossible, in a large sphere of representation, for candidates to practise those little arts, so common at elections; nor can they go round and take every demagogue of the district by the hand to secure his vote.

As European examples had been recurred to, he would mention one circumstance which confirmed the justice of his remarks. Those parts of Great Britain which are divided into the largest districts send the smallest number of Representatives—such as London and the county of York. The latter, though containing more inhabitants than the Ancient Dominion, sends only two members to Parliament; and the members of those districts, it is remarkable, have always been the staunchest friends of the Liberties of the People. In noticing the remarks of Mr. GILES and Mr. FINDLEY, he said, that the object of representation was different from that of giving information to their constituents. Legislation was their great business; and not making up weekly large packets to send off to the influential characters in the districts which the members represented on the floor of that House. The people, it is true, have a right to be informed of public measures, and it is the indispensable duty of Government to make provision for that purpose, and this ought to be done through the medium of the post office. This medium is the only competent one, as it will open the way for that general information which is necessary to the security and to the Liberties of the People.

With respect to security from corruption by means of a numerous representation, he still retained his former opinion. He did not anticipate evils from that quarter.

He observed, that, in the warmth of debate, he had before expressed himself with rather more zeal than he wished he had; but, as he thought an undue degree of censure had been the consequence, it was become necessary, in some measure, to justify himself, by citing some examples to show what excesses a very numerous representative body may be guilty of. He then related a fact which occurred in Virginia, the Legislature of which, on a certain occasion, had acted in a Legislative, Executive, and Judicial capacity. He also instanced a more recent fact, in the secession from their duty of a considerable body of the Representatives of Pennsylvania. These facts demonstrated that a numerous representative body was liable to a mobbish spirit.

NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Ratio of Representation.

[H. OF R.]

He next adverted particularly to some remarks of Mr. GILES, and concluded by saying, that if the ratio is at this time fixed at 30,000, it must hereafter be increased; in doing which, some serious difficulties may take place, especially in respect to those States whose number of Representatives must, in that case, be reduced. He thought it best, therefore, to agree at the present time on a larger ratio.

Mr. CLARK said, he did not rise to trouble the House with a lengthy discourse, for he had always believed that long speeches answer no valuable purpose. He meant only to offer a few remarks on what had been said in opposition to his former observations, and he hoped that, although the gentlemen contend for the ratio of 30,000 as the only basis whereon to found the Liberties of the People, he should not be stigmatized with the name of an Aristocrat for voting in favor of a large ratio. Hitherto he had not borne that character, and he could not suppose himself yet infected, unless he had caught the disorder since he became a member of the present House. Much has been said about the influence of the Bank, and that bank directors are members of the House of Representatives. The Bank (said he) is public property, and therefore he could not see the force of the gentleman's arguments respecting the dangerous influence of that institution, unless it was that he was displeased at the distribution of the shares, so much of the stock being held at New York and to the Eastward, and so little at Conogochague. In the same predicament he viewed the other objections respecting the influence of speculators; for he did not know that any members of the House were speculators, neither could he see any danger from bribery.

In reply to Mr. FINDLEY's observation, that more wisdom would be brought into the House by increasing the ratio, he asked whether this would not also bring in more folly? For the probability is, that the ratio of both wisdom and folly will increase with the increase of numbers, and likewise of honesty and dishonesty; and with respect to the smallness of the district, or that it was safer for a small number to send a member than a greater, he was of a different opinion, as he believed that if ever the practice of bribery should come into play in America, it would be easier for a Representative to purchase a small district than a large one. If ever the Liberties of the People are endangered, it will not be by the smallness of the representation, but by the corruption of electors and elections. This is the door which Congress should guard in the strictest manner, and that will secure the people against corruption in the House.

A gentleman from Georgia has observed, that the disposition of a great many millions of dollars has been in the hands of a quorum of this House, of whom it requires only seventeen to form a majority. On this Mr. C. observed, that the old Congress, which was composed of a much smaller number, were intrusted with the disposal of larger sums, although there were sometimes only two members from the largest State, Virginia, and no complaints were heard of their conduct.

But there is an argument which ought to have weight in the present question. The Senate, although a much smaller body than this House, are fully competent to judge of our proceedings, and of the safety of the country. Indeed, (said Mr. C.) it appears very evident to me that we are not in want of a larger number in the House of Representatives to debate any question, if it be considered how much has already been said on the subject now before us.

Mr. VINE expressed much surprise that the subject, which to him appeared perfectly definable, should have occasioned the debate to travel so widely from the line marked out by the Constitution. The pendulum seems to vibrate between the numbers 81, 96, and 113; and should that pendulum rest on any one of them in preference to the others, he could not suppose that it would affect the Liberties of America. Why, therefore, all this extraneous argument about a point of so easy decision? We are sent here to administer the Government, the first principles of which are already fixed, so that neither branch can encroach on the other. The Senate, the House of Representatives, the President, have each defined powers; and whilst those remain, I shall always believe the Liberties of America are invulnerable.

Under this impression, Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for striking out 30,000, in order to accommodate the question to a medium. But I shall do this on different principles from some other gentlemen; notwithstanding, I at the same time confess that the ratification of the first amendment to the Constitution ought to govern us in deciding this question. The spirit of the amendment appears to me clearly to imply that we should not suffer the number of Representatives to exceed one for 30,000. I am here, not as a person who shall exercise discretionary opinions, but judge by the letter of the Constitution. And in this case we may increase the number, but we cannot make it less after the enumeration. In the mean time, until that enumeration is complete, the representation remains as it has been hitherto, which I believe may be about one member to every 40,000 or 41,000.

If we go upon theory only, I would enlarge the representation to its greatest extent, and hand down the principle to futurity, in letters of gold, that a very great representation—that Democracy is the very best Government that can possibly be devised, provided it were practicable to give it stability. Next to a Government as free as it could extend, we have the freest in the world—a Government of representation, which will increase with the population of the country, and the ten new States will always preserve an equilibrium;

but if you increase it to an extreme, you may render it tumultuous, although it may be safe.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said of the necessity of planting strong guards against the invasions of influential character. Sir, I fear no corruption; neither can I see the ground on which it can make an entry into these walls. In the British Parliament I will admit that corruption has planted her standard; but that is the natural consequence of a very large representation, and a constitution widely different from ours; and yet, in that body, how many patriots have we not known to hold forth the language of freedom, as loud and warm as in any part of the earth! But to what end would corruption be attempted in this Government, which is in itself perfectly rotatory? The President is elective every four years, the Senate, by interlocations, from two to six years, and the House of Representatives every two years. Then, surely, sir, there is no need of guards to prevent the encroachments of corruption, and the argument is not in the least applicable to the present system of our affairs. The difference between the State Legislatures and the National one affords another security to the citizen. They have the power of life and death, of making laws, &c., and Congress have a concurrent legislation in such affairs as are proper. Election forms another barrier in favor of the Liberties of the People; for, whilst elections are kept pure and free, there is double security.

Calculations have been exhibited by several gentlemen, and I have likewise made one, although not so old or experienced in calculations as some. But I find that all those who vibrate between the ratios of 30,000 and 40,000; and it is contended that the people will be better represented by adopting the small ratio, which produces the largest representation. But, sir, how many of the people are there who are not represented? Is the slave? The infant requires nothing more than nourishment from nature. By misapplying calculations, you may narrow down the Government so much as to endanger its dissolution; but if kept in a due medium, you insure safety. The present is a larger representation than either France or England boasts. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to support the State Governments, but I also wish to support the Federal Government.

I cannot, however, see the propriety of comparing this to the Government of Great Britain, although that is called a Government of Representation, consisting of two Houses of Parliament, one of which is elective, the Lords are hereditary, and the King can do no wrong; and it has hitherto been, I believe, the next best Government, after our own, in the world. And yet we know with how much reluctance Ireland obtained a participation of the trade and commerce of Great Britain; although a Flood bellowed forth with the voice of liberty like a Demosthenes, still nothing could induce the British Ministry to give way, until the volunteers effected it. And have we not the volunteers, sir, in this country to protect our rights? Yes, sir, the American volunteers are perfectly competent to this service.

the population increases, we ought to increase the representation in that ratio; and at present I think the number 34,000 will meet the sense of America.

Mr. HILLHOUSE said he had ever been a friend to a Republican form of Government, and God forbid, that he should ever give his vote for any measure that should endanger the Liberties of his Country. He was in favor of an energetic Government, as that alone can secure the blessings of Liberty. As to the dread of corruption in this House, which some gentlemen appeared to entertain, he thought there was no foundation for such an apprehension; at least as the idea refers to one or two hundred Representatives—two hundred he contended, were as easily corrupted as one. But the corruption contemplated was a mere matter of opinion; no facts, he presumed, existed in this country to justify a positive assertion; and as to foreign countries, it seems to be conceded that a larger number than any that has been mentioned is susceptible of undue influence. He then adverted to the restrictions on the President of the United States, and the Senate, in respect to the means of corrupting the Legislature. The Constitution has also made provision to secure the independence of the members, &c. He then urged some difficulties which would be occasioned by a small ratio. He observed that the population of some of the States is nearly stationary: if a small ratio is now established, the consequence will be when it is augmented, that the representation of those States must be diminished. This would be a measure that would be greatly disliked. With respect to the proposed amendment, he thought it was entirely out of the question, till it was ratified by three-fourths of the States. A very numerous representation would tend to weaken, if not destroy the State Governments, and, in the issue, would destroy the General Government. For, said he, they mutually depend on each other for support.

Mr. SENECA rose for inquiry, Whether if the word thirty should be struck out, it can be restored? for, though he wished for an increase of the ratio, yet he thought it ought to stop short of forty thousand. He was in favor of making the proposed amendment to the Constitution the rule to guide the House. He had no idea that the Liberties of this country depended on the difference in the representation between one hundred and one hundred and thirteen members. With more than eighteen hundred watchmen, in the State Legislatures, he conceived that the Liberties of this country were perfectly safe—and he never could believe that the people of the United States would ever be slaves. He was sure they never would, so long as they were just to themselves and deserve to be free.

Mr. HEISTER was in favor of retaining the ratio of one to thirty thousand. He stated sundry particulars respecting the very distant local situations of the Representatives of the United States, which rendered it almost impossible for the present number to do complete justice to their respective districts.

Mr. KITCHELL was in favor of a numerous representation. He thought the amendment proposed to the Constitution ought to be the guide to the House on this occasion. He did not draw his ideas from what should constitute a proper representation, nor was he actuated by an apprehension of corruption, as more applicable to a small number than to a large one; but when he considered the various objects, views, denominations, professions, callings and interests of the citizens of the United States, he was fully convinced that a large representation was necessary to embrace the wishes and answer the expectations of the people. He should, therefore, vote against the motion for striking out thirty thousand.

Mr. FINLEY rose to explain certain expressions which he said had been misunderstood. He defended the opinion he had before advanced respecting a large representation. In reply to Mr. CLARK, he observed, that the information to which he alluded when he said that a larger number would enable the Representatives to adapt the laws and proceedings of Government to the circumstances of the country, was that species of knowledge which arises from a more perfect representation of the wants, wishes, and interests of the people.

Mr. GERRY took a general survey of the arguments against the proposed ratio of one to thirty thousand. In noticing the objection from the instability of the State Legislatures, he said it was not owing to their numbers, but to the mode in which they are elected. Were the Senates and Executives of the several States chosen as those of the General Government, there would have been as much stability and consistency in their transactions, as in those of the Government of the Union. A gentleman had said that the proposed amendments to the Constitution had been adopted with reluctance by some of the States which had accepted them. He called on the gentleman to produce his authorities for this assertion. A relative proportion between the members of the House and the Senate had been suggested; this idea had no foundation in the Constitution. And he further observed, that the Constitution has so completely guarded and secured the rights and independence of the Senate, that he could not conceive of the apprehensions of gentlemen, who appear to think that an increase of the members of this House will overwhelm that branch of the Legislature. In all events, the privileges of that body will remain the same. The States, it is said, have reduced their Representative Assemblies. This, so far from being an argument against the proposed ratio, was directly in favor of it. The diminution of the State Legislatures has been occasioned by the idea which the people entertain of the increasing importance of the General Government. The objects of legislation to both Governments are nearly similar; they relate to those important concerns which interest the feelings of every citizen of the United States; all the difference lies in the magnitude of their respective spheres of action. Hence, it must evidently be the wish and expectation of the people, that their interests in every point of view, should be fully and adequately represented in this House. The gentleman from North Carolina has said:

That extending the sphere of representation will lead to a choice of more competent characters; but he observed, that the larger the sphere, the less knowledge of the merits of candidates; and the electors will be obliged to vote on trust. The mode of election in Great Britain, and not the number of the members of the House of Commons, is the source of that corruption which has been so frequently alluded to. The mode of election in that country admits of an Executive influence in the election of a majority of the members. This is the rotten part of their Constitution which requires amputation. He did not apprehend any danger from undue attempts to influence or corrupt the members of the House; but, though he admitted that the Government may be untainted at the present time, yet he conceived it the best policy to prevent the evil, rather than to wait for a corrupt administration and then to seek for a remedy. The idea which had been suggested, that increasing the Federal representation would tend to diminish the importance of the State Governments in the estimation of the people, he conceived had no foundation. It supposed a want of wisdom in the community at large, which supposition had nothing to support it. The people know that their happiness depends on preserving the balance between the State Governments and that of the Union. The Government of the Union has been justly compared to a pyramid. He wished that the base, which was constituted by the Representative body, might be broad, in order to give it stability; and therefore hoped that the original motion of one Representative to every thirty thousand persons would be adopted.

The resolution being again read, in the following words:

Resolved, That the number of Representatives shall, until the next enumeration, be one for thirty thousand. The question was taken thereupon and agreed to by the House.—Yeas 35, Nays 23, as follows:

YEA.—Abraham Baldwin, Ebert Benson, John Brown, William Findley, Thomas Fitzsimons, Elbridge Gerry, William B. Giles, James Gordon, Andrew Gregg, Samuel Griffin, Daniel Heister, Daniel Huger, Israel Jacobs, Aaron Kitchell, John W. Kittera, John Laurence, Amasa Learned, Richard Bland Lee, James Madison, Andrew Moore, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, William Vans Murray, John Page, Josiah Parker, Joshua Seney, Upton Sheridene, Thomas Sumpter, Peter Sylvester, Thomas Tredwell, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Abraham Venable, Jeremiah Wadsworth, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, and Francis Willis.

NAY.—Fisher Ames, John Baptist Ashe, Robert Barnwell, Elias Boudinot, Shearjashub Bourne, Benjamin Bourne, Abraham Clark, Nicholas Gilman, Benjamin Goodhue, William Barry Grave, James Hillhouse, Samuel Livermore, Nathaniel Macon, Nathaniel Niles, Theodore Sedgwick, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, William Smith, John Steele, Jonathan Sturges, George Thatcher, John Vining, and Artemas Ward.

Ordered, That a bill or bills be brought in pursuant to the said resolution; and that Mr. PAGES

Mr. MURRAY, and Mr. MACON do prepare and bring in the same.

WEDNESDAY, November 16.

Mr. GOODRUE presented a petition from the merchants and distillers of the town of Salem, in Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the duty imposed on spirits of domestic manufacture, and an increase in that on foreign spirits, with sundry other modifications of the law. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BROWN presented a petition from sundry inhabitants of the district of Kentucky, praying to be relieved from the operation of the excise law, until they shall have obtained the free navigation of the Mississippi. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, so far as it respects a temporary suspension of the excise law.

PUBLIC CREDITORS.

Mr. FITZSIMONS called up the petition of a committee of the public creditors who loaned money to the United States, between September, 1777, and March, 1778, and moved that it should be referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, for his opinion on the prayer of the petition.

Mr. SEDGWICK observed, that the subject of this petition had undergone a decision during the last session, when a petition of a similar nature was presented. Speculation had already taken a sufficiently ample range through the United States; and he hoped no new paths would be opened for its future walks. He would move that the prayer of the petition should not be granted.

Mr. FITZSIMONS said, that the nature of the petition seemed to be misunderstood. He was as little disposed as any gentleman on the floor to innovate in the funding system. He would not undertake to pronounce that the petitioners were entitled to any relief, but he thought the Secretary of the Treasury did not consider this case as provided for under the funding law; in which case, he thought that the wisdom and justice of the House were interested in taking the same into consideration.

Mr. GERRY, after giving the history of the emission of the bills of credit in question, urged the propriety of doing equal justice to every class of the public creditors, and declared in favor of the reference to the Secretary of the Treasury, who would state facts, upon which the House could determine whether or no the prayer of the petition could be granted.

Mr. SEDGWICK thought a sufficient provision had been made; that it was not the interest of the people to proceed any farther; this would only raise passions that were now subsided, but had heretofore been productive of considerable mischief to the country; it would show the people that the House entertained doubts respecting the sufficiency of the provision; speculators would employ all their arts to draw the certificates out of the hands of the present holders; and he left it to gentlemen to determine whether such a scene of speculation would prove advantageous to the country. Besides, he would ask, whether the required provision could be made without altering the system already established?

Mr. GERRY observed, that the objection, drawn from speculation, would prove an argument equally valid against funding, and even against the coinage of money, since gamblers would apply the coin to the purposes of gaming. It had been said that many of the certificates in question had been loaned; but he would ask, whether, because a number of persons, not knowing their rights, had yielded them up, an argument could thence be drawn why others, who understood their rights, should not maintain them, or why the former should not be redressed? Ought the Government to take advantage of the ignorance of the public creditors? He hoped not. The former memorial, to which the gentleman [Mr. SEDGWICK] alluded, was very different from the present one, and contained many matters which would have required a total alteration of the funding system.

Mr. LAURANCE saw no necessity for a reference: a knowledge of facts could be obtained from the journals of Congress. As to applying to the Secretary for his opinion, this would only prove a source of embarrassment; better to take it up in Committee of the Whole, or in the House, without a knowledge of his opinion. When the scale of depreciation was applied to the public debt, it was unequally applied, some receiving interest on the nominal, others on the specie value. In the funding bill, it was contemplated that the former class should be allowed such interest up to the close of the last year; and the only question now is, whether any alteration shall be made in the funding bill—whether one class of public creditors shall have a different measure of justice dealt out to them from what others have had? He concluded with a wish that the subject should be taken up in Committee of the Whole.

The question on the reference to the Secretary of the Treasury was then taken, and lost: whereupon,

Mr. LAURANCE moved that the petition should be referred to a Committee of the whole House.

Mr. BOURNOR was of opinion that the funding system had done ample justice, and that those who complained with it have no reasonable ground of complaint. At the time of the passing the law, it had been said that men would be forced by it to come in and subscribe whether they would or not; a clause was therefore inserted in favor of non-subscribing public creditors, by virtue of which the petitioners who are of the non-subscribing class consider themselves in the same situation as before the law was enacted; but an improper construction has been given to that clause, and therefore it is that the creditors complain. Were any one of them to bring an action against the public officers, he would, in his opinion, obtain redress. They applied to the House for redress, and the question was, whether they should be forced to subscribe, or be entitled to the benefit of their contract? He did not wish that any man should be forced to comply with the terms of the funding system against his will; he would have every man at liberty to accept or reject them at his pleasure; and he thought it unreasonable that any man should have his six per cent. reduced to four, without his own consent.

Mr. FITZSIMONS thought further information on the subject necessary, and therefore it was that he favored the reference. One circumstance was unattended to by the gentlemen who had spoken on the subject; and that was, that the non-subscribing creditors must deliver up the original certificates before they can receive their interest; but this they do not choose to do, because these certificates bear a promise of interest on the original value, and they would afterwards receive interest only on the reduced value.

The question was then taken on the commitment to a Committee of the Whole, and lost.

Mr. SEDGWICK moved a resolution that the prayer of the petition cannot be granted.

The question being called for, Mr. BARNWELL observed, that he, and probably some others of the new members, were not thoroughly acquainted with the subject; and therefore he wished the question might be postponed. The resolution was, in consequence, ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LAURANCE then called up a petition of sundry inhabitants of the State of New York, holders of certain bills of credit issued in 1780. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, to consider and report his opinion thereon.

Mr. BALDWIN called up the petition of General Jackson, relative to the Georgia election; which, after some debate, was referred to the committee heretofore appointed to report a regular and uniform mode of proceeding in cases of contested elections.

THURSDAY, November 17.

Two other members, to wit: from New York, CORNELIUS C. SCHOONMAKER, and from Pennsylvania, THOMAS HARTLEY, appeared, produced their credentials, and took their seats in the House.

CERTIFICATES OF PUBLIC DEBT.

The House, in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill for the renewal of lost or destroyed certificates—Mr. MURLENSBERG in the chair.

Mr. SEDGWICK moved to strike out the words "lost or," as he thought that the public ought to be secured in cases of lost certificates; and that if any security could be provided, it must be in some mode that was not pointed out in the bill.

Mr. LAURANCE thought the provisions made in the bill were sufficient; that, if an accurate description of the lost certificate was published, and it was in the power of the public officer to discover whether such certificate had been issued, and that sufficient security was given to refund the money to the United States in case the lost paper should again appear, he did not see what inconvenience could result to the public.

Mr. SEDGWICK suggested many difficulties that must arise from the want of checks, from the loaning of certificates, and other circumstances, that would render it impossible to detect frauds. He would wish that those who have unfortunately

H. or R.]

Certificates of Public Debt.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

lost their certificates should be indemnified, if this could be done with safety; but, since it appeared impracticable, he thought it better that individuals should suffer than to make a provision for them that must be productive of so much inconvenience to the public.

Mr. J. SMITH allowed that some relief might be afforded in cases of destroyed certificates, and that the United States ought not to avail themselves of their destruction. But since the United States are not to pay the same certificates twice, and the person who receives payment for a lost one must give security, in case of its re-appearance he will be obliged to refund, and thus will gain nothing but trouble by the renewal. On the whole, he thought it best that the bill should extend no further than to certificates that had been destroyed, and therefore was in favor of striking out.

Mr. WADSWORTH also thought it impracticable to guard against frauds, and was in favor of striking out; otherwise, he would be willing to grant relief to the losers of certificates.

Mr. HILLHOUSE observed, that in private contracts a Court of Chancery never obliges to the renewal of an obligation, except when it is proved to have been destroyed; though there is less danger of fraud in transactions between individuals than in the more extensive ones of the United States, he saw no reason why the United States should take so much trouble as must necessarily attend the business of renewal. It would only be holding out an encouragement to negligence in the holders of certificates.

Mr. LAURANCE observed, that descriptions of these certificates, for which a provision was now contemplated, being lodged in the Treasury, sufficient information can there be obtained to guard against imposition; that a Court of Chancery will order the renewal of a bond, even when its destruction cannot be positively proved; and that since the United States would suffer no loss or inconvenience, he wished to afford relief to unfortunate individuals.

Mr. SEDGWICK observed, that it would be very difficult for a public officer to ascertain the truth respecting a certificate that might have been issued in Georgia, paid into the sub-Treasury, thence re-issued, and transferred, perhaps, from one extremity of the United States to the other; besides, when a number of certificates have been loaned, and one new certificate given for the aggregate sum, how can the officer determine whether a certificate, said to be lost, may not have been one of the number?

Mr. HILLHOUSE did not think one instance could be produced of relief, given by Chancery in cases of lost securities, except where the debtor had surreptitiously got possession of the papers.

Mr. LEE was against striking out; and, as additional security to the United States, wished that such as might be found guilty of frauds respecting lost certificates, should be subject to a penalty.

Mr. GILES, though not at all satisfied with the principle of the bill, wished to have it as unexceptionable as possible, in case it should pass; wherefore, from the impracticability of at once giving relief to the unfortunate losers of certificates, and at the same time securing the United States, he was in favor of striking out.

Mr. BARRELL thought the security provided in the bill by no means sufficient; would have the original certificate of no avail in case of renewal, and wished the renewal not to take place for two or three years.

The question was then taken on the motion for striking out, and passed in the affirmative.

Two other amendments were proposed and carried, extending the time for the renewal and issuing of the certificates; after which, the committee rose, and reported the bill with amendments. The House proceeding to take the same into consideration, some opposition was made to the one that excluded the lost certificates; and, before the question could be taken on it, the House adjourned.

FRIDAY, November 18.

Mr. PAGE, from the committee appointed, presented "a bill Apportioning the Representation of the people of the United States according to the first Enumeration;" which was received, read twice, and committed.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter from the Treasurer of the United States, covering his account of indents of interest received and issued from the first of July to the thirtieth of September, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, inclusive; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LIVERMORE, from the standing Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the Letter from the Executive of the State of Maryland, containing the resignation of WILLIAM PINKNEY, a member returned to serve in this House for the said State, and also a certificate of the election of JOHN FRANCIS MERCER, in the room of the said WILLIAM PINKNEY, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

A memorial of the commissioned officers serving in the army of the United States, was presented to the House and read, stating the inadequacy of their pay, subsistence, and forage, under the present establishment, and praying that the same may be augmented. Referred to Mr. LAURANCE, Mr. WILLIAMSON, and Mr. KIRCHELL, with instruction to examine the same, and report their opinion thereupon to the House.

Mr. AMES, from the committee to whom was referred the petition of James Jackson, complaining of an undue election and return of ANTHONY WAYNE, a member returned to serve in this House for the State of Georgia, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

CERTIFICATES OF PUBLIC DEBT.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the amendments proposed by the committee, to the bill for the renewal of lost or destroyed certificates.

On the first amendment for striking out the words, "or lost,"

Mr. LEE expressed a wish to provide for the

NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Certificates of Public Debt.

[H. or R.]

renewal of lost certificates; but he would qualify that provision, by particularly designating what kind of lost certificates he meant, viz: such only as from strong presumptive evidence appear to have been destroyed. In any other case, where a man sees that he cannot expect a renewal, he will give himself no useless trouble on the occasion; and when the law is explicit, he will have no occasion to consult a lawyer. The House, he observed, ought not to make laws to be construed by lawyers, but to be understood by the people. He proposed to amend the amendment, by retaining the word "lost" and striking out "or destroyed," adding at the end of the clause a proviso, that the claimant, before he should be entitled to a renewal, should furnish strong presumptive evidence of the destruction of his certificates.

Mr. SEDGWICK declared himself at a loss to understand the object of the proposed amendment. If the House undertook, in this instance, to define what species of evidence should establish the fact, he saw no reason why they might not do it in every other instance. This was never attempted by any Legislature; and the attempt, if made, would tend to embarrass all kind of investigation, and involve the legal code in obscurity.

Mr. LEE was equally desirous with the gentleman last up to have the laws intelligible to every individual. He had no idea of entering into a detail of the evidence. He meant no more, than that strong presumptive evidence should be admitted as a proof of the destruction of any certificate.

Mr. CLARK apprehended, from the turn which the debate had taken, that the grand object of attention would be lost in the word "lost." There was but a single instance to be found in any nation, of such a provision as was now contemplated; it is not, nor ever was made by any bank; when Congress heretofore made such a provision, it was at a period when war raged through the country, and it was a piece of necessary policy to keep the people in good humor, by renewing their certificates, which had been destroyed by the enemy in burning their houses; but as no such reason exists in the present day, he hoped, if the bill should pass, the report of the committee would be adopted, as the lesser of two evils; for, as to his part, he did not wish to see any provision made at all.

Mr. KIRCHELL wished to retain the word, "destroyed," in preference to "lost," in case the bill should pass. He thought, however, that the House would act wisely in avoiding to establish any general rule for such cases, and keeping them individually under their own immediate inspection.

The question being taken on the first amendment of the committee, and carried; and the other amendments being severally considered and agreed to—

Mr. GERRY objected to the passing of the bill in its present, or in any other form. He did not wish to take advantage of the misfortunes of those who had lost their evidences of the public debt. He wished to give every individual an opportunity of recovering his right, so far as that could be granted consistently with the interest and security of the nation at large. The mode pointed out in the bill, he considered as liable to many objections. To ascertain facts, it would be necessary that the claimants should have an opportunity of recurring to the records; thus, whoever might be disposed to embark in a fraudulent speculation would be enabled to ascertain what certificates were lost, and to concert plans for their recovery; he may apply to any District Judge, or Court of Record, and there make declaration that he has lost those certificates; in consequence of which, a warrant will be issued for their amount; it will never be in the power of the Commissioners of Loans, or of the Judges of Record, dispersed through every part of the Union, to detect such frauds during the late war. Many public officers had, together with their baggage, lost numbers of certificates, the amount of which was afterwards allowed to them; and it would now be impossible, from an examination of the files, to identify those certificates. Many persons, also, who were opposed to the Revolution, wantonly destroyed the public securities. The amount of the certificates lost and destroyed had never been ascertained; and it was impossible to foresee the extent of the bill. It would, in fact, amount to a premium for perjury and fraud.

Mr. G. further objected to the bill, as holding forth a strong temptation to the public officers to enrich themselves by fraudulent means, on the strength of the non-existing certificates. He entertained as high an opinion of the integrity of the public officers employed under the Federal Government as any gentleman on the floor; but was, nevertheless, averse to placing their interest and their duty in opposition to each other. Moreover, he could not see what good purposes would be answered by the bill. If it was intended to prevent individual applications to Congress, it would not produce that effect; it does not provide for all cases; and those that remain unprovided for must still come before the House. If saving time was the object, the time consumed in such business would not protract the session a single day. The amount of the lost certificates cannot be ascertained; it may possibly be very considerable; and the Treasury may be drained of large sums, without any advantage accruing to the rightful owners of such securities. If the applications were directly made to Congress, some gentlemen on the floor would no doubt be acquainted with the characters of the applicants; and the public will be much better pleased to see the fate of such petitions decided by both Houses of Congress than by a District Judge.

The act of the old Congress, he observed, extended no further than to loan-office certificates; and when Congress made such a provision, it was at a period when they found it necessary to exonerate themselves from such matters, that they might be more at liberty to attend to business of greater importance. Their example, he hoped, would not now be followed, as there does not now exist the same plea for the adoption of such a measure. He hoped the House would proceed in the usual train of receiving the individual petitions, and severally deciding upon them as heretofore,

H. OF R.]

Apportionment Bill.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

rather than subject the citizens of the United States to a tax, of which it was impossible to foresee the amount. To such a risk he would prefer a grant of a million of dollars to be divided among the applicants.

Mr. WADSWORTH opposed the bill, as inadequate to either of the purposes which it was intended to answer, viz: that of doing justice to the public, or of easing Congress from repeated applications. A gentleman, in the course of the discussion, had compared the bill to a child; for his part, he thought it a very rickety child, and hoped the bantling would not be adopted.

Mr. SEDGWICK said, that he had entertained doubts, whether certificates destroyed in any way, ought to be renewed; but if a renewal was thought expedient, he looked on the mode proposed in the bill as preferable to any substitute that had been offered in lieu of it. The gentleman last up had said that it would not prevent applications to the House. If further extended, it would have that effect; and he would very willingly concur with gentlemen, if they wished to extend it; but he doubted much whether they could do it effectually. If the remedy contemplated in the bill was to be applied only in cases where the certificates had been destroyed, he thought that ample provision was made for every possible case of that kind. Should the bill, therefore, pass into a law, applications to the House ought no longer to be admitted, except in cases of a very singular nature. As to the greater degree of caution that was expected from the Representatives of the people, than from the officers, he would observe, that the members of that House were men of like passions with the rest of mankind; that their responsibility is more diffusive, and they would not perhaps feel themselves, as a body, sufficiently interested in these smaller matters, when their attention is engaged by objects of greater national importance; whilst, on the other hand, individual members, feeling themselves interested within the sphere of those who come in contact with themselves, a kind of phalanx is formed in favor of the applicant.

As to the loss of time, which was alleged to be trifling, he observed, that only two petitions of this kind had as yet been presented to the House, and each had consumed a day; as to a fraudulent application of evidence to lost certificates, this could be equally practised in petitions to Congress, since the evidence is not to be brought before the House, but must be taken at home. As to the temptation which was said to be held out to the Commissioners, he would observe, that if the House could not confide in an officer to transact their business, they must become so suspicious as totally to impede the transaction of all business. On the whole, he thought that as good checks were provided as the nature of the case would admit of; and that if something like the principle of the bill were not adopted, lost certificates ought not to be renewed at all.

Some further remarks were made by Messrs. DAYTON, GERRY, WADSWORTH, WILLIAMSON, SENEY, and LEE; after which, the engrossment of the question was taken on the engrossment of the bill, and lost. So the bill was rejected.

MONDAY, November 21.

A petition of Jason Wate was presented to the House and read, praying the commutation of half pay as a Major in the army of the United States during the late war. Referred to the Secretary of War, with instruction to examine the same, and report his opinion thereupon to the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the committee appointed, presented, according to order, a bill more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing an uniform militia throughout the United States; which was received, read twice, and committed.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the committee to whom was referred the petition of James Jackson, complaining of an undue election and return of ANTHONY WAYNE, one of the members returned to serve in this House for the State of Georgia: whereupon,

Ordered, That the said report be committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the standing Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the Letter from the Executive of the State of Maryland, containing the resignation of WILLIAM PINKNEY, a member returned to serve in this House for the said State; and also a certificate of the election of JOHN FRANCIS MERCE in the room of the said WILLIAM PINKNEY. Whereupon,

Ordered, That the said report be committed to a Committee of the Whole House.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill apportioning the representation of the People of the United States, according to the first enumeration.

Mr. MACON moved that the first section be amended, by inserting the word "free" after the word "thousand."

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

Mr. BOURNE (R. I.) observed that the gentleman did not advert to the amendment to the Constitution, which proposes that the number of Representatives shall amount to one hundred. This amendment will most probably be accepted, and then we shall have to repeal the proposed law, should it be enacted. He was in favor of thirty-four thousand, because that would be conformable to the amendment—and he saw no good reason why the representation should exceed one hundred. That number will be fully competent to express the wills, wishes, and ideas of the people, and he saw no necessity to burden their constituents with the additional expense of thirteen additional members.

Mr. MACON said he did not conceive that the amendment referred to was to be a guide to the House till it was fully ratified; and, as it was uncertain whether it ever would be, we ought not to be swayed by it on this occasion.

Mr. SEDGWICK expressed himself in favor of thirty-four thousand, as it was the opinion of the people from that part of the country which he represented, that the number of Representatives in this House should not exceed one hundred.

NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Apportionment Bill.

[H. OF R.]

Mr. LAURANCE said, that the question had been so fully debated, that he did not think the opinion of a single member would be changed by all that can be said. He wished therefore that every proposed amendment should be put, and the question taken on each with as little debate as possible.

Mr. WHITE advocated the clause. He was in favor of one Representative to thirty thousand persons. The question now is, whether the people shall have that share of influence in the Government, which plainly contemplates one Representative for every thirty thousand persons. He wished to preserve the independency of the several parts of the Government. Corruption has been mentioned. He wished it might never take place; but the present, he conceived, was the time to guard against it. He would not say that any undue measures had ever yet been taken to influence the House; but that it was the wish of some to innovate, was apparent, from some attempts which had been made to increase the importance of the Executive—from the predilection for titles and distinctions which the journals of the Senate would show still existed. He hoped that the proposed ratio would be established, as more consonant to the spirit of the Constitution than any which had been mentioned. The independency of the Senate cannot be affected by the number of this House—they will always have a negative on our acts.

Mr. DAYTON said, that he should be in favor of the amendment, not because it was a number the most agreeable to him, for he confessed that even this would have produced a more numerous representation than he could have wished; but because a greater number would be less likely to meet the approbation of the committee. He agreed with the member from Virginia, (Mr. WHITE,) in one of his declarations only, which was, that this question was of greater moment than the gentleman who advocated thirty thousand (the largest representation) seems to have conceived. He agreed with the gentleman from New York, (Mr. LAURANCE,) that this subject had undergone a pretty full discussion; but he at the same time believed that some new light might still be thrown upon it. There was one point of view, Mr. D. observed, in which it had not yet been exhibited by any gentleman in the course of debate, but in which, on account of its magnitude and importance, it ought to be critically examined. The Senate were considered as the Representatives of the States, or of the State Governments. The House of Representatives were supposed to contain, under certain qualifications, a pure representation of the People. Such was the apportionment of its members with respect to the unequal districts or States into which this country is divided, as to give the three great States a very predominant influence upon that floor. They had only to combine their strength, and to associate almost any one of the other eleven States with them, in order to insure success to any favorite project that they might have in view. He was aware, that it would be answered by gentlemen, that such combination was not likely to take place between States so dis-

H. OF R.]

Apportionment Bill.

[NOVEMBER, 1791.]

increase of one branch, at the expense of the independence of the other, and thereby destroyed that equilibrium of the Government, upon the preservation of which, the fairest hopes of its well-wishers were founded.

Mr. GERRY contended that the Constitution was misconstrued by the gentleman from North Carolina; and in reply to the gentleman from New Jersey, he said he was surprised to hear the remarks which he made, when he recollected his being a member of the Convention—in which, it must be remembered by that gentleman, the larger States consented to placing the small States on a par with them in the Senate, to obviate the difficulty which the smaller States objected against the larger representations from the larger States. He said the independence of the Senate is secured by the Constitution—and he was not apprehensive that the increase proposed would overwhelm that branch of the Government, or lessen their importance, or shake their firmness. The gentleman had talked of combinations in the larger States; but he presumed no facts could be produced to support such an apprehension. The proposed increase in the representation is founded on the principles of justice and equity: it is strictly agreeable to the spirit and design of the Constitution, which contemplates an increase in some degree proportionate to the increased population of the States. He hoped, therefore, that the Constitution would be fairly and honorably carried into effect.

Mr. BOUNDNOT was not yet convinced, from all the arguments he had heard, that by increasing the number of Representatives to one hundred and thirteen, as proposed by the bill, the wants, wishes, and interests of their constituents, would be more fully embraced, than by adopting the amendment then under consideration. It had not yet been taken into the account, that a certain species of property in three or four of the States [slaves] would be represented in the next Congress, if the bill passed, by at least twelve members, above the proportion of other States, whose property (though of superior value) was not entitled by the Constitution to any representation at all. That he did not mean to find fault with the Constitution in this respect, but to make it the rule of his conduct—although in the construction of it, he would not increase the evil when two extremes were given, and the intermediate number was optional. He had said, and he rested on the Constitution for the proof, that it contemplated one member for each State as the lowest, and the ratio of one for thirty thousand persons as the highest number. That the Convention in settling the present House of Representatives, without a precise knowledge of the amount of the citizens of the Union, had done it in a certain proportion to the number of Senators, which he had thought a good rule to go by, till the proposed amendment to the Constitution was ratified by three-fourths of the States; but as gentlemen seemed to think that this would soon take place, he had consented to agree to the ratio of thirty-four thousand, which would give one hundred members. This would accord with the spirit of the amendment to the Constitution, and prevent the necessity of passing any other act when the amendment should be completed. He was therefore in favor of inserting four after "thirty," or any ratio that would confine the number of Representatives to one hundred, or under.

Mr. LAURANCE remarked, in answer to Mr. DAYTON's objections, that the States were disproportionately respecting territory, and consequently were so as to the number of the people. That an equality would take place amongst the people of the several States by the ratio proposed, although more members would come from some States than from others. He mentioned that every member of the House of Representatives stood in relation to the people of America, and ought to consult the interest of the whole, and not the particular interest of the State in which he was elected. Should this general principle operate, and which he supposed ought to actuate each member, no danger was to be apprehended from a combination, as the general good was the object of consideration. If this should not be the prevailing principle, it might be the interest of the States to have as great a number of Representatives as could be obtained; yet he supposed, unless a division of territory took place, the people in each State would be entitled to be represented in proportion to the numbers in each, and the danger that it was supposed would exist, could not be readily remedied. He also observed, that he imagined the Senate would not be subject to the influence suggested. The Senate was an independent part of the Legislature, and would decide all questions that came before them, as the judgments of the members will dictate. So long as a reciprocal negative existed, as to the acts of either branch of the Legislature, he hoped we should find firmness in each to decide properly. The Senate had frequently rejected the bills of the House, and had amended others—some very important ones—and the influence of the members of the House of Representatives did not operate on their decisions. The objection to the proposition not being agreeable to the amendment proposed to the Constitution, was unfounded. He explained his ideas respecting the nature of the amendment, and concluded that the proportion was conformable to it; and observed, that the nature of the amendment was contemplated, when the proposition respecting the ratio was made.

The committee now rose, reported progress, and had leave to sit again.

TUESDAY, November 22.

A memorial of the committee of the counties of Washington, Westmoreland, Fayette, and Alleghany, in the State of Pennsylvania, was presented to the House and read, stating their objections to an act, passed at the last session, imposing a duty on spirits distilled within the United States, and praying that the same may be repealed. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for his information.

Mr. LAURANCE, from the committee appointed, presented, according to order, a bill making appro-

NOVEMBER, 1791.]

Representative from Maryland.

[H. OF R.]

provisions for the support of Government for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two; which was read twice, and committed.

A remonstrance of the people called Quakers, in the State of North Carolina, was presented to the House and read, stating their objections to certain provisions of a bill now depending, entitled "A bill more effectually to provide for the national defence by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States."

Ordered, That the said remonstrance be referred to the Committee of the Whole House, on the bill more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter from the Secretary of State, accompanying his report on the petition of Jacob Isaacs; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

REPRESENTATIVE FROM MARYLAND.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the report of the standing Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the Letter from the Executive of the State of Maryland, containing the resignation of WILLIAM PINKNEY, a member returned to serve in this House for the said State; and also a certificate of the election of JOHN FRANCIS MERCER, in the room of the said WILLIAM PINKNEY.

The law of the State of Maryland regulating elections being called for, was produced and read; by which it appeared, that the Governor and Council of that State were authorized to fill up vacancies in the representation of that State in Congress.

Some objections having been offered against accepting the report,

Mr. SENEY observed, that the case appeared to him to be so plain that he was surprised to find gentlemen objecting to an acceptance of the report of the committee. He then stated the whole process of the business, in the resignation of Mr. PINKNEY and the election of Mr. MERCER, in which the law of the State had been strictly adhered to. He concluded by saying, that two cases in point had already occurred in the State of Connecticut, and no difficulty respecting them had taken place in the House.

Mr. GILES said, that he was a member of the select committee which had made the report; and, from an accurate attention to all the circumstances of the case, he was led to think the report a very improper one. From recurring to the Constitution, he was of opinion that a resignation did not constitute a vacancy. The Constitution speaks only of vacancies in general, and does not contemplate one as resulting from a resignation. Adverting to the British House of Commons, he observed that in that body there could be no resignation. This is an established principle. The people having once chosen their representatives, their power ceases, and consequently the body to which the resignation ought to be made no longer exists. From the experience of the British Government in this respect, he argued against a deviation from this rule. He showed from the Constitution, that the Executives of the States who are empowered to fill vacancies, are not at all authorized to declare the existence of such vacancies; for, if they are to judge in the case, the whole power is invested in them of determining the whole business of vacancies—an idea that materially and essentially affects the privileges of the members of the House. He remarked that, even by the law of Maryland, the requisite steps had not been pursued by the Executive of that State. He concluded by saying that, if the principles he had advanced were just, he hoped the report would not be accepted.

Mr. SMITH (S. C.) had had his doubts on the report; but, on more mature consideration, he was convinced that on account of the inconvenience which would result from rejecting it, and from other considerations, it was proper to adopt it, but not without a full discussion. He then stated some particulars to show that the vacancy which had occurred on this occasion could not properly be called a resignation. Mr. PINKNEY had never taken his seat, nor the requisite oath. He said that there was no analogy between the Parliament of Great Britain and this House; the mode of issuing the writs originally, and of filling up vacancies, is essentially different. No parts of the Constitution prohibits a member from resigning, and for convenience it ought to be concluded that he may resign. The public interest may suffer extremely in cases of sickness or embarrassments, which may prevent a member from attending. This argument from the body's not existing to whom the resignation ought to be made, will apply to the President of the United States, whose resignation is expressly mentioned in the Constitution. The objection urged from the Executives of the States judging of vacancies, he conceived had no great force, for Congress would finally judge in every case of election. It is uncertain how the practice of the British Parliament originated. Blackstone says nothing of resignations. When a member wants to resign in that Legislature, he gets appointed to some fictitious office which disqualifies him from sitting in the House. He thought it best to establish some precedent, rather than oblige members who may wish to resign to have recourse to some familiar method, by accepting of some appointment in the State which is incompatible with a seat.

Mr. MURRAY said he was in favor of accepting the report, both on account of propriety and convenience. Vacancies may happen from various causes—by resignation, by death, or by expulsion—the Executive of the State is the proper judge in the first case. He stated certain differences between a resignation after a person has taken his seat, and a resignation before that event. In the former case, Congress will of course give notice to the Executive of the State; in the latter, the Executive alone can take cognizance of the resignation. He stated the extreme inconvenience which would result from the ideas of the gentleman from Virginia, as it would respect the State of Georgia. He then stated several particulars to show that Mr. PINKNEY was not a member of the House agreeably to the Constitution, and therefore the House cannot proceed with him as one. He said that we ought to be willing to derive information from the experience of every country; but he conceived that no precedents could be drawn that would apply in the present case from a country which had none, to one which had a Constitution that so clearly defined and guarded the rights of the citizens. The custom which had been mentioned as obtaining in that country, arose from a wish to prevent a frequency of elections. From what had been offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, and the ideas he had suggested, he hoped the committee would be induced to accept the report.

Mr. WILLIAMSON said, that it appeared to him that the Constitution contemplates that a member may resign. He read the clause, which says that no member of the Legislature shall accept of an office made during the time for which he was chosen—from hence he inferred that resignations were clearly contemplated.

Mr. GERRY said, that he had heard nothing to show that Mr. PINKNEY had ever accepted of his appointment, and therefore it ought to have been expressed that he had declined; but, granting he had resigned after accepting his appointment, he asserted that nothing had been offered to prove that resignations might not take place in one House as well as in the other; and the Constitution plainly expresses that a Senator may resign. The House of Commons originated with the Kings, who formed that body to control the Lords; and hence arose the prohibition against resignations, as they would weaken the body, and the expense of a new election would fall on the King. With respect to the Executive declaring improper vacancies, he observed that Congress was invested with full power to control the Executives of the States in respect to such declarations.

Mr. SENEY observed, upon a distinction made by Mr. GILES between a resignation on the part of a Senator and a Member of the House, he supposed a resignation in either would equally vacate a seat, and that no difference did really exist.

Mr. SEDGWICK observed that, if a power of adjudication was vested in the Executives of the States to determine on a vacancy in cases of resignation, it would involve this consequence, that a power of judging of vacancies in all possible cases would be the necessary result. He thought the proposition involved the most serious effects with respect to the privileges and independency of this House.

This subject was further discussed the next day, and ended in an acceptance of the report of the committee, which was in favor of Mr. MERCER's election.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill apportioning the Representation of the People of the United States according to the first Enumeration, and after making several amendments thereto, the committee rose and had leave to sit again.

WEDNESDAY, November 23.
A memorial of the people called Quakers, in the State of Virginia, was presented to the House and read, stating their objections to certain provisions of a bill now depending, entitled "A bill more effectually to provide for the national defence by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States."

Ordered, That the said memorial be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the bill more effectually to provide for the national defence, by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments reported yesterday by the Committee of the Whole House to the bill apportioning the Representation of the People of the United States according to the first Enumeration: whereupon, the first amendment being under consideration in the words following, to wit:

"Section first, strike out from the word 'That,' after the enacting clause, to the end of the second section, and insert:

"From and after the third day of March, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-three, and until otherwise provided for by law, agreeably to the Constitution of the United States, the House of Representatives shall be composed of members who shall have been chosen by the people of the several States, in the proportion of one Representative for every thirty thousand persons, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution of the United States; that is to say, from the State of New Hampshire, four; the State of Massachusetts, fifteen; the State of Connecticut, seven; the State of Rhode Island, two; the State of Vermont, two; the State of New York, eleven; the State of New Jersey, five; the State of Pennsylvania, fourteen; the State of Delaware, one; the State of Maryland, nine; the State of Virginia, twenty-one; the State of Kentucky, two; the State of North Carolina, eleven; and the State of Georgia, two members."

A motion was made, and the question being put, to amend the said amendment by inserting between the words "thirty" and "thousand," in the fifth line, the word four,

It passed in the negative—Yeas 21, Nays 38, as follows:

Yeas.—Fisher Ames, John Baptist Ashe, Robert Barnwell, Elias Boudinot, Shearjashub Bourne, Benjamin Bourne, Jonathan Dayton, Nicholas Gilman, Benjamin Goodhue, James Hillhouse, Aaron Kitchell, Samuel Livermore, Nathaniel Niles, Theodore Sedgwick, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, William Smith, John Steele, Jonathan Sturges, George Thatcher, and Artemas Ward.

Nays.—Abraham Baldwin, Egbert Benson, John Brown, William Findley, Elbridge Gerry, William B. Giles, James Gordon, Andrew Gregg, Samuel Griffin, William Barry Grove, Thomas Hartley, Daniel Heister, Daniel Huger, Israel Jacobs, John W. Kittera, John Laurance, Amasa Learned, Richard Bland Lee, Nathaniel Macon, James Madison, Andrew Moore, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, William Vans Murray, John Page, Josiah Parker, Cornelius C. Schoonmaker, Joshua Seney, Upton Sheridine, Thomas Sumpter, Peter Sylvester, Thomas Tredwell, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Abraham Venable, Jeremiah Wadsworth, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willis.

And then the main question being put, to agree to the said amendment as reported, —

It was resolved in the affirmative.

The second amendment, in the words following, to wit:

"Section third, strike out from the word 'That,' at the end of the enacting clause, to the end of the bill, and insert:

"The President of the United States, as soon as the Marshal of the State of South Carolina shall have transmitted to him returns pursuant to the provisions by law for an enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, shall cause the Executive of the said State to be notified of the number of Representatives to be elected within the said State, according to the proportion aforesaid," being read, was, on the question being put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

Ordered, That the said bill, with the amendments, be engrossed, and read the third time tomorrow.

MARYLAND REPRESENTATIVE.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the report of the Standing Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the letter from the Executive of Maryland, containing the resignation of WILLIAM PINKNEY, a member returned to serve in this House for the said State; and also a certificate of the election of JOHN FRANCIS MERCER, in the room of the said William Pinkney; and, after some timespent therein, the Chairman reported that the committee had again had the said report under consideration, and made an amendment thereto; which said report and amendment were twice read and agreed to by the House, as follows:

"It appears that, at an election held for the State of Maryland, on the first day of October, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, William Pinkney was duly elected a Representative for that State, to serve in the House of Representatives of the United States; that the certificate of his election has been duly transmitted by the Executive thereof, and heretofore so reported by your committee; that, by letter, dated the twenty-sixth of September, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one, directed to the Governor and Council of that State, William Pinkney resigned that appointment; and that, in consequence of such resignation, the Executive issued a writ for an election, to supply the vacancy thereby occasioned, and have certified that John Francis Mercer was duly elected, by virtue of that writ, in pursuance of the law of the State of Maryland in that case provided.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee that John Francis Mercer is entitled to take a seat in this House as one of the Representatives for the State of Maryland, in the stead of William Pinkney."

THURSDAY, November 24.

Mr. DAYTON, from the committee appointed, presented a bill to extend the time limited for the settlement of the accounts of the United States with the individual States; which was received, read twice, and committed.

Mr. WHITE, from the committee appointed, presented a bill to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes; which was received, read twice, and committed.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

An engrossed bill, apportioning the Representation of the People of the United States, according to the First Enumeration, was read the third time, and the question being put that the said bill do pass, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 43, nays 12, as follows:

Yeas.—Messrs. Fisher Ames, John Baptist Ashe, Abraham Baldwin, Robert Barnwell, Egbert Benson, Shearjashub Bourne, William Findley, William B. Giles, James Gordon, Andrew Gregg, Samuel Griffin, William Barry Grove, Thomas Hartley, Daniel Heister, James Hillhouse, Daniel Huger, Israel Jacobs, Aaron Kitchell, John W. Kittera, John Laurance, Amasa Learned, Richard Bland Lee, Nathaniel Macon, James Madison, Andrew Moore, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, William Vans Murray, Josiah Parker, Cornelius C. Schoonmaker, Theodore Sedgwick, Joshua Seney, William Smith, Thomas Sumpter, Peter Sylvester, Thomas Tredwell, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Abraham Venable, Jeremiah Wadsworth, Artemas Ward, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willis.

Nays.—Elias Boudinot, Benjamin Bourne, Jonathan Dayton, Nicholas Gilman, Benjamin Goodhue, Samuel Livermore, Nathaniel Niles, Upton Sheridine, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, Jonathan Sturges, and George Thatcher.

GEORGIA CONTESTED ELECTION.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the report of the committee to whom was referred the petition of James Jackson, complaining of an undue election and return in this House from the State of Georgia.

The report being read by the Clerk,

Mr. WAYNE rose and observed, that about eleven months were now elapsed since the election which is at present called in question, had taken place—that the House was already upwards of four weeks in session—that the petitioner must surely have had sufficient time to come forward, at the first meeting of the House, to support the charges contained in his petition—that it could hardly be imagined the want of time prevented him from advancing—No!—it was rather to be supposed, that he was kept back by the want of evidence, to substantiate those charges; and perhaps by the expectation of procuring a majority in the Legislature of Georgia, to countenance his claims: these were facts, which, he believed, were not unknown to some gentlemen in the House; the same arts, the same practices, the same manoeuvres, which had procured a presentment from the grand jury, against the election in question, and even against some of the acts of the General Government, might perhaps be expected to prevail at length with the Legislative body.

[H. OF R.]

Georgia Contested Election—Relief of Widows and Orphans. [NOVEMBER, 1791.]

The newspapers (he observed) have teemed on this occasion, with testimonies and affidavits, procured during several months past; as to the manner in which they had been obtained, that, he said, was a subject of investigation for a future day. Some of them were under the signatures of persons who had never read, nor were capable of reading them. He felt for the situation of some of those individuals, as they were already presented for perjury on that occasion.

He declared that he entertained not the most distant desire to procrastinate an inquiry into the merits of the election; but he must observe, that it could not but be obvious to every gentleman on the floor, that no other country in the world would countenance the mode in which Mr. Jackson had proceeded, by the publication of ex parte evidence on a subject that was to come under the investigation of the House.

He concluded by declaring his unwillingness to trespass on the time of the committee. He would therefore only beg leave to recapitulate, that eleven months were elapsed since the election took place; and that the petitioner had, ever since, been industriously employed in procuring evidence: if the committee should be disposed to indulge the gentleman with further time for that purpose, he would not, for his part, make the smallest objection to granting him that indulgence: should they think proper to adopt the report now under consideration, which seemed to contemplate and even to invite the advances of that gentleman, he would have no objection to meet him upon that ground, or upon any other, provided it were honorable ground.

The committee then proceeded to consider the resolutions limiting a time for the trial, and regulating the mode in which it is to be conducted; and after having made sundry amendments thereto, rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

FRIDAY, November 25.

PHILIP KEY, from Maryland, appeared, produced his credentials, and took his seat in the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the committee appointed, presented, according to order, a bill for making compensation to widows, orphans, and invalids, in certain cases; which was read twice and committed.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the committee appointed to prepare and bring in a bill of bills for making compensation to widows, orphans, and invalids, in certain cases, presented, according to order, a bill for the relief of David Cook; which was received, and read the first time.

GEORGIA CONTESTED ELECTION.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the report of the committee to whom was referred the petition of James Jackson, complaining of an undue election and return of ANTHONY WAYNE, one of the members returned to serve in this House, for the State of Georgia; and, after some time spent therein, the Chairman reported that the committee had made several amendments thereto; which being read, some were agreed to, and others disagreed to.

The said report was then further amended, and, on the question put thereupon, agreed to by the House, as follows:

Resolved, That the first Monday of February next, be assigned for the trial of the articles alleged in the said petition, against the said return.

Resolved, That the evidence which may be offered, on the part of the petitioner, shall be confined to the proof of the articles of charge exhibited in the said petition against the validity of the return of the said election.

Resolved, That, on the trial, the deposition of a witness shall be received, which shall have been taken more than twenty-five days prior to the day assigned for the trial, before any justice or judge of the courts of the United States, or before any chancellor, justice, or judge, of a supreme or superior court, mayor or chief magistrate of a city, or judge of a county court, or court of common pleas of any of the United States, not being of counsel or attorney to either the said Anthony Wayne, or the petitioner: Provided, That a notification from the magistrate, before whom the deposition is to be taken, to the adverse party, to be present at the taking the same, and to put interrogatories, if he think fit, shall have been first made out and served on the adverse party, or his attorney especially authorized for the purpose, as either may be nearest, if either is within one hundred miles of the place of such caption, allowing time for their attendance, after notified, not less than at the rate of one day. Sundays exclusive, for every twenty miles travel. And every person deposing shall be carefully examined and cautioned, and sworn or affirmed to testify the whole truth, and shall subscribe the testimony by him or her given, after the same shall be reduced to writing, which shall be done only by the magistrate taking the deposition, or by the deponent in his presence. And the depositions so taken, together with a certificate of the notice, if any, given to the adverse party, or his attorney, shall be sealed up by the said magistrate, and directed to the Speaker: Provided, nevertheless, That no ex parte deposition shall be used on the trial of said petition, which shall have been taken at any time before the twenty-sixth day of December next: Provided, also, That evidence taken in any other manner than is herein before directed, and not objected to by the parties, may, with the approbation of the House, be produced on the trial.

MONDAY, November 28.

RELIEF OF WIDOWS, ORPHANS, &c.

The "Bill for making compensation to widows, orphans, and invalids, in certain cases," was taken up in Committee of the Whole, Mr. MÜHLBERG in the chair.

The committee proceeded through the major part of the first section, and agreed to the clauses granting sums equivalent to seven years half-pay, to the orphan children of Captain R. Lewis, the widow of Colonel W. Douglass, and the orphan children of Major A. Leitch. The same provision was also agreed to in favor of the widow of Colonel O. Roberts, with a proviso, that, if any part of the said annuity has been already paid to her by the State of South Carolina, she shall only receive the balance.

[H. OF R.]

Relief of Widows and Orphans, &c.

By the next clause, a similar provision was intended for the children of Captain W. White, whose widow had intermarried, but not till after the expiration of seven years from his death. On this,

Mr. W. SMITH suggested the propriety of considering whether the widow of a deceased officer, even in case of intermarriage, was not still entitled to that part of the half-pay annuity which had accrued previous to the marriage; more especially as it was presumable that she had in the interim incurred some expense for the maintenance of the orphan children.

Mr. SEBASTIAN observed, that the claim to the annuity accrued to the widow immediately on the death of the officer; that she had a right, from day to day; that, if the contract of Government had been performed, she would have received the whole previous to her marriage. He would therefore move to strike out "the orphan children," for the purpose of inserting the name of their mother.

Mr. AMES was of opinion, that the only right acquired by the widow, on the death of her husband, was the right of applying for the provision: instead of making the application, she had intermarried; and that intermarriage operating as a renunciation of the provision, it must, in his opinion, revert to the children. As to any expense by her incurred for the maintenance of the children; if the children receive an estate from their public, that estate becomes chargeable with their maintenance; and the widow will come in like every other creditor.

Mr. LIVERMORE observed, that, as the widow had not intermarried during the seven years for which she was entitled to the half-pay, her claim must still hold good: it was a right given to her for her own use—not to pay her husband's debts. Her non-application for it could not, upon any principle, be construed into a transfer of the right from her to her children, who had no pretensions at all to it during the seven years that she remained single; and if by not applying for the provision she forfeited her claim to it, the children were excluded as well as she.

Mr. WILLIAMSON remarked, that in some of the States, where laws were passed on similar subjects, no respect was had for the time past; the annuities commencing only from the time of the passing the law. Further, he observed, that, if the widow had received the money from day to day, the children would have partaken of the benefit; whereas if it be now given to her new husband, they will be excluded from all participation in it.

Mr. LAURANCE reminded the committee, there was no act of Congress limiting claims of this nature; and he hoped that no such law would now be made. If the widow's present husband is entitled to the compensation, it must be given to him, although he may not make the proper use of it. The intermarriage of an officer's widow involved the forfeiture, not of what had already accrued to her, but of what was thereafter to accrue. She had continued a widow for seven years; and the delay of payment during that time, was no reason why she should lose her right.

The question, on the motion for striking out "the orphan children," being taken and carried, the mother's name was inserted: after which, the committee rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

TUESDAY, November 29.

Mr. LIVERMORE, from the committee appointed, presented a bill to establish the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States; which was received, and read twice and committed.

RELIEF OF WIDOWS, ORPHANS, &c.

The House then proceeded to consider the amendments, proposed by the Committee of the Whole, to the "Bill for making compensation to widows, orphans, and invalids, in certain cases."

On the first amendment, for striking out the orphan children of Captain White, and inserting their mother's name,

Mr. WILLIAMSON said, that on the marriage of the widow she had forfeited her claim, which then devolved to her children; he wished, therefore, the half-pay should go to them. To avoid, however, a judicial decision in the House, he would be content with saying, "the legal representatives" of Captain White.

Mr. SEBASTIAN objected to the expression, as including both widow and children, and involving a division of the object in contest.

Mr. S. BOURNE was of opinion, that, by the intermarriage (though after the expiration of seven years) the widow had relinquished her claim to the pension: the right she had acquired by the death of her husband, was only what the law calls "chose in action;" it had only accrued to her conditionally; and as she had not reduced it into possession previous to her marriage, she could have no pretensions to it after, as the resolution of Congress expressly says, that if the widow marries, the pension shall go to the children. He added several arguments, drawn from the practice of the courts, to show the invalidity of any claim on her part or that of her present husband; and concluded, by declaring his opinion, that the pension ought to be paid to the children.

Mr. LIVERMORE objected to the words "legal representatives," as contrary to the intention of Congress, when they originally made the grant, which was never intended as assets, or to be distributed among the heirs at law. If those words were admitted, they would turn the pension into a channel that was never contemplated. To Mr. BOURNE's arguments drawn from the practice of the law, he opposed others derived from the same source; and maintained, that as the mother had continued seven years a widow, she still retains her right; and that, even if she had forfeited it, neither the children nor any one else could claim it now, as they had no title during the seven years for which the pension was granted.

The reason why this petition came before Congress was, that Congress had made no other provision in cases of this kind, than to recommend to the different States to grant such pensions, and to charge them to the United States; and no provisions were made by the officers of the Treasury, except in consequence of a special order. In the cases of some General officers, who were considered not as belonging to the State, but as officers of Congress, their widows and children were obliged to petition Congress, as the State refused to make any provision for them, though living in it. In the present case, perhaps the widow did not know she had such a right, and therefore did not make application; but this delay cannot operate an extinguishment of her right, which is not lost, but must belong to the same person to whom it originally belonged.

Mr. W. SMITH was of opinion, that a deceased officer's widow had an indisputable title to whatever part of the pension might have accrued previous to her intermarriage: but if, after such intermarriage, she received any portion of it, the orphan's guardian would have a right to claim all that had been paid to her beyond that period. He doubted, however, whether Congress ought to make such a determination; as he thought they have no right to pass declaratory laws affecting the rights of individuals. The question before the House was a question of property between the widow and the orphans; their right depends upon an act of the former Congress, and must be determined before a Court of justice, not by the Legislative body, who, in making a decision, would outstep the limits prescribed by the Constitution. He therefore wished the matter might be left open for a judicial determination, and that the House would be content with saying "the widow or orphan of the late Captain White, as either may appear entitled thereto by the act," &c.

After some further remarks by Mr. KITTERA and Mr. WILLIAMSON, the objection stated by Mr. SMITH was removed, by incorporating the substance of the first and seventh sections into one, by which it is enacted, "That the Comptroller of the Treasury adjust the claims of the widows and orphans, respectively, as the case may be, of the late Captain R. Lewis, Colonel W. Douglas, Colonel O. Roberts, Major A. Leitch, Captain W. White, Lieutenant J. Harris, Colonel W. Bond, Lieutenant W. Noyes, Lieutenant Colonel B. Elliott, Major S. Wise, Major B. Huger, Lieutenant J. Bush, Major C. Motte, and Captain R. Shubrick, deceased, all of whom were killed, or died in the service of the United States, for the seven years half-pay stipulated by the resolve of Congress of the 24th of August, 1780; and that the Register of the Treasury do issue his certificates accordingly."

On proceeding to the second amendment of the committee, by which it was proposed to allow to Timothy Mix five dollars per month, Mr. GILES moved to strike out "five," for the purpose of inserting "sixteen and two-thirds," being the half-pay of a Lieutenant.

Hereupon a debate took place, in which various reasons were alleged why Mr. Mix, though wounded in the grade of a Sergeant, should be remunerated as a Lieutenant, since by his valor and good conduct he had risen to that rank, and still bravely fought his country's battles, notwithstanding the state of mutilation under which he labored. The difference of the sum could be of little consequence to the United States, though of the greatest consequence to him, who was now reduced to the painful necessity of publicly begging his bread: to grant him only a Sergeant's pension, would be degrading him from that rank to which his merit had exalted him. No apprehension could be entertained that the grant of an officer's half-pay would open a wide door for similar applications: perhaps the whole of the United States would not furnish another case of the like nature, &c.

On the other hand, it was urged that even with the allowance of five dollars per month, he would fare better than if he had been an officer from the beginning; since he had already received the commutation for lieutenant's half-pay, and had no further claim to any compensation whatever. No degradation was meant, nor could this grant be construed into one: it was a gratuity, not a debt. If every man who had suffered in the cause of America was to be relieved in proportion to his losses and distresses, the whole revenue of the United States would be drained before one half the claimants could taste the bounty of Congress, &c.

The question being severally taken on Mr. GILES's amendment, and on the amendment of the committee, the allowance was settled at five dollars per month.

The House having proceeded through the bill and the amendments, the question was taken on the engrossment for a third reading, and carried.

WEDNESDAY, November 30.

The bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act concerning Consuls and Vice Consuls," was twice read and committed.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter from the Attorney General, respecting his Report on the Judicial System of the United States; which was read: Whereupon, Ordered, That so much of the order of the ninth instant, as directs the Attorney General to report to this House such farther information as he may be in possession of, relative to the operation of the Judicial System, be discharged.

Ordered, That the Committee of the Whole House to whom was referred the Report of the Attorney General on the Judiciary System of the United States be discharged therefrom; and that the said report be referred to Mr. SEDGWICK, Mr. HILLHOUSE, Mr. LAURANCE, Mr. BOUNDNOT, Mr. KITTERA, Mr. MURRAY, and Mr. MADISON.

Mr. GOODHUE, from the committee appointed, presented a bill concerning the registering or recording of ships or vessels; which was received, and read twice and committed.

RELIEF OF WIDOWS, ORPHANS, &c.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments reported yesterday, from the Committee of the Whole House, to the bill for making compensation to widows, orphans, and invalids, in certain cases; and, the same being read, some were agreed to, and others disagreed to.

And then the said bill, being further amended, was, together with the amendments, ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate have passed a bill, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President, in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President;" to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

THURSDAY, December 1.

An engrossed bill for making compensation to widows, orphans, and invalids, in certain cases, was read the third time and passed.

The bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President, in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President," was read the first time.

RELIEF OF DAVID COOK.

The House, in Committee of the Whole, (Mr. MUELENBERG in the chair,) proceeded to the consideration of "A bill for the relief of David Cook."

The purport of the bill was, to allow to David Cook, who was shot through the body at the battle of Monmouth, one-third of the monthly pay of a captain of artillery, provided he would return two-thirds of his commutation, being [as expressed in the bill] the proportion between the half-pay and commutation.

Mr. WILLIAMSON objected to this, as expressing what was contrary to fact; for, as the commutation was given for half-pay, his refunding two-thirds of the commutation could only entitle him to a third of the half, but not of the whole pay.

Mr. LIVERMORE was of the same opinion. Mr. FINDLEY wished the House might, in the present instance, set a favorable precedent. He observed that, if these officers who had received wounds in the service of their country were treated no better than others who had escaped unhurt, then there was no compensation allowed for superior hardship and suffering. The man who was unwounded could, with the assistance of his commutation, embark in some business that would afford him a maintenance. The case was different with the disabled officer, who was of course obliged to sell. In such circumstances as the latter, he would wish to see the officers permitted to retain the commutation, and allowed, moreover, such part of the annual pension as might be necessary for their subsistence. He thought it a disgrace to the country to see their veteran officers and soldiers pining in want and wretchedness.

This, however, is the case, and is but the natural consequence of their disability which incapacitated them from duly economizing their commutation. In the case under consideration, the object was to place the officer in a more eligible situation; but if, after having been obliged to refund, he should die in the course of a year, the commutation would then be lost to him and his family; and, as to any apprehensions that might be entertained of throwing open a door for the admission of other claims, by showing an indulgence in the present case, he was so far from being swayed by such a consideration that he even wished to see numbers of deserving veterans come forward to receive those rewards to which their services entitled them.

Mr. BARNWELL observed, that, to purchase the half-pay at the expense of refunding the commutation, was only receiving with one hand and paying away with the other. He wished that, without a repayment of the commutation, the half-pay should be allowed from some given period.

Mr. BALDWIN remarked, that, as the petitioner had been examined by persons appointed to decide on the degree of his disability, if the House set aside their decision in the present instance, they should do the same in every other case.

Mr. KITTERA entered into sundry calculations, tending to prove that the grant of half-pay would confer no real benefit on an officer, if clogged with the condition of returning the commutation.

Mr. HILLHOUSE wished the committee might rise, and the matter be postponed until the proper officer should, from the current value of the public securities, ascertain the rate at which the United States may be indemnified for the commutation, that the repayment may only be made in proportion.

Mr. HARTLEY observed, that the Committee were about to establish a principle which would affect a number of officers. Pursuant to their contract with the public, they were entitled to half-pay for life; in lieu of which, they thought it more to their advantage, at the conclusion of the war, to accept of whole pay for five years. Since that period, however, many of them have been so affected by their wounds as to be disabled from obtaining a livelihood. Something ought, in his opinion, to be done for those men, whom it was cruel to see travelling about in distress, after they had rendered such services to their country. He adverted to the circumstance of the amount of the half-pay being alone sufficient (without refunding) to discharge the commutation, in a certain number of years; after which, he thought it but justice that those unfortunate men should receive a further compensation for their services and sufferings. This being, however, a question of considerable moment, he wished the committee might rise, to consider again to-morrow.

Mr. BOUNDNOT opposed the rising of the committee, as he saw no advantage in postponing the business. The public officers had, for several years, pursued, in cases of this nature, a regular system, in which he thought it might prove dangerous to innovate. A general revision of the claims of the officers on the pension list would be attended with much difficulty. Better that the House should determine on particular cases. The one under consideration he wished to see taken up on its own merits, and a provision made suitable to the peculiarity of the circumstances.

H. OF R.]

Relief of David Cook.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

Mr. PARKER disapproved of passing laws for particular cases, when they could all be embraced by a general one. If the committee should rise, he hoped it would be for the purpose of reporting their opinion in favor of passing a bill to make a general provision for all such cases. If they proceeded in the bill under consideration, he would wish to include in it Captain Campbell, in whose favor a report from the Secretary of War had just been read.

The question on the committee's rising being taken and lost.

Mr. BOURNOR observed, that unless Captain Cook's situation (in consequence of his wound) be now worse than it was at the time of inspection, the House ought strictly to adhere to the principle laid down in the rule heretofore established. He thought it dangerous to change the law in an individual case. If any innovation were to take place, it ought equally to extend to all; otherwise, petitions would be pouring in by every man on the pension list, suing for the same advantages that had been granted to one. If Captain Cook's situation were grown worse, his particular circumstances might require the particular attention of the House; otherwise, it would be prudent to weigh the consequences of deviating from the established rule. A number of invalids had, on refunding part of their commutation, been admitted on the pension list; and if the House did not think that a sufficient compensation for wounds and services, the same additional favor that was shown to any one ought to be generally extended to every one. This he thought the only path to be pursued, if the House wished to avoid the imputation of injustice to many worthy men, whose names are on the pension list.

After some further debate, the committee rose and reported the bill, without amendment.

On motion of Mr. PARKER, it was then proposed to amend the bill by the insertion of a clause for the admission of Captain Campbell (above mentioned) on the pension list, with an allowance of the half-pay of a captain of infantry.

Several gentlemen having spoken in support of the amendment,

Mr. FITZSIMONS expressed a wish to see a suitable provision made for every case similar to the two under consideration, but thought the House were pursuing a very improper mode of making such provision. Equal justice ought to be done to all. This was not the case in the present instance, in which the two officers were put on an unequal footing. He saw no reason why one should receive more, and the other (merely because he had not asked more) should receive less. When officers are put on the pension list, this ought to be done in the most convenient manner, and some general law must be made for the purpose. Such a measure would obviate the inconvenience of throwing in fractions of £20 to one and £50 to another. If gentlemen would suffer the bill to pass as reported by the committee, Captain Campbell, and many others in similar circumstances, might be provided for by a general law.

Mr. WADSWORTH observed, that many such petitioners had waited three years without receiving any relief. He admitted that the resolutions of the old Congress excluded the petitioners from the pension list, unless the commutation were returned; but he hoped the House would not consider themselves as bound by those resolutions. He could not consent to see the few invalids who have survived their hardships and distresses, doomed to starve and perish for want. The whole annual amount of the invalid pensions is only $87,000—a sum far short of what is, in many countries of Europe, annually spent by a single individual; and even this is every day diminishing. As to the idea of a "general bill," he had often heard general bills talked of, when there was a question of postponing the consideration of particular cases, but he had ever observed them to end in nothing. He was pleased, however, to see in the House an increasing disposition to do justice. He hoped the same spirit had extended its influence to the Senate, and that they would be disposed to do justice also.

The question being taken on the amendment, and carried, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. BOURNOR laid on the table a resolution that the Secretary of War be directed to lay before the House a statement of the claims of all such invalids, widows, and orphans, as are, in his opinion, justly entitled to the provisions made by the former Congress, but have been prevented from receiving the same; together with the particular circumstances attending such claims; and also a similar statement of the claims of all other persons belonging to his Department who have been prevented from exhibiting the same in due time.

Ordered, That a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill or bills to explain and amend the acts which relate to the seven years' half pay promised to the widows and orphans of officers who died in the service of the United States, and of persons who are, or have been, entitled to pensions as invalids; and that Mr. LAURANCE, Mr. FITZSIMONS, and Mr. BARNWELL, be the said committee.

FRIDAY, December 2.

An engrossed bill for the relief of David Cook, and Thomas Campbell, was read the third time and passed.

The bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President," was read the second time, and ordered to be committed to a Committee of the Whole House. Committed.

Ordered, That the petition of Nathaniel Lucas, which lay on the table, be referred to the Secretary of War.

A memorial and petition of the Society of United Brethren for propagating the Gospel among the Heathen, was presented to the House and read, praying that the resolve of Congress of the third of September, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight, making a grant of certain lands for the benefit of the said Society, may be confirmed, and warrants issued to survey the same. Referred.

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Appropriation Bill.

[H. OF R.]

APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two.

Mr. PARKER observed, that the sum contemplated to be granted by the bill before the committee was nearly double the amount of that granted for a former year. He conceived it was the duty of the committee who reported this bill to have examined into the expenditure of the former appropriations, and called on them for information on this head.

Mr. LAURANCE said, that it was not the duty of the committee to collect the information called for. Public officers had their accounts settled according to law, and those settlements were open to the inspection of the members. It was only the duty of the committee to examine the estimates contained in the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and to report a bill, providing for the expenses of Government and the discharge of claims due in 1792. The Committee of the Whole would also examine those estimates. The amount of salaries depended upon the positive laws of the Legislature, and the estimates from the different offices stated to what purpose the money called for by each was intended to be applied. If from the documents in the possession of the committee, it was found that money was wanted, money would be granted he supposed; if money was not found wanting, grants would not be made. When the former Congress made grants of money for particular purposes, they necessarily relied on the honor of their officers that it would be expended agreeably to appropriation.

Mr. PARKER did not doubt but that the committee had done what they thought their duty, but his wish in rising was to provoke an inquiry into the expenditure of money heretofore appropriated. He had no doubt of the integrity of the officers into whose hands the money was intrusted, yet he thought it the duty of the Representatives of the people to inquire in what manner the money of their constituents was expended. The sums intended for the War Department he considered as very considerable, and for the Treasury Department sums were called for to pay a number of clerks, who perhaps were not all employed. He concluded by declaring that he could not vote in favor of the bill until he had obtained the information he called for.

Mr. FITZSIMONS remarked, that the allowance of the different clerks of the Treasury would not be paid, if it was not shown to the proper officer that they had been employed and had done their duty.

Mr. BALDWIN said the committee, of which he was a member, had not been appointed to inquire into the expenditure of former appropriated money, but to bring in a bill agreeably to the report; yet, as an individual member, he had called at the Register's office, and had been induced to look over the accounts. In that of the Secretary of the Senate, three thousand dollars had been appropriated last year for contingent expenses. He did not see that that sum had fallen short, though that officer now called for four thousand five hundred dollars as an appropriation for the expenses of 1793. The reason for granting this increased sum, was stated that some articles had risen in price.

Mr. DAYTON observed, that the objections which Mr. PARKER made to the bill were indefinite. He wished he would point out those parts on which his dislike to it was grounded. They appeared to amount to this, that he would not vote for an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH (N. H.) said the bill was intended to make provision for the expenses of Government, and he could see no necessary connexion between the object of it and an examination into the expenditure of money already appropriated. He saw no reason for suspending his determination on this till he had received satisfactory information on the other head: for if the officers were not able to account for one farthing of the money appropriated, yet it would be necessary to provide for future expenses. He agreed that the information called for was necessary, but contended it need not interfere with the business now before the committee, or interrupt its progress.

Mr. CLARK thought the inquiry not only necessary, but well-timed. There was no doubt that the money appropriated had been expended; but he wished to know whether it had been properly expended. It was necessary to know how it was expended, before any more was appropriated. This information should form the ground of future appropriations.

Mr. PARKER declared he had no intention of unnecessarily impeding the progress of the bill before the committee; but he saw no necessity for hurrying the business—to give two or three days for inquiries would be no injury to it. He did not know that any money had been applied by any of the officers of Government improperly, but he conceived it his duty to inquire. As soon as the inquiry was made, and the information he called for obtained, he was ready to grant every requisite supply; because he was confident that these inquiries, once made, would never be neglected, and a habit would follow to look into the expenditure of all public appropriations. He again adverted to the great increase of expense, by comparing the appropriation of the second session of Congress and the one proposed by the bill before the committee. The first was about six hundred thousand dollars, and this upwards of a million. Perhaps there was a necessity for this increase, and all money heretofore granted had been properly expended, but this he wished might be made to appear.

Mr. LAURANCE wished every part of the bill

[H. or R.]

Appropriation Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

thoroughly examined, and every member satisfied that the sums called for were necessary before they were appropriated. The gentleman from Virginia, who first objected to the bill, only took a comparative view of the sum total of former appropriations and of that contemplated by the bill. He wished the gentleman would turn to the particulars, and view the variety and nature of the calls on the Treasury for 1792. He noticed the mention that had been made of the increased sums called for, for the contingent expenses of the Senate, and said that, if the whole of this was not expended, the remainder would lay in the Treasury, and such parts as were expended must be accounted for by the proper officer to the proper office where it was open to inspection.

Mr. SMITH (S. C.) wished that the gentleman from Virginia, to satisfy his doubts respecting the expenditure of former appropriations, would take the trouble of examining the accounts of the Treasurer, which had already been lying on the table for three weeks. He mentioned some of the objects that occurred at the present session, and which called for an increase of the sum to be appropriated. Among these he enumerated the increase of our army in consequence of the attacks on our frontiers, the expense incurred in taking the census, the additional claims on Government, and the expense of the Government of the Southwestern Territory. He wished the gentleman to state the particular parts of the bill he objected to. If he did this, the attention of the committee would be turned to one point, and progress might be made in the business.

Mr. STEELE thought the objections made by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. PARKER) proper; and fully agreed in the propriety of checking the progress of the bill until the information called for by that gentleman could be obtained. The intention, he conceived, in appointing a select committee was, that they should examine the estimates on which the appropriation bill was to be founded. He wished to know how it happened that the Secretary of the Senate, for contingent expenses of that body, should call for four thousand and five hundred dollars, when the Clerk of the House of Representatives only called for five thousand and five hundred dollars, though the last mentioned body is so much more numerous than the first. He was of opinion that the annual contingent expenses of the Auditor's and Comptroller's offices must now be well known from experience, and that supposition was no longer proper in estimating the sums necessary to be appropriated for those objects. He conceived that the last year's expenses being inquired into, would give the sum necessary for the next. He wished to depend on the select committee for every information of this kind; and, if they were not able to give it, he conceived they had not done their duty. Mr. LAURANCE supposed it was the duty of members to inform themselves on every subject that came before the House. In this instance, want of time could not be pleaded in excuse for a neglect of this duty. The estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury had early in the session been handed in, was printed for the use of the House, and a copy put into the hands of each member, so that they had a full opportunity of examining it. The bill now before the committee had been reported two weeks since; so that, from the time of the bill's being reported, the business had not been precipitated. Gentlemen knew the subject was before them, and if they had examined into it, their minds would be made up, because there were materials on which their opinions could be formed. Relative to the two particulars adverted to, first the increased estimate of the Secretary of the Senate, he observed, that it was impossible for any member of the committee positively to declare that the additional sum of one thousand five hundred dollars to the former allowance was too much. With respect to the estimate of the Clerk of the House, it was particular, it was easily examined, and the Committee of the Whole were competent to determine whether any items of it appeared unreasonable. The contingencies in the War Department, in the Comptroller's office, &c., if they were higher than heretofore, it should be considered that rents are raised, and wood higher, and an allowance should therefore be made. He was sorry to hear it said that the committee had not done their duty. The information called for, he repeated, was on the table. It was impossible for the committee to say the exact quantity of wood, paper, &c., necessary for the Houses—something must be left to the honor and integrity of the persons intrusted with making the purchase of these articles.

Mr. GERRY said, that the committee were directed to report a bill pursuant to the estimate made, and their duty had no relation to the examination of the last year's expenditure. Yet he conceived it the duty of the House to make some such inquiry, and he hoped the committee would rise to give time to collect this information. He wished the House would make it a rule that every Executive should, at each session, lay before the House an account of the expenditure of all the money passing through their hands. The people depended on their Representatives for a scrutiny into the expenditure of the public money. He wished, at present, that a committee should be appointed to examine into the expenditure of all former appropriations, and that a rule should be established to apply for the future, and procure regular accounts from every branch of the Executive Department. The effect of this, in the end, would be to increase the confidence of the people in those officers, by bringing the rectitude of their official conduct to full evidence, and would be the best guard against the embezzlement of public money, should we be less fortunate in future in the choice of Executive officers. If some such plan as this was not adopted, the Representatives would have no more idea of the money expended than the people themselves, and the people no more than if their officers were in the moon. He moved that the committee rise.

Mr. BOURNOR hoped the committee would not rise until some more notice had been taken of the objections of the gentleman from Virginia. His charges were to the bill in general, and were founded upon the difference between the sum total of the appropriation contemplated in the bill, and that of former appropriations, a difference of about four hundred thousand dollars. To account for this difference he wished the gentleman would turn his attention to the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury; in which he would find a number of extraordinary calls for considerable appropriations. A considerable sum to the King of France; a large sum, the balance of an old account due Oliver Pollock; one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, a deficiency in last year's appropriation; considerable expenses in consequence of an increase of our army for the defence of the Pennsylvania and Virginia frontiers. He mentioned that if the sums called for to provide for these objects, and a few more which he enumerated, were added together, they would be found to make up nearly the difference complained of. This explanation he considered as necessary, lest it should be imagined that our regular annual expenses had increased in the sum of four hundred thousand dollars. These extraordinary expenses were peculiar to the ensuing year, and could not be reckoned as an increase to the annual expenses of the Government of the United States.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

Appropriation Bill.

[H. or R.]

Mr. STEELE wished the members of the select committee would declare whether they had examined the items of the particular estimates laid before them. He was willing to rely on their opinion of them to make up his own mind.

Mr. BALDWIN said, the committee were only appointed to bring in a bill in conformity to the estimates laid before the House. He conceived that, as every member had a right to examine the documents on which those estimates were founded, that they would take the necessary steps to acquire information. For his own part, he had been induced for this purpose to call at the Register's office. He had procured from the Register such papers (making himself personally responsible for their safety) as threw sufficient light upon it to satisfy his mind; those papers were on the table and open to the inspection of every member.

Mr. GILES was of opinion that the committee had done their duty, and had acted in conformity to the resolution of the House. He mentioned his being one of a small minority against that resolution, when it was under consideration. At that time he was of opinion that some previous examination was necessary. He adverted to the estimate from the Secretary of the Senate. That officer called for four thousand five hundred dollars, for contingent expenses, though it did not appear that there was a deficiency in the sum of three thousand dollars granted last year. The only reason that was given for an increase of fifty per cent. was, the increased price of the articles to be purchased. He was against allowing an unnecessary latitude in appropriations. It would generally be found that the expenditures would come up very near to the sum appropriated; and if three thousand dollars were sufficient last year, it remained to be determined whether the increased price of articles warranted an increase of fifty per cent. in the sums to be appropriated now. If an increase in the appropriations for the Department of War, from good reasons, was necessary, this was no reason why the contingent expenses of the Senate should increase. He hoped the passage of the bill would not be precipitated, and was of opinion that information should be previously obtained. He approved of the idea suggested by Mr. GERRY, to call on Executive officers at stated times for their accounts. It had been said that members could seek for information at their offices; he thought it more proper that the officers should be called upon to bring their accounts to the House. He did not like the mode pointed out; and, indeed, even supposing the members had neglected a duty, yet he hoped further time would not be refused. He was for the committee's rising.

Mr. BARNWELL was of opinion that the Report of the Treasurer, containing a full account of the receipt and expenditure of all the public money, was the fullest information that need be received. Neither the members of the House, nor a committee of it, could possibly examine into the minutiae and items of every public account. The Comptroller, Treasurer, and Register, were the proper officers to do this. If any member of the House was dissatisfied with any particular charge received at the Treasury, he could, either as an individual, call and examine into its propriety, or on the floor of the House call for the information he wanted to satisfy his mind.

Mr. FITZSIMONS was against the committee's rising. Many of the items in the appropriation bill were right without doubt, and papers were on the table to explain the propriety of others. Salaries would not be disputed. If clerks were unemployed at the offices, they would not be paid. The contemplated appropriations for contingent and incidental expenses depended on estimates which were before the committee; and if any are thought too considerable, motions may be made to reduce them; but to rise now would be mere waste of time. He enumerated some of the objects of expense which called for a larger appropriation this year, to remove the general objections of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MADISON considered the present a good opportunity to determine how far the House could go into an examination of the accounts of public officers. It was true, that the Representatives of the people were the guardians of the public money, and consequently it was their duty to satisfy themselves as far as possible of the sources from which money flowed into the Treasury—how that money was applied—under what authority—and to inquire, at different times, what balance actually remained in the Treasury. This, he conceived, could best be done by appointing a committee periodically to examine the books of the Treasurer, see what balance appeared on the face of them, and inquire whether that balance was really in the Treasury. He mentioned the practice of the former Congress, to appoint four committees to inspect the operations of the four Departments under them. These Departments, however, now belonged more to the Executive; but still, as the Representatives were, by the Constitution, made the guardians of the public money, they had a right, and it was their duty, to inspect the operations of the Treasury Department. This right could not be conveniently exercised, in his opinion, by the whole body, but it should be done by a detachment from it, who would report the necessary information. This mode of proceeding was usual. He instanced the practice of the British House of Commons, and of several State Legislatures. Even if these inquiries procured no more information than was obtained by means of reports from the different officers of Government, yet being made by the immediate Representatives of the people, they would give more satisfaction. So far as it was useful to ascertain the real balance in the Treasury, so far these periodical committees would be of the first utility. A question arose, whether the progress of the bill before the committee should be stopped to make those inquiries, or whether it should be suffered to go on, on the supposition that all was right. He wished the proper regulations on this subject settled, as standing regulations, and to be adopted before any idea of their necessity should arise from suspicious circumstances.

[H. or R.]

Appropriation Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

Mr. LAURANCE wished to proceed in the bill as far as the information already in the possession of the House would carry them.

Mr. GERRY made some observations, to show that accounts from the Treasury could never give the information wanted; they generally stated sums of money paid to individuals, without mention of particular objects to which they were meant to be applied. This was a favorable opportunity to establish some such regulations as were contemplated by members. Our officers have, and deserve, the confidence of the people. It would be too late to attempt to make those regulations when there were reasons for suspicion; the influence of suspected officers would be exerted to oppose them.

Some further remarks were made by Messrs. BALDWIN, GILES, and FITZSIMONS; after which, the question was put, and the Committee rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.

MONDAY, December 5.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two; and, after some time spent therein, Ordered, That the said bill, with amendments, be recommitted to Mr. LAURANCE Mr. BALDWIN, and Mr. ASHE.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter from the Secretary of Treasury, accompanying his report on the subject of Manufactures, made pursuant to an order of the House of the fifteenth of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter from the Treasurer of the United States, accompanying his account of receipts and expenditures of the public moneys, between the first of July, and the thirtieth of September, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-one; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BENSON laid on the table a resolution for the appointment of a committee to join a committee of the Senate, to consider and report the most eligible manner of carrying into effect a former resolution of Congress, respecting the erection of an Equestrian Statue, in honor of General WASHINGTON.

APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House then, pursuant to the order of the day, resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, and resumed the consideration of the appropriation bill—Mr. MUEHLBERG in the chair.

In proceeding through the bill, the several items were separately considered, and agreed to. Some occasional remarks were made; but no material debate took place. One amendment was proposed, by which the bill is made to express the several purposes for which the moneys are appropriated, instead of appropriating sums in gross, with a reference to the Secretary's estimate, for particulars.

The committee having reported the bill and the amendment, the House adopted the same, and re-committed the bill to the select committee, who had originally framed it, with instructions to new-model it pursuant to the sense of the House.

Mr. GERRY presented a resolution in lieu of one which he laid on the table on Friday last, making it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the House, on the third Monday of every session, an account of the receipts and expenditures of the public money appropriated during the preceding session, so far as he shall then have it in his power to state particulars; and if he be unable to give an accurate statement of the whole, at the time appointed, he is to complete it as soon afterwards as may be.

TUESDAY, December 6.

Resolved, That Mr. BENSON, Mr. GERRY, and Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina, be appointed a committee on the part of this House, jointly, with such committee as shall be appointed on the part of the Senate, to consider and report to Congress the most eligible manner for carrying into effect the resolution of the United States in Congress assembled, of the seventh of August, 1783, directing that an Equestrian Statue of General WASHINGTON should be erected.

The three following motions being severally made and seconded, to wit:

"First. That a committee be appointed to examine and report upon the state of the Treasury Department; and that such committee be appointed on the second Monday after the meeting of Congress in every session.

"Second. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to report to this House, on the third Monday of every annual session of Congress, a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money, for the preceding year, as far as the same can be then ascertained; and as soon thereafter as circumstances will permit, of such receipts and expenditures as cannot be specified in the first statement. "Third. That, within the month of January in each year, if Congress shall be then in session, or, if not then in session, within the first week of each succeeding session, the Secretary of the Treasury shall lay before the House of Representatives an accurate statement of receipts and expenditures down to the last day of the month of December immediately preceding, including the said day; in which statement shall be distinguished the expenditures which fall under each head of appropriation, and shall be shown the sums, if any, which remain unexpended of such appropriations. And that a committee be thereupon forthwith appointed to examine the said statement, and report concerning the same to the House, and that this be considered as a standing order."

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

Post Office Bill.

[H. or R.]

Ordered, That the said motions be referred to Mr. GERRY, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. BARNWELL; that they do examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereupon, to the House.

POST OFFICE BILL.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill for establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States.

Mr. SENDWICK moved to strike out all that clause of the bill which designated the roads, and to insert, instead thereof, these words, "by such route as the President of the United States shall, from time to time, cause to be established."

It had appeared, he said, to be the sense of the House, when this subject was formerly under consideration, that the demarkation of the particular roads should be intrusted to the Executive; the only difference had been with respect to the mode of expression—but the effect was still to have been the same—some gentlemen thinking it best to leave the details of this business entirely to the supreme Executive, others wishing to name the Postmaster General. The members of the House could not be supposed to possess every information that might be requisite on this subject, and their opinions were liable to be biased by local interests. He had ever considered it as highly incumbent on the House to give the people every possible information on public concerns; but in this, as in every other subject, he thought it sufficient that the House should establish the principle, and then leave it to the Executive to carry it into effect.

Mr. LIVERMORE observed that the Legislative body being empowered by the Constitution "to establish post offices and post roads," it is as clearly their duty to designate the roads as to establish the offices; and he did not think they could with propriety delegate that power, which they were themselves appointed to exercise. Some gentlemen, he knew, were of opinion that the business of the United States could be better transacted by a single person than by many; but this was not the intention of the Constitution. It was provided that the Government should be administered by Representatives, of the people's choice; so that every man, who has the right of voting, shall be in some measure concerned in making every law for the United States. The establishment of post roads he considered as a very important object; but he did not wish to see them so diffused as to become a heavy charge where the advantage resulting from them would be but small; nor, on the other hand, for the sake of bringing a revenue into the Treasury, consent to straiten them so as to check the progress of information. If the post office were to be regulated by the will of a single person, the dissemination of intelligence might be impeded, and the people kept entirely in the dark with respect to the transactions of Government; or the Postmaster, if vested with the whole power, might branch out the offices to such a degree as to make them prove a heavy burden to the United States. In many instances the expense is productive of a benefit sufficient to counterbalance it; in others, no public benefit arises, but some individuals reap a private advantage from the institution, whilst it is injurious to others. The most material point, in his opinion, was to determine the road itself; if the House gave up that, they might as well leave all the rest of the business to the discretion of the Postmaster, and permit him to settle the rates of postage, and every other particular relative to the post office, by saying, at once, "there shall be a Postmaster General, who shall have the whole government of the post office, under such regulations as he from time to time shall be pleased to enact."

Mr. SENDWICK felt himself by no means disposed to resign all the business of the House to the President, or to any one else; but he thought that the Executive part of the business ought to be left to Executive officers. He did not, for his part, know the particular circumstances of population, geography, &c., which had been taken into the calculation by the select committee, when they pointed out the roads delineated in the bill; but he would ask, whether they understood the subject so thoroughly as the Executive officer would, who being responsible to the people for the proper discharge of the trust reposed in him, must use his utmost diligence in order to a satisfactory execution of the delegated power? As to the constitutionality of this delegation, it was admitted by the committee themselves who brought in the bill; for if the power was altogether indelegable, no part of it could be delegated; and if a part of it could, he saw no reason why the whole could not. The second section was as unconstitutional as the first, for it is there said, that "it shall be lawful for the Postmaster General to establish such other roads as post roads, as to him may seem necessary."

Congress, he observed, are authorized not only to establish post offices and post roads, but also to borrow money; but is it understood that Congress are to go in a body to borrow every sum that may be requisite? Is it not rather their office to determine the principle on which the business is to be conducted, and then delegate the power of carrying their resolves into execution? They are also empowered to coin money, and if no part of their power be delegable, he did not know but they might be obliged to turn coiners, and work in the Mint themselves. Nay, they must even act the part of executioners, in punishing pirates committed on the high seas. In the delegation of power, the whole purpose, in his opinion, is answered, when the rules by which the business is to be conducted are pointed out by law; nor could he discover anything in the Constitution to restrict the House from adopting this mode of conducting business.

H. OF R.]

Post Office Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

Mr. HARTLEY.—I cannot agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts, that as often as this business had been agitated, there had been a majority in the House in favor of leaving it to the Executive to designate the post roads. Nay, so far as my recollection (which is perhaps not so good as that gentleman's) serves me, we uniformly have had a majority for Congress to point out the post roads.

The Constitution seems to have intended that we should exercise all the powers respecting the establishing post roads we are capable of; but the gentleman says we are not competent to this duty, that it must be intrusted to the Executive.

Sir, in many questions concerning the property or geography of the United States, we had full information on this floor from every quarter. The people's interests and circumstances have been known, however distinctly or differently situated.

On the subject of the post office there has been much discussion. Almost the whole of the roads here stated have appeared in bills before, and though the gentleman (who made the motion for striking out) may not perfectly understand all the roads, yet if he will be so good as to attend to the gentlemen who represent the different parts of the Union, he ought to be satisfied. Unless they are prejudiced, they can certainly give the best information. If it were left to the President or Postmaster General, neither is acquainted with all the roads contemplated; they must depend in a great measure on the information of others.

We represent the people, we are constitutionally vested with the power of determining upon the establishment of post roads; and, as I understand at present, ought not to delegate the power to any other person.

A General Post Office is intended to be established by the bill, and the collection of the revenue is put under the superintendence of a Postmaster General; the minutiae is submitted to him. I should imagine there ought to be a limitation of the law in point of time, say three, four, or five years; when we come to the proper place, a motion to that purpose may be made. No one in the United States has a greater respect for the President than myself, and I hold that the several Departments are filled with gentlemen of the first abilities and fitness; but we are not to confine ourselves to a view of the moment. This bill has the complexion of a perpetual law; we must have some regard to consequences. If the amendment takes place, the office as well as revenue will be thrown into the power of the Executive, who may increase the roads and offices as far as the revenues go. The revenue of the post office is at present not great, but if proper seeds are now sown, it may hereafter be productive. In Great Britain, much has been obtained from the post office, and most of the European nations count upon it as a considerable branch of revenue. Will it be prudent for us to grant this power to the Executive, in the latitude contended for? We must not suppose that this country will always remain incorrupt; we shall share the fate of other nations. Through the medium of the post office a weighty influence may be obtained by the Executive; this is guarded against in England by prohibiting officers in the Post Office Department from interfering at elections. There is no such guard or caution in the present bill. By the amendment, we are unnecessarily paring with our revenues, and throwing an improper balance into the Executive scale, and which our constituents do not expect from us. The Senate heretofore have disagreed with us, but if they will take the same pains we have, the means of information is within their reach; upon a review, they may probably change their sentiments. This is a law of experiment, let us try it a few years. If, upon experience, we find ourselves incompetent to the duty, we must (if the Constitution will admit) grant the power to the Executive; or, if the Constitution will not allow such a delegation, submit the article for amendment in a constitutional way. I am against the amendment.

Mr. B. BOURNE was in favor of the amendment, which he thought both expedient and constitutional. In speaking of post offices and post roads, the Constitution, he observed, speaks in general terms, as it does of a mint, excises, &c. In passing the excise law, the House, not thinking themselves possessed of sufficient information, empowered the President to mark out the districts and surveys; and if they had a right to delegate such power to the Executive, the further delegation of the power of marking out the roads for the conveyance of the mail, could hardly be thought dangerous. The Constitution meant no more than that Congress should possess the exclusive right of doing that, by themselves or by any other person, which amounts to the same thing. The business he thought much more likely to be well executed by the President, or the Postmaster General, than by Congress. He had himself been of the committee who framed the bill, but could not tell whether the roads marked out in it were better than any other, except so far as relates to the State which he represents; and he imagined the other members of the committee were in a similar predicament. The President having opportunities of obtaining information from the different members of the House, from the Postmaster General, and from others, will be more competent to determine the proper road. It will be occasionally necessary to change the route, and lay out new roads, and he could see no inconvenience from intrusting either the President or the Postmaster General with the necessary powers for these purposes. At all events, the House could guard against any apprehended danger, by the insertion of such a clause as had been proposed, [by Mr. HARTLEY,] limiting the operation of the bill to three, four, or five years. At the expiration of that term, the power would revert to Congress, and they might then retain the exercise of it in their own hands, if they found that any improper use had been made of it.

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Post Office Bill.

[H. OF R.]

Mr. WHITE made several observations on the expediency and constitutionality of the measure. No individual could possess an equal share of information with that House on the subject of the geography of the United States. He disapproved of the amendment for many other reasons, and particularly its approximation to the custom of England. Such advances towards Monarchy, if not checked in season, he was apprehensive would tend to unhinge the present Government. If this Government retains its present Republican form, it will be owing to the members of this House. It is easy to see what hand could be made of the post offices, if ever they are under the direction of an improper person. At the time of a general election, for instance, how easy would it be for this man to dictate to particular towns and villages, "If you do not send such a man to Congress, you shall have no post office; but if you elect my friend, you shall have a post office, and the roads shall be run agreeably to your wishes." Another improper use may be made of this power by the interception of letters, and checking the regular channel of information throughout the country. Upon the whole, he was clearly for rejecting the motion for striking out the words in the bill.

Mr. LAURANCE observed, that the revenues arising from the post office would not, perhaps, produce a sufficient sum to defray the expenses of the establishment. If this should be the fact, he would prefer the amendment, but if the revenue should increase from time to time, he should have no objection to the addition of posts and roads in proportion to such increase. The consequence of establishing so extensive a system all at once, as was contemplated in the bill, might be, that the revenue would fall short, and then additional taxes must be laid to pay off the deficiency; however, upon the whole, if he could be satisfied that the revenues of the Department would be sufficient to defray the expenses of it, he would be against striking out the clause in the bill.

Mr. PAGE.—If the motion before the committee succeeds, I shall make one which will save a deal of time and money, by making a short session of it; for if this House can, with propriety, leave the business of the post office to the President, it may leave to him any other business of legislation; and I may move to adjourn and leave all the objects of legislation to his sole consideration and direction. But how the President should be better acquainted with the proper places for post offices and post roads than the Representatives of the people, I cannot conceive. In Virginia, for instance, I cannot conceive Representatives say, with more certainty, what post roads would be proper in that State than any one man? I look upon the motion as unconstitutional.

2d Cox.—9

tional, and if it were not so, as having a mischievous tendency, which I am willing to believe the member who made it is not aware of.

In reply to Mr. SENECA, he said, he heard but two arguments on which any stress was laid, viz: that the President's greater responsibility pointed him out as the proper person to be intrusted with the important business of establishing post offices and post roads, and that his superior knowledge of this subject ought to induce the committee to leave it to him alone; but as to the responsibility, how that can be greater than the responsibility of the members of this House, when he is appointed by Electors for a longer term than they are; and they elected by the people themselves, and accountable to them every two years, is to me inconceivable; and as to his superior knowledge, granting that he possessed it, which I cannot grant, can there be a greater paradox than the assertion that the President's knowledge alone is greater than that very knowledge, aided by the united information of both Houses of Congress, collected and presented to him in the bill? Sir, if the clause which it is said we should strike out, instead of communicating the sense of this House to the President, took away his right of approving or rejecting it, there might be some weight in the argument drawn from the supposition of his superior knowledge; but as this is not, and cannot be the case, and so far from it, that the clause submits the matter to the most mature deliberation of the President and Senate, it must be paradoxical to say that we lose the advantage of superior wisdom and knowledge of the subject, if we do not leave it to the President alone. But we are told that the motion is not unconstitutional. I think it is; but who is there that denies it is contrary to the interest and spirit of a free Government? The people, however, may think with the member who made the motion, that the President (that is, the man who is now their President) understands this matter, and can do it better than their Representatives; and they may think the whole business of Government might be safely intrusted to him; but they are too wise to make the experiment, and understand the nature of their Government so well as to complain that Congress too often commits to Heads of Departments what the Constitution requires at their hands. The President himself, if I mistake not, views the subject before us in the light I do, or he would not so repeatedly have called on us to make it a peculiar object of our deliberation.

Mr. STEELE would not take up the time of the House in considering whether the motion was constitutional or not; but he was apprehensive it would be burdensome to impose the duty on the President, who must feel very disagreeable to hear that after he had exerted his utmost abilities to give satisfaction, discontents had taken place. He hoped the gentleman from New York, who had hitherto shown himself so staunch a friend to the present Constitution, would not oppose the diffusion of knowledge and information amongst the people, upon an idea of a supposed deficiency in the revenue of the Post Office, for it might very soon increase to a sum more than sufficient for the expenses of the establishment.

Mr. VINING said, that since this subject had been before the last House, during the recess, he had seen many lights thrown on it, and he was convinced that the members were as fully competent to judge of the matter as any one man could be; this, he thought a fact not now to be disputed, as well as that more satisfaction would be given to the country in general. There is no analogy between the United States and Great Britain, when the subject of the post roads and post offices are to be considered. This country, from its great extent and uncultivated state, as well as from a thousand other causes, is not at all similar to the situation of Great Britain; therefore, any attempt to imitate their regulations would be improper. With regard to the regulation being given to the President, two things should be considered; to a good President it would be a burden; to a bad President, a dangerous power of establishing offices and roads in those places only where his interest would be promoted, and removing those of long standing, in order to harass those he might suppose inimical to his ambitious views. The Constitution has certainly given us the power of establishing posts and roads, and it is not even implied that it should be transferred to the President; his powers are well defined; we create offices, and he fills them with such persons as he approves of, with the advice of the Senate. Having thus far stated his opinion, he would vote against the amendment to the bill; and when the first section was got over, he would propose a clause to be inserted in the second section, which he hoped would meet the ideas of the gentleman from New York, viz: that the cross-roads and offices should be so regulated as not to exceed the surplusage of the revenue of the general establishment. The doubt of the bill's not passing the Senate, should have no weight in his mind; he would rather fifty bills should be lost than shrink from his trust; and he hoped the House of Representatives would show their firmness in the present instance; and if the Senate should afterwards reject the bill, as they had done before, let them be answerable for their own conduct: they can do these things more gracefully than this House, as they are not seen in the act. Mr. V. concluded by drawing another argument from that part of the Speech of the President, at the opening of the present session, which respects the post office and post roads, wherein he so warmly recommends it to the Legislature to take up the subject. This expression is as strong an argument as can possibly be adduced, to show that he had no other conception of the matter than that it was the peculiar privilege of the Legislature.

Mr. BARNWELL was not surprised that a diversity of opinions should prevail on such a subject; but that there should be any question respecting the constitutionality of the amendment astonished him. It was very natural to suppose members from the same State would differ in opinion, and this showed the greater degree of necessity there was to vest the power in the hands of a high responsible officer to determine upon it; for, by doing so, there would be less partiality exhibited in the delineation of the roads, &c. But, if left to the House, it would be almost impossible to reconcile any line to all parties; for the members from each State would probably be guided more by the principle of domestic convenience than by a sense of general good. In reply to Mr. V.'s argument, that it would be a burden to a good President, he thought it would be a pleasure to him to render service to his country. Upon the whole, he was in favor of Mr. SEBOWICK'S motion.

Mr. GERRY took a general view of most of the arguments in favor of the motion; replied to each; and concluded, by asking why the commercial interest only should be accommodated, and the inland inhabitants excluded from the advantages of post roads? Why one class of citizens should be preferred to another? The diffusion of knowledge and information is as necessary to one as to the other; and the revenue from the post office would increase from year to year, to defray the expense of the additional post roads which are proposed in the bill.

Mr. STEELE defended the committee who had reported the bill, and explained the grounds on which they had proceeded in laying out the roads for the general advantage of the United States, rather than to accommodate a few trading places only on the sea coast; and with regard to the route to Charleston, to which Mr. BARNWELL had objected, he said it would cause letters to arrive there four or five days sooner than by the old route.

Mr. BENSON observed, that the constitutionality of the amendment is denied, and it is said that the Legislature alone is competent to establish post offices and post roads; notwithstanding this, there is not a single post office designated by the bill. Much has been observed respecting the Legislative and Executive powers, and the committee are cautioned against delegating the powers of the Legislature to the Supreme Executive. Without attempting a definition of their powers, or determining their respective limits, which he conceived it was extremely difficult to do, he would only observe that much must necessarily be left to the discretion of the Legislature. He was very doubtful whether it would ever be in the power of the House to form any bill that would give satisfaction. This he spoke from experience; for it had been often tried in the old Congress, and was as often defeated by the partial and local clauses proposed by the different members. For these reasons, he believed it would be better to delegate the power, and let the regulations be made by the President, than to be enacting supplementary laws year after year, at the instance of individual members.

The Committee now rose, and obtained leave to sit again.

APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAURANCE, from the committee to whom was recommended the bill making appropriation for the support of Government, for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, reported an amendatory bill; which was received, and ordered to lie on the table.

WEDNESDAY, December 7.

An amendatory bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, was read the first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time to-morrow.

POST OFFICE BILL.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill establishing the Post Office and Post Roads, within the United States. Mr. SEBOWICK'S motion being under consideration—

Mr. WHITZ observed, that there was a necessity for changing many of the present routes of the post, and although gentlemen have said that information on the subject cannot be so well obtained from this House as from the Executive, because no one member knows all the roads, yet it must be allowed that every road is known to some of the members. The people of the United States have suffered too long under the present establishment; four hundred and eighty-six thousand inhabitants, on the western side of the river Potomac, in the State of Virginia, are deprived of the benefit of a post road: will any gentleman say that nearly half a million of persons shall not have the privilege of a post office, or the means of information? He would not go into any lengthy observations, as the subject had been so fully discussed yesterday. He declared his opinion that the House had a right to send a person to lay out the post roads, agreeably to their directions, and therefore hoped the amendment would be negatived, and that the bill would be gone through with, with such reasonable amendments as might be suggested.

Mr. LIVERMORE said, that gentlemen had drawn arguments from the second clause of the bill before it was yet under consideration, from which they endeavored to prove an absurdity in the first clause, and thus take an uncandid advantage of the liberality of the committee in leaving the appointment of the deputy postmasters and branching offices to the Postmaster General. If, however, there be any defect in the second clause, it can be amended when we come to it; but to attempt to bring forward this section as a bar to the adoption of the first, is an unfair mode of proceeding, and seems as if intended to throw the bill out at any rate. With regard to what has been said of the responsibility of a high Executive officer, he did not deny the wisdom and integrity of the President, who would, no doubt, conduct this as well as he had always done any subject committed to his care; but this would be a very troublesome business to impose upon him, and those who are desirous of doing it, are not acting a friendly part. The Constitution has pointed out one certain mode for the Legislature to proceed in, and it is more proper for the House to determine on the subject than any one man; let the experiment be made for three years, or for ten years, and it will always be found in our power to amend the defects in the system as they arise to our view.

Mr. MADISON said, that the arguments which are offered by the gentleman who are in favor of the amendment, appear to be drawn rather from theory than any line of practice which had hitherto governed the House. However difficult it may be to determine with precision the exact boundaries of the Legislative and Executive powers, he was of opinion that those arguments were not well founded, for they admit of such construction as will lead to blending those powers so as to leave no line of separation whatever. The greatest obstacle to the due exercise of the powers vested in the Legislature by the bill, which has been mentioned, is the difficulty of accommodating the regulations to the various interests of the different parts of the Union; and this is said to be almost impracticable. But it may be remembered, that similar embarrassments appeared when the impost and tonnage bills were under consideration; on those subjects, the members were obliged to be governed, in a great degree, by mutual information and reciprocal confidence. In respect to the establishment and arrangements of the different ports of entry and clearance, and other objects, that was a business of much greater importance and difficulty than this; but it was accomplished. The Constitution has not only given the Legislature the power of creating offices, but it expressly restrains the Executive from appointing officers, except such as are provided for by law. As has been well observed by the gentleman from Delaware, the President is invested with the power of filling those offices; but does it follow that we are to delegate to him the power to create them? The reference to the appointments and arrangements made by the Executive, pursuant to the powers delegated to the Executive by the excise law, cannot be considered as a parallel case; no similar exigency exists to justify a similar delegation. The danger of infringing on the powers of the Executive, which has been suggested, and the caution to the House against touching on the appointment of officers, is a species of reasoning on the subject, which may be carried so far as to say that we ought not to make any appointments by law; and yet this has been done as in the instance of the appointment of the Commissioners for purchasing in the public debt, all of whom were appointed by the act making provision for the reduction of the public debt. Where is the necessity of departing from the principles of the Constitution in respect to the post office and post roads, more than in all other cases? The subject is expressly committed to Legislative determination by the Constitution. If the second section of the bill requires amendment, it can be rectified when it comes before us; and with respect to future cases, should there be a necessity for additional post roads, they can be provided for by supplementary laws; and therefore no reason on that account can be urged for delaying the provision proposed by the bill. He concluded by saying, that

H. or R.]

Post Office Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

there did not appear to be any necessity for alienating the powers of the House; and that if this should take place, it would be a violation of the Constitution.

Mr. Sedgwick would make a few observations, which he felt himself obliged to submit to the consideration of the Committee, as well to defend himself as his motion, from the unwarrantable attacks which gentlemen had made on both.

The powers of the Constitution, he was sorry to say, were made in debate to extend or contract, as seemed, for the time being, to suit the convenience of the arguments of gentlemen. The member from Virginia, [Mr. Madison] had discovered an additional quality of unconstitutionality involved in the motion under consideration. It was, that the creation of offices was by the Constitution confined solely to the Legislature. This position was undoubtedly just, if by it was meant that the powers and duties of officers must be defined by law. But he understood the gentleman to extend his meaning much further, and to have declared, in substance, that all offices, however subordinate and dependent, must be numerically provided for by law. The gentleman had, with his usual accuracy and precision, foreseen the application of his principle to the power which, on the same subject, had been delegated by the Executive, by which the Executive was authorized to parcel the whole country into districts, and to appoint the various officers necessary to execute the law. Nothing more was in that instance done, than to define the powers and duties annexed to the offices, but the limits to which their authority was to extend, and their number, was very properly left with the Executive. In that instance, such a delegation was indispensably necessary; nor was it, in his opinion, less necessary in the multifarious arrangements of post offices. That gentleman justified this necessity had in that instance justified the expedients; if so, the same conclusion might be drawn on the present occasion. But, for his part, if he should assume that member's opinions, he should be incapable of deriving consolation from the same source; for that there never had as yet been, and probably never would exist in the administration of this Government, a necessity so urgent as to authorize an usurpation of power. The motion before the committee was constitutional, or the reverse; if the latter, the same was true of the existing act in the instance alluded to. That in either instance, a supposed necessity could not justify the infringement of a Constitution which the members were under every obligation of duty, and their oaths, solemnly pledged, to support. Gentlemen should be very cautious how, on slight grounds, they assent to principles, which, if they were true, would evince that the Government had scattered through the whole country, officers who are daily seizing on the property of the citizens, by the assumption of unconstitutional powers. It was true, as had been observed by his friend from New York, [Mr. Benson] that it was impossible precisely to define a boundary line between the business of Legislative and Executive; but from his own experience, as a public man, and from reflection, he was induced to believe, that as a general rule, the establishment of principles was the peculiar province of the former, and the execution of them, that of the latter. He would, therefore, at least, generally, as much as possible, avoid going into detail. In adopting this as a general rule of conduct, he was not influenced by considerations which gentlemen in opposition to his motion had suggested—the pre-eminently great and good character of the man who was now called by unanimous suffrage to administer the Executive—for he had always considered that, with sagacious minds, that should be the season of political caution, when the Executive was in the hands of one to whom all hearts justly bowed. From the nature of the business to be transacted, he had drawn his conclusion; he thought an Executive officer, responsible to the public for the performance of an important and interesting trust, would inquire with more scrupulous caution, and decide with more justice, than could be expected from a popular assembly, who, from the nature of things, would be more remiss than consisted with a just determination; and he appealed to those gentlemen who were members of the last House, for a recollection of that apathy and torpor which prevailed on a former attempt to demark the post roads. He observed that the opposition to his motion on the ground of unconstitutionality, came with an ill grace from the gentleman who had reported the bill; for, by one section, the Postmaster General was expressly authorized to establish post roads not provided for by the bill, upon a condition that does not at all affect the present question; and by another section, the same officer was authorized to appoint, unrestrained, all his deputies, each of whom is to establish and keep an office. This, in his opinion, was not only expedient but indispensably necessary. It was, however, a delegation of power, attended by all those circumstances which rendered, in the opinion of that gentleman, the present motion unconstitutional. He said, no gentleman had contended for carrying into execution the principles they attempted to establish, to an extent which they would go. That no road can be a post road but such as shall be established by law. The bill establishes the road from place to place, leaving the intermediate distance untouched; as for instance, from Boston to Worcester. Between those two points is, or is not, a post road. If the bill should become a law, established? If the former part of the dilemma is embraced, then also by the motion, if adopted, will a post road be established from Maine to Georgia. For he supposed it impossible to make any well-founded distinction between the one case and the other. His motion then would as effectually establish a post road in the intermediate space as the bill in its present form; and all the objections which had been made to the former, would apply with equal force to the latter. Gentlemen had spoken in strong terms of the disinterestedness, information, and respectability of the members of the House, and of the popular confidence which resulted therefrom. No man had a more respectable opinion of the Representatives of the people than himself; he need not, however, observe to them, that they were men, subject to like passions and imperfections with their fellow-citizens. It could not have escaped the reflection of the committee, that the gentlemen who composed it, had a very important interest in establishing the directions of the post; that on the declarations of men thus interested, we must rely for the justice of our ultimate conclusions; on evidence of interested individuals, individuals who are, by their relation to the subject of inquiry, excluded, on principles of law, from all credit, must we rely for a knowledge of those facts which are to direct our judgment. Mr. Bourne and Mr. Gerry made some remarks, and then the question being taken, Mr. Sedgwick's motion was negatived.

DECEMBER 1791.]

Post Office Bill.

[H. or R.]

THURSDAY, December 8.

An engrossed bill making appropriations for the support of Government, for the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, was read the third time, and passed.

Memorials of the several Societies "for promoting the abolition of slavery, for the relief of free negroes, unlawfully held in bondage, and for improving the condition of the African race," in the States of Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, were presented to the House and read, respectively praying that the African trade may be totally prohibited to the citizens of these United States, for the supply of slaves to foreigners; that foreign ships, destined for that trade, may be prohibited from fitting in the ports of the United States; and that proper regulations may be adopted for the humane treatment of slaves imported into the States admitting such importations. Referred to Mr. Benson, Mr. Baldwin, Mr. Dayton, Mr. Smith, of South Carolina, and Mr. Learned; that they do examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereupon, to the House.

POST OFFICE BILL.

The House having resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the further consideration of the Post Office bill; and, after some time spent therein, agreed to establish the main post road as follows:

Wiscasset, Portland, Portsmouth, Exeter, Newburyport, Ipswich, Salem, Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Hartford, Middletown, New Haven, Stratford, Fairfield, Norwalk, Stamford, New York, Newark, Elizabethtown, Brunswick, Princeton, Trenton, Bristol, Philadelphia, Chester, Wilmington, Elkton, Charlestown, Havre-de-Grace, Hartford, Baltimore, Bladenburg, Georgetown, Alexandria, Colchester, Dumfries, Frederickburg, Bowling Green, Hanover court-house, Richmond, Petersburg, Halifax, Tarborough, Smithfield, Fayetteville, New Bridge over Drowning creek, Cherraw court-house, Camden, Statesborough, Columbia, Cambridge, Augusta, and Savannah.

The Committee then proceeded to consider the cross posts, pointed out in the bill; agreed to some, altered others, introduced some additional ones, and then rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

FRIDAY, December 9.

A message from the Senate informed the House, that the Senate have passed the bill, entitled "An act appointing Representatives among the People of the United States," with several amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill for establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States.

The subject was further discussed, several motions for additional routes of the post were made, lengthy debates ensued; some of the motions were rejected, and others agreed to. The Committee rose and reported progress; and then the House adjourned till Monday.

MONDAY, December 12.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, accompanying his report on the memorial of George Webb, referred to him, pursuant to an order of this House, of the twenty-fourth of February last; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The petitions of sundry inhabitants of the County of Northumberland, in the State of Pennsylvania, were presented to the House and read, praying that so much of an act, passed at the last session, imposing a duty on spirits distilled within the United States, as respects the duty on spirits distilled from materials the growth or produce of the United States, may be repealed. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, for his information.

A petition of Charles Hately, of the State of South Carolina, was presented to the House and read, praying that an exclusive prior right of patent may be reserved to him in a machine, which he has invented, for whitening or cleansing rice; provided he shall, within a reasonable time, comply with the requisites of the law, in such case. Referred to the Secretary of State for his information.

The following Message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

It is with great concern that I communicate to you the information received from Major General St. Clair, of the misfortune which has befallen the troops under his command.

Although the national loss is considerable, according to the scale of the event, yet it may be repaired without great difficulty, excepting as to the brave men who have fallen on the occasion, and who are a subject of public as well as private regret.

A farther communication will shortly be made of all such matters as shall be necessary to enable the Legislature to judge of the future measures which it may be proper to pursue. GEORGE WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, December 12, 1791.

H. OF R.]

Apportionment Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

The papers referred to in the said Message were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill fixing the future number of Representatives.

The first amendment, to increase the ratio to thirty-three thousand, being read,

Mr. GERRY observed, that the bill had passed both the Committee of the Whole, and the House, by a large majority. The principle, as he was informed, on which the amendment had taken place in the Senate, was to reduce the fractions which would result from the ratio proposed by the House; but he said this difficulty had been fully considered in the House. The representation, every body knows, is now unequal, and it must be submitted to for two years longer; and now it is proposed, at that period, to deprive the people of that representation to which they are entitled by the Constitution. He thought that it was extraordinary, after the ratio proposed in the bill had been agreed to by the House, by so large a majority, a proposition to alter it should have been agitated and carried in the Senate. Till some better reason than he had heard assigned should be offered, he should be against concurring with the Senate; he moved, therefore, that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate. The motion was seconded by Mr. WHITE.

Mr. LIVERMORE was in favor of agreeing to the amendment. He enlarged on the inequality in the representation from the great fractional numbers which would result from the ratio of thirty thousand. He was fully of opinion that the public business could be full as well transacted by one hundred and five members, the number which would be produced by a ratio of thirty-three thousand, as by one hundred and twelve or one hundred and thirteen, the number arising from the ratio of thirty thousand.

Mr. BENSON said, there was one idea which, if it had been considered in time, might have been adopted, and would perhaps have given very general satisfaction; and that is, that the Representatives of the United States shall amount to a certain number, according to the whole number of the people, say one to thirty thousand. This would have given a surplus number which might have been assigned to those States that have the largest fractional numbers. He had formerly voted for thirty thousand, but as the principle of equality was more particularly attended to in the amendment, he should now vote for the ratio proposed by the Senate. He observed, some States are stationary; the increased representation of the larger States, when once established, never will be receded from. This ought to be taken into serious consideration.

Mr. MADISON observed, that the idea of diminishing the fractional parts appears to be the only reason for the alteration proposed by the Senate. The aggregate of these fractions only has been taken into consideration; but, said he, if the fractions of any particular States will be augmented by the amendment, which would be the case, he conceived that the argument amounted to no good reason for agreeing to it; and this, he said, would evidently be the fact.

Mr. WILLIAMSON was opposed to a concurrence. He observed, in general, that the operation of the amendment was to diminish the fractions to the Eastward, and increase those to the Southward. The Southern States had suffered so much under the narrow of speculation, that he hoped no measure would be adopted to lessen the means of information to the people of those States, by denying them that proportion in the representation to which they are entitled. He regretted that some of the Southern States were not fully represented at this time in the Senate; he thought it probable, had it been otherwise, that a different decision would have taken place.

Mr. WHITE observed that the amendment would operate generally against the larger States.

Mr. SENEZAR differed from those opposed to the amendment. In his statements respecting the fractional parts to be produced by thirty-three thousand, he said they were fewer on the whole than would result from any other number between thirty and forty thousand, and those numbers both included; and this figures would demonstrate. Hence he deduced a greater degree of equality, and relative justice between the several parts of the Union. He disclaimed all local motives, and suggested the propriety of gentlemen forbearing any imputations of that kind, as totally alien from the subject.

Mr. BOUNDNOT defended the amendment, and observed that the Senate were in the legal exercise of their office when they passed it, and had most undoubtedly a right so to do. He read several calculations to show that the aggregate of the fractions would be reduced upwards of ninety thousand, by a ratio of thirty-three thousand, and that the fractions in every State, except one, would be diminished also by it. He adverted to the circumstance of the Southern States deriving so great an advantage from the Representatives they are entitled to by reason of their possessing slaves; and though he would not do any thing which would interfere with the Constitution on that point, every dictate of justice and equality was opposed to giving an unnecessary and undue advantage to the Southern States in this matter.

Mr. FINDLEY said, he had expected to hear something new on the subject, to induce an alteration in the opinion of the House, but had heard nothing. Fractions were fully considered before, both in the House and in the Committee. This he considered as one of the lesser matters pertaining to the subject. The best way would have been to have settled the ratio without knowing the numbers of the people in the several States; though that could not be done, as the numbers are known, yet he said he had made it the rule of his conduct in voting. The principle being established, there will be no room for combinations, nor any ground for complaints and reproaches respecting either Southern or Northern interests. He was for adhering to the principle as that contemplated in the Constitution

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Apportionment Bill.

[H. OF R.]

tion—and this he conceived the House had done—and he hoped they would not depart from it; and as to fractions, in competition with that principle, he considered them of very little consequence. He did not deny but a smaller number of Representatives would be competent to doing the public business; but despatch of public business, and a Republican representation of the people, he conceived were distinct things; he therefore should have been in favor of a larger representation. He controverted the right of the Senate to decide for the House in regard to this question—it was not a question of right and privilege—it appertains principally to the Representative body. He then considered the question as it respected the Senate—and he thought that a large representation was necessary as a barrier to the influence of that body; nor do I, said he, think this an unreasonable jealousy, when the constitution of human nature is considered. The Constitution of the United States is express on the subject, and now is the time when the people ought to enjoy the advantages of the representation of one to thirty thousand. Another consideration to induce a large representation, he deduced from the accumulation of money capitals in the United States, which have been increased beyond all parallel; the influence of these capitals will find its way into the House. He hoped no alteration would be made in the determination of the majority of the members.

Mr. GOODHUE said, the difference between the result of the two ratios was so small, that he did not conceive it would constitute a sufficient reason for disagreeing to the amendment. He stated that the difference between the Southern and Northern States, on the ratio of thirty thousand, was beyond all reason in favor of the Southern States; whereas the difference on that of thirty-three thousand was very small indeed, in favor of the Northern States; which evidently demonstrated that the principle of equality was involved in agreeing to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HULLHOUSE stated various particulars to show the inequality of the representation by thirty thousand, particularly as it respects the smaller States. He said he rejoiced that the Senate had given their opinion on the subject; they had a right to do it; they are the Representatives of the people, and on this question are probably more impartial judges than this House.

Mr. GERRY still supported his motion for a disagreement. He stated a case to show that in the ordinary course of population, a State at the next enumeration, which now contains three hundred and thirty thousand, will then have a much larger fraction, by a ratio of thirty-three thousand, than any now contemplated. He supposed the Senate had a different interest in this matter from that of the House. The larger States not being represented in the Senate, and the representation of those States which are stationary, or nearly so, being full—is the reason of this proposed amendment.

Mr. AMES observed, that he thought the only question was to consider whether the bill, as sent from this House, was a proper one; for, as to a smaller or larger representation, he considered all debate on that precluded, as the only difference was between one hundred and five and one hundred and thirteen. He then entered into a consideration of the bill as it respects equality; he asserted that the bill was not only improper as unequal, but was also unconstitutional. To show the inequality of the bill, he observed that Virginia, with six hundred and thirty thousand inhabitants, would have as many members as six of the smaller States, whose aggregate numbers exceeded those of Virginia upwards of seventy thousand. This inequality amounted to a direct violation of the Constitution, which expressly declares that representation and taxation shall be according to numbers. He amplified this idea, by showing how it would operate, if strictly adhered to in the assessment of taxes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON still contended, that the deduction from the bill was two members from the Eastern and four from the Southern States, which plainly showed that the amendment was in favor of the Eastern States; and added, that if the Southern States had been represented in the Senate, the bill would not have been sent back.

Mr. NILES suggested an amendment to the amendment of the Senate, which was to strike out one after the word "Delaware," and to insert two. This he was influenced to move, from the consideration of the manifest inequality of the representation of that State, compared with that of other States, particularly Virginia. He had no doubt, from the justice of the House, that if the amendment he proposed was not directly contrary to the Constitution, it would be agreed to. He then adverted to the Constitution, and read the passage respecting representation and taxation, which are to be apportioned according to numbers. He observed that there were evidently wanting to complete the sentence, these words, as nearly as may be—with this explanation added, he went on to show that the principle of equality would be more strictly adhered to, by admitting his amendment, than by rejecting it—for if Delaware contains fifty-eight thousand inhabitants, twenty-eight thousand were certainly nearer to thirty-three thousand, than thirty-three thousand were to fifty-eight thousand. He recited other passages of the Constitution, to show that his idea was compatible with it.

Mr. BENSON again suggested his proposition, of apportioning the representation according to the whole population. He was in favor of a large representation. The principle advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. FINDLEY) was undoubtedly just, that a large representation was necessary in a free Government, for information and security—this principle is not to be disputed. And with respect to the danger from corruption, undoubtedly patronage and influence would creep in; but he conceived that danger of a more serious nature was to be apprehended from another quarter. Gentlemen had mentioned the funding system. In questions of that kind, where one part of the Union thought themselves the only sufferers, the liberties of this country would be but a secondary consideration. For, in a Republican Government, the majority must rule, and the minority must submit, except they are oppressed, and then they have an undoubted right to resist.

H. OF R.]

Apportionment Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

Mr. GILES defended the bill. He observed that the apparent inequality in the representation of the smaller States, was rendered equal by their representation in the Senate. He enlarged on the idea of adhering to the amendment proposed to the Constitution. The inequality spoken of was, in fact, in favor of the smaller States. He adverted to the restive spirit in some of the States. Some of the measures of Congress, were so disliked, that the people in those States wished themselves separated from the Government. The people of the State from which he came, were so impressed with the idea of the ratio being settled agreeably to the bill, that he really feared the discontents of the people there would be increased to an alarming degree, should the amendment of the Senate be agreed to.

At this point the consideration of the amendment was postponed till to-morrow.

TUESDAY, December 13.

A petition of John Frederick Amelung, proprietor of the glass manufactory, at New Bremen, in the State of Maryland, was presented to the House and read, praying the patronage of Congress to his undertaking, and that Government will assist him with a loan of money, or other means, to further the same.

Ordered, To lie on the table.

A memorial of James Wilson, and others, in behalf of the Land Companies of the Illinois and Outback, was presented to the House and read, praying to be permitted to exhibit the titles of the Companies to certain Western lands, heretofore purchased by the said Companies, under the sanction of lawful authority; and also to make certain proposals for a reasonable compromise, between them and the United States. Referred to Mr. LIVERMORE, Mr. FITZSIMONS, and Mr. CLARK; that they do examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereupon, to the House.

The following Message was received from the President of the United States:

Gentlemen of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives:

I place before you the plan of a City that has been laid out within the District of Ten Miles Square, which was fixed upon for the Permanent Seat of the Government of the United States.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, December 13, 1791.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the amendments, proposed by the Senate, to the bill "apportioning Representatives among the people of the United States."

Some debate having taken place respecting the regularity of a resolution moved by Mr. BENSON, for apportioning among the different States (according to their respective numbers) the whole number of Representatives produced by the gross amount of the aggregate population of the United States.

Mr. SENDWICK moved to amend the Senate's amendment by inserting two members for the State of Delaware, instead of one.

In favor of this motion, it was observed, that the injury arising from unrepresented fractions of population is more severely felt by the smaller than by the larger States, as in the case of the State of Delaware, to which the bill allowed but one representative for 59,000 inhabitants, whilst the larger States would be much better represented, as their fractions would be divided among a greater number of Representatives. By the amendment proposed to the Constitution, a latitude was given to Congress in this particular, allowing them either to apply the ratio to the aggregate amount of the general population, and then to apportion the representation to the different States, as nearly as they could approach the ratio once established, or to apply the ratio to the population of each State; and if, in case of applying the ratio to the aggregate number of the inhabitants of the United States, the number of Representatives was found to be exactly one hundred, it appeared doubtful whether Congress could well avoid adopting the former mode; otherwise, it would be impossible to apportion the representation to the population with exact precision. Even if the United States were to be divided into districts of thirty thousand inhabitants each, there would still remain a fraction, and inequality, somewhere or other, must be the consequence.

In the bill, it was said, a manifest inequality appeared, as it allowed Virginia to elect twenty-one Representatives, whereas, according to the proportion which her population bears to that of the United States in general, she is entitled only to nineteen. The Constitution has said that "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers." But if taxation were to be striven by the bill, the inequality would be striking, and such as never would be submitted to. Rhode Island, for instance, being represented by two members, would have to pay $60,000; whilst Delaware, having but a single Representative, would pay only $30,000, although the difference of population is so small between those two States—Rhode Island having only about 68,000 inhabitants, whilst 59,000 are found in the State of Delaware. The time may come when the safety and good order of Government will require the imposition of direct taxes. But how can any such taxes be laid without a new census and a just apportionment of the representation? Before these steps could be taken the measure might be too late; and it would be unwise in the present Congress to pass any law that may, at a future day, deprive the House of one of its constitutional powers—the power of laying direct taxes. It was further observed, that the Constitution itself did not seem to exact so rigid an observance of the ratio as to require that any State should be deprived of a Representative merely on account of a trifling deficiency in the number of inhabitants. It appeared visibly to contemplate such a deficiency, and that there might be States whose entire population would not amount to the ratio that might be fixed on. Still, it had provided that such States should not remain unrepresented; but that, however small the population may be, "each State shall have at least one Representative." The Convention themselves, who framed the Constitution were not such scrupulous observers of trifling fractional differences, when they apportioned the representation; for, although, by the estimate of population, which was the ground of the apportionment, the State of New Jersey was, strictly speaking, entitled only to three members; yet, as she had a large fraction remaining, she was allowed four.

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Apportionment Bill.

[H. OF R.]

In opposition to the proposed amendment, it was said that the Constitution never contemplated a minute attention to fractions; that the weight given to the smaller States in the Senate was a concession, to compensate for any inequality that they might be subject to in the other branch of the Legislature; that the Constitution points out the apportionment according to their respective numbers of the several States; that to allow a Representative to be chosen by a less number than thirty thousand, would be an open violation of the express words of the Constitution. Even if it were not unconstitutional, yet it never could, as a permanent rule, answer the purpose for which it was intended. The same difficulty would again recur on other occasions; for, if it were laid down as a rule, that an additional member should be allowed only for a fraction above fifty per cent., it might happen that there would be found in one State a fraction of 15,001 inhabitants, and in another the precise number of 15,000. Suppose the State of Delaware to be in the latter predicament, she would have a representation of only one member for 45,000 inhabitants, whilst another State, whose fraction was 15,001, would be represented in the ratio of one member for less than 30,000.

The Constitution directs that taxation shall be apportioned among the individuals in the several States; whereas representation is to be apportioned to classes of thirty thousand in each State, and this according to a census first actually taken. Hence, as the one apportionment was intended to operate upon States, and the other upon individual citizens, any difference in the apportionment could never curtail the authority of the Government with respect to taxation. As to the inequality said to arise from one large State having as many Representatives as six smaller States, any argument drawn from that circumstance must lose its force, when it is considered that the six lesser States, sending twelve members into the Senate, possess three-sevenths of the whole governmental influence of that body, (which is much more considerable than that of the House of Representatives,) whereas the large State, having only two members, can possess but one-fourteenth part of the Senatorial influence. This circumstance operates to the disadvantage of the large State, and in favor of the smaller ones, which have, therefore, no reason to complain of an inequality that exists but in idea; or if it does exist at all, bears heavier on the larger State, to which a small advantage in the House of Representatives can hardly be deemed a sufficient compensation for the loss it must necessarily suffer in the Senate. The proposed amendment would but increase that inequality, by giving a greater proportion of influence to the smaller States, which already possess more than their due share of it, and derive this advantage from the very circumstance which is complained of as productive of inequality in the House of Representatives. On a former occasion, a proposition had been made to correct that supposed inequality, by allowing the State of Delaware two members in the House. It was made at a time when no local interests could be supposed to influence the decision; and it was then declared to be unconstitutional, unless that State should be found to contain sixty thousand inhabitants.

The question being taken on Mr. SENDWICK'S amendment, was lost.

The question was then put on agreeing to the Senate's amendment, and passed also in the negative; after which, the Committee rose, and reported accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, December 14.

Mr. SENDWICK, from the committee to whom were referred certain propositions of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill, entitled "An act for the relief of David Cook and Thomas Campbell;" and the same, being twice read, were agreed to.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The House then proceeded to consider the report of the Committee of the Whole, on the amendments proposed by the Senate to the Representation bill. It was moved, that the amendments proposed by the Senate, with the report of the Committee of the Whole thereon, be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole House; and on the question to agree to this motion, it was carried in the affirmative.

Mr. VINING moved this amendment—to strike out "thirty-three thousand," and to insert:

"That Representatives be apportioned among the several States as follow: that is to say, New Hampshire shall choose five, Massachusetts sixteen, Connecticut eight, Rhode Island two, Vermont three, New York eleven, New Jersey six, Pennsylvania fourteen, Delaware two, Maryland nine, Virginia twenty-one, Kentucky two, North Carolina twelve, Georgia two."

On the question to agree to this amendment, it passed in the negative. The Committee then rose, and the Chairman reported.

Mr. VINING renewed his motion in the House; where it was again negatived—ayes 23, noes 37.

And on the question to agree to the first amend-

H. or R.]

Post Office Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

ment of the Senate, the yeas and nays were as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ames, Robert Barnwell, Egbert Benson, Elias Boudinot, Sheshaub Bourne, Benjamin Bourne, Abraham Clark, Jonathan Dayton, Thomas Fitzsimons, Nicholas Gilman, Benjamin Goodhue, James Gordon, Thomas Hartley, James Hillhouse, Israel Jacobs, Aaron Kitchell, John W. Kitzers, Samuel Livermore, Nathaniel Niles, Theodore Sedgwick, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, William Smith, Jonathan Sturges, Peter Sylvester, George Thatcher, John Vining, Jeremiah Wedderburn, and Artemas Ward.

NAYS.—Messrs. John Baptist Ashe, Abraham Baldwin, John Brown, William Findley, Elbridge Gerry, William B. Giles, Samuel Griffin, William Barry Grove, Daniel Huger, Philip Key, Richard Bland Lee, Nathaniel Macon, James Madison, Andrew Moore, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, William Vans Murray, John Page, Josiah Parker, Cornelius C. Schoonmaker, Joshua Seney, Upton Sheridene, John Steele, Samuel Sterrett, Thomas Sumpter, Thomas Tredwell, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Abraham Venable, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willie.

The second amendment, after the words "South Carolina," to strike out "State" and insert "district," was agreed to.

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House do acquaint the Senate therewith.

THURSDAY, December 15.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, on the bill "For establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States."

Mr. Vining's motion for striking out the second section, which empowers the Postmaster General to establish additional post roads, for the purpose of substituting a clause making it his duty to report to Congress, from time to time, such cross post roads as may appear necessary, with information respecting the amount of the income of the Department, and the expense of such additional post roads, was taken into consideration. After some debate, the second section was struck out; and the substitute being withdrawn, a clause proposed by Mr. Fitzsimons, in lieu thereof, empowering the Postmaster General, under certain restrictions, to form contracts for extending the line of posts, was adopted. The Committee then rose and reported progress.

A message was received from the Senate, informing the House that they had taken into consideration their first amendment to the Representation Bill, which was disagreed to by the House, and do insist thereon.

FRIDAY, December 16.

A petition of Robert McCulloch was presented to the House and read, praying to receive certain arrears of pay as a soldier; and, also, relief in consideration of wounds received in the Army of the United States, during the late war, which have rendered him incapable of obtaining a livelihood by labor. Also,

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Post Office Bill—Apportionment Bill.

[H. or R.]

ter acquainted with the operation of such laws, transmitted to the House much valuable information on those subjects; and to such information the House ought ever to be open; as, on the other hand, the motives for adopting certain measures, ought always to be explained to influential characters in the different parts of the Union. Such conduct will produce the most salutary effects in reconciling the people to the measures of Government, when the principles upon which every law is framed, are explained to them, as well by the correspondence of the members, as by their debates, published in the newspapers. It is the duty of the members to disperse the newspapers among those people who cannot, perhaps, otherwise obtain them, under the protection of franks. Even along the post roads, the common packets of newspapers are not safe from depredation; but when once they get into the interior parts of the country, there is hardly any chance of their escaping; whereas, under cover of a frank, they are sure to reach their destination in safety.

If the privilege were confined, during the session, to letters sent from and received at the seat of Government, and the members limited to their own letters, and obliged to write the whole superscription, the increase of the apprehended abuses would be prevented; if it were further restricted, by limiting it to those letters only that are sent to or come from the State to which the member belongs, this would convince the people, that the privilege was intended for the benefit, not of the members, but of their constituents.

Further, it was observed, that every argument, which might be adduced in favor of withdrawing the privilege from the members of Congress, might be used with equal force in the cases of the President, Vice President, and every other public officer, mentioned in the same section. If the allowance of six dollars per day was a reason for subjecting the members to the payment of postage, every public officer ought also, on the same principle, to pay for his letters, as they were all compensated with equal liberality. If abuses were apprehended from the members, others were as likely to introduce them as they; if an increase of revenue was contemplated, the postage of all letters to and from the President, the Vice President, the Secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of the Department of War, &c., would contribute to that increase; but, on the other hand, those gentlemen must have their compensations increased, if their letters were to be taxed; for they could not be expected to pay for them at their own expense. If the privilege can be guarded against abuse, with respect to those officers, it can also be guarded in the case of members of Congress.

The establishment of the post office is agreed to be for no other purpose than the conveyance of information into every part of the Union; and a greater portion of that had been conveyed into many of the interior parts of the country, by the newspapers sent by the members of the House, than could be conveyed by other means, excepting on the main roads on which stages go. That information had proved highly serviceable to the present Government; for wherever the newspapers had extended, or even the correspondence of the members, no opposition has been made to the laws; whereas, the contrary was experienced in those parts to which the information had not penetrated; and even there, the opposition ceased, as soon as the principles on which the laws had been passed, were made known to the people.

As long as the privilege can be thus used for the general advantage of the citizens, it ought not to be relinquished by the members merely through fear of its being thought a personal privilege; it might be confined to members actually attending the session; they might be obliged to write the whole superscription, and even to add the date. In short, the wisdom of the House, it was hoped, would prevent all the evils apprehended from it, and retain the advantages.

The question being taken on the motion, for withdrawing the privilege from the members, it passed in the negative—yeas 21, nays 35.

MONDAY, December 19.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The House proceeded to consider the message sent from the Senate on Thursday last, notifying that the Senate insist on their amendment, disagreed to by this House, to the bill, entitled "An act apportioning Representatives among the People of the several States, according to the first Enumeration," and the said amendment being read, as follows:

"Strike out the first section and substitute the following:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the 3d day of March, 1793, and until otherwise provided for by law, the House of Representatives shall be composed of Members who shall have been chosen by the People of the several States, in the proportion of one Representative for every thirty thousand persons, in each State, computed according to the rule prescribed by the Constitution of the United States: that is to say, from the State of New Hampshire four members, the State of Massachusetts fourteen, the State of Connecticut seven, the State of Rhode Island two, the State of New York ten, the State of New Jersey five, the State of Pennsylvania thirteen, the State of Delaware one, the State of Maryland eight, the State of Virginia nineteen, the State of Kentucky two, the State of North Carolina ten, and the State of Georgia two members."

Mr. Ames said, the amendment proposed by the Senate, though a single proposition, involves two questions, which it will be proper, on this occasion, to discuss distinctly.

Is the bill wrong, as the House passed it? and is the proposed amendment of the Senate fit and proper?

The original bill gives the ratio of one member to thirty thousand persons, and proceeds to state the number of Representatives which the respective States shall have in the next Congress. If in this distribution of members it shall appear that we have not pursued the Constitution, the bill is a bad one, and it is our duty to concur with the Senate, at least in striking out the exceptionable part.

H. OF R.]

Apportionment Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

The Constitution directs that Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers. The whole number of Representatives being first fixed, they shall be apportioned to any State according to its census. The Rule-of-Three will show what part of the representation any State shall have. The wisdom and caution of the Constitution have left very little to Congress in this affair. Though Congress is to apportion the members, the rule of apportionment is fixed; the number of Representatives will be one hundred twelve. These are to be apportioned to each State according to its numbers. What part of the one hundred and twelve members will Virginia have according to its people? The answer is easily found. Virginia, having six hundred and thirty thousand persons, (which is her Federal number, after deducting two-fifths for the slaves, according to the Constitution,) is entitled to nineteen members. The bill gives her twenty-one. Is that right? Who will say that the words or meaning of the Constitution are pursued? Are the Representatives, then, apportioned or disproportionate? We may believe the result of figures. The sum is short and easy to reckon. Let us not, then, persist in a measure which palpably violates the Constitution. The argument might stop here; but to show how other States will be wronged by the bill, it may be well to proceed. If the Constitution had been silent—as we are men common sense would have told us, and as we are freemen we should have learned from our habits of acting, that an unequal representation is wrong. But the Constitution is not silent; and yet the bill gives Virginia twenty-one members.

The States of Vermont, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, and Delaware, have seven hundred and sixty-six thousand four hundred and twenty-eight persons, and they will have by the bill only twenty-one members. With upwards of one hundred and thirty thousand persons more than Virginia, they will have no more members than that single State. Thus Virginia has by the bill two members more than her due number compared with the whole Union, and not less than four as it respects the six States before mentioned.

From this view of the operation of the bill I draw this conclusion, which I presume is anticipated, that the proposed distribution of Representatives is neither just and equal in itself, nor warranted by the Constitution. If further evidence of this injustice should be demanded, it can be furnished. Representatives and direct taxes are to be apportioned by the same rule; and there is a manifest propriety in the rule. In the distribution of benefits and burdens, the Constitution has wisely excluded this means and temptation to partiality.

It is an additional security to our property that those who hold the power are made to feel it when they exercise it, and that exactly in the degree that they hold it. Taxes are to be apportioned according to the numbers in the respective States. It would not be allowed by the Constitution to use one rule for apportioning taxes, and another for the members. If two things are to be compared with a third, and made equal to it, it follows that they must be equal to each other. Let us suppose this bill to have become a law; and, for the more plainly showing its tendency, let us suppose Virginia to have six hundred and thirty thousand persons, (her true number,) and twenty-one members, and the thirteen States to have—as Delaware actually has—fifty-nine thousand persons each, and one member to each State; in the whole one million three hundred and ninety-seven thousand persons: let us suppose a tax to be laid equal to one dollar for each person in the fourteen States—that is, a tax of $1,397,000—Virginia, in point of justice, and by the Constitution, should pay only according to her numbers, or $630,000; yet she would pay twenty-one parts in thirty-four, or $1,007,000, being $377,000 more than her proportion. Whether with twenty-one members in thirty-four this wrong would be imposed or submitted to, is not my question. This may be called an extreme case; yet in fact Delaware, New Jersey, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Vermont, on a tax equal to one dollar a head, would avoid more than $150,000 of their just proportion: the justice and the constitutionality of such an apportionment of taxes are upon an equal footing.

Extraordinary as this statement may seem, it is not easy to show an authority in Congress to apportion a tax on any other principle. It would not do to deprive a State of its proportion of members, and yet to saddle it with taxes according to numbers. The departure from the rule of the Constitution in the case of Representatives, would be rendered both more flagrant and more galling by an adherence to it in the imposition of taxes. Such a comment upon this law would silence its advocates—such an execution of it would disfranchise the sufferers. But this is not the country, and I trust this is not the Government, to do a violence of this sort; therefore no tax would be laid: and yet, unless a new census should be taken, or a new law, at least, for apportioning Representatives should be passed, Congress might be found destitute of one of its constitutional faculties.

The gentlemen who vote for this law have been importuned to defend it. Anxious as we are, under the fear of seeing the Constitution and our primary civil rights violated, we have listened to hear reasons which would show some respect for the one and the other. It is needless to decide whether men's passions will be soothed, or their understandings convinced, by an argument of this kind: that, as the small States are equally with the large ones represented in the Senate, the advantage which the bill will secure to Virginia in the Representative branch is fit and proper, and that it was so intended by the Constitution. Is one inequality, if it really existed, to be balanced by another? Because the Constitution has secured to each State an equal vote in the Senate, are we at liberty to make a new Constitution as often as we make a representation law, to counterpoise it? and under a form of Government contrived to secure equal liberty, and to fix right above opinion, are the measure and the nature of this retribution to the great States to depend on our arbitrary discretion? This answer is perhaps more serious than the argument. Let it be refuted by itself.

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Apportionment Bill.

[H. OF R.]

Because the great States suffer wrong in the constitutional compact, will this bill do them right? Is Massachusetts or North Carolina benefited by giving Virginia two extra members? By this bill, the great States are injured as well as the small ones. The small ones are injured as it respects each other. Delaware will have one member, Rhode Island two; yet the latter has only nine thousand more people than the former. But the doctrine tears up the foundation of compact on which we stand, and, under the appearance of vindicating the bill from a charge of violating the Constitution, establishes a claim to violate it at pleasure.

It has been said that the Representatives are to be apportioned among the several States; that Congress is not to regard the number of the whole nation. It is not easy to see how the bill can be defended on any principle of distribution among the States. The Representatives are to be apportioned according to numbers. The number of members allotted to a State must correspond either with the number of persons in any other State, or the number in all the States. Compare Virginia with either of the six States before mentioned, or with the whole six. It appears that 130,000 persons in the latter will go unrepresented. Compare Virginia with the nation, she has two members more than her proportion. Why, then, is it so zealously contended that the apportionment is not to be made upon the entire number of the Union, but upon the census of each State? The bill is as naked of defence on the one comparison as the other. It departs as widely from the principles of its advocates as from those of its adversaries.

It is indeed intimated that you are to take the ratio of 30,000, and to apply it to each State, without regarding its operation. To justify this interpretation, the text of the Constitution ought to read, Each State shall have as many members as the ratio of thirty thousand, applied to the number of persons, will give it; but that instrument is very differently expressed, and much better: "Representatives and direct taxes are to be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers." Will any gentleman who votes for the bill say that it is such an apportionment? Will it accord with the Constitution to take, instead of such an apportionment, an arbitrary ratio, which, instead of apportioning, disproportion Representatives to numbers? The ratio mentioned in the Constitution, and in the proposed amendment to it, evidently relates to the whole number of Representatives which according to it may be had from the whole nation, and not from the number of people in a State. Any other sense, besides being unnatural, would disagree with the clause which directs how Representatives shall be apportioned.

By the ratio of one to 30,000 may be known the greatest number of Representatives which shall form this branch of the Government. Having determined the number, it remains to apportion the members according to the census in the respective States. Nothing is more natural, or corresponds more perfectly with the Constitution, than to find then to apportion them as the Constitution directs. But this method would not suit the present emergency; for that would give Virginia nineteen members, and no more. Instead of beginning with the whole number, the bill says, let us begin at the other end: give to Virginia her twenty-one first, and if the number should hold out, give to all the States at that rate. It seems, on trial, the number will not hold out to apportion in that manner. Still, however, says the bill, give Virginia her twenty-one.

Let the Constitution become what the bill makes it, a dead letter. Still, however, men, and freemen, will remain, who will preserve the departed spirit; for, before the Constitution was formed our rights were equal; and can it be believed that compact has made them less? Men equal in rights assented to a Government which preserves them equal in power. Thirty thousand citizens, residing where they may, must possess civil rights and powers equal to thirty thousand in any other part of the Union; yet, though a compact which ought to be inviolable, has ordained that representation, that is to say, power, shall be apportioned according to numbers, this bill, contradicting the language of nature and compact, directs that thirty thousand in Virginia shall have as much power as near sixty thousand in Delaware and several other States.

It would ill suit the seriousness of my present emotions to say how little the supposed expediency of a numerous assembly and many other favorite topics have to do with the debate. Constitutional questions are so frequent they have almost lost their power to impress us. But this touches the first organization of the body politic. It goes to stifle liberty in her cradle. It establishes the power of a part over the whole. If the disfranchisement of some of the States. If the rights of Virginia were invaded, I trust I should be equally zealous to maintain them. For the common right is the common security; but this bill tears the title deed in pieces.

Having compared the bill with the Constitution, and seen the result of the comparison, it remains to inquire what amendment will be proper and constitutional. In this part of the inquiry I will not pretend to say that I have arrived at equal certainty. I have no doubt that the bill is bad, but I am not equally satisfied of the best mode of amending it.

To determine what is right, some principle must be ascertained. That first principle is equality; it is another name for justice. That which is the right of the people, therefore, is the duty of the Government. But, as it is not practicable to apportion Representatives exactly among the several States, according to their numbers, it is our duty to approach as nearly to that equality as may be. If an apportionment is proposed, and it can be shown that a more equal one can be made, it becomes our duty so to make it. For, if we have an arbitrary discretion to reject the most equal apportionment, and to adopt a less equal, what is to restrain us from choosing the least equal of all, that is to say, having no apportionment at all. If this principle is not to govern us, then we are to act without any rule at all, and the Constitution was made in vain. We cannot have more Representatives than one to 30,000; but, in apportioning them, let us follow the Constitution, and do it according to numbers; and, when we stop, as we must, short of a perfect equality, it will be the Constitution that restrains us. In doing this, we shall assume no arbitrary control over the equal and sacred rights of the people. We shall have done all that we can to give them energy. It has appeared, on discussion, that the rule of 30,000, proposed by the bill, is so far from being the most equal, that no more capricious and unjust disproportionment of Representatives has yet been suggested. The ratio of 33,000, though not free from exception, is less unequal, and leaves less unrepresented fractions.

H. or R.]

Apportionment Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

The amendment (Mr. Benson's) which was proposed to the amendment of the Senate would increase the Representatives to one hundred and nineteen. Two objections have been made to this increase. It has been called a representation of fractions, and a number of changes were rung upon the idea. It has also been said to be as disproportionate a representation as that given by the bill.

As to the first objection, it is a mere play upon the word fractions; for, if the effect be, as it will appear to be, to produce a more equal representation, it may be retorted that the bill gives a representation by fractions; whereas the other mode makes one hundred and nineteen whole parts, nearly equal to each other, and gives a member to each.

This brings me to the next objection, and which has been strenuously urged against having the amendment of one hundred and nineteen members: that it will be as unequal as the bill. Then, I shall think as unfavorably of it. We should not hesitate to renounce them both.

But figures will show with certainty whether it is true that the amendment which proposes to add one member to seven of the States will operate as unequally as the bill. To refute this, I have made a table in which are seen the effects of the two plans which are to be compared.

Mr. Ames then read the following statement:

"Ratio of Representation."

"The amendment proposed in the House to the amendment of the Senate will make an addition of one member to each of the following seven States:

"In the fifth column of figures is the ratio according to which each State will be represented, in case the bill should pass as it stood when it was sent to the Senate.

States.	Members.	Numbers lost on the bill.	Ratio of the House.	Lost numbers, or fractions.	Ratio by the amendment which adds seven members.	No. short of 30,000 for each member.
N. Hampshire	5	5,455	35,455	21,820	28,365	1,635
Massachusetts	16	1,919	31,919	25,327	29,924	291
Connecticut	8	4,223	34,223	26,841	29,805	195
Vermont	3	12,766	42,766	25,533	28,511	1,489
New Jersey	6	5,911	35,911	29,559	29,826	174
North Carolina	12	2,138	32,138	23,532	29,460	540
Delaware	2	25,539	55,539	27,769	2,231
	52			according to the amendment.

"The following States, to which the rejected amendment makes no addition, stand thus:

States.	Members.	Ratio.	Total loss by the ratio.
New York	11	30,144	1,594
Pennsylvania	14	30,919	12,866
Maryland	9	30,946	8,514
Virginia	21	30,026	546
	55
Kentucky	2	34,352	8,704
Georgia	2	35,421	10,842
Rhode Island	2	34,223	8,447

Mr. Ames then remarked, that, if the ratio of 30,000 deserved so much respect as gentlemen had declared was due to it, because the amendment of the Constitution has adopted it, they cannot forbear to say that the bill, in every instance, except four States, departs from that ratio; whereas, the plan he was comparing with the bill has made it the common measure and applied it with less variation than perhaps any other scheme will permit. It appears, from the foregoing statement, that the ratio of 30,000 is applied with more equality, in pursuance of the amendment than by the bill; for fifty members will be chosen by six of the seven States to which one member is proposed to be added, and the ratio of 30,000 will be nearly observed.

The short numbers, in the case of five members, will be 1,635; of three members, 1,489; of twelve, 540. The deficiency of numbers for choosing sixteen will be less than 300, and for fourteen less than 200.

The deficiency for the choice of the two Delaware members will be greater, but that will be only 2,231.

Add to this, fifty-five members will be chosen by New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, at the rate of one to 30,000.

So that one hundred and seven members will in effect be chosen by the ratio of one to 30,000.

By the bill, some States, especially the seven to

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Apportionment Bill.

[H. or R.]

which additions are proposed, will lose numbers. In the plan of the amendment, they will gain. By comparing their loss in one case with the gain in the other, the degree of equality can be exactly computed, viz:

States.	Members.	Lost on each member.	Total loss.	Gain in each member.	Total gain.
N. Hampshire	5	5,455	21,820	1,635	8,175
Massachusetts	16	1,919	25,327	291	4,673
Connecticut	8	4,223	26,841	195	1,560
Vermont	3	12,766	25,533	1,489	4,467
New Jersey	6	5,911	29,559	174	1,044
North Carolina	12	2,138	23,532	540	6,480
Delaware	2	25,539	25,539	2,231	4,462
			178,171		30,861
			30,861
Difference of numbers in favor of the amendment					147,310

Mr. A. said, that if, by this plan, the seven States to which a member was added were gainers, that is to say, would be allowed members for a less number than 30,000, the gain was very little. In fact, the States would be represented very nearly according to the same scale. The bill, on the contrary, makes the scale or ratio vary from 55,000 to 30,000.

But if the advantage to the seven States, or the number less than 30,000 for one member, is compared with the loss or inequality sustained by the bill, it is found to be as 30,861 gain, by adding seven members, to 178,171 loss by the unrepresented fractions, as the bill stands.

Mr. Ames made a number of remarks to elucidate the statements and to show the unequal operation of the bill, and the fairness of the other plan.

After which, he proceeded to show that the States of Kentucky, Georgia, and Rhode Island would have the most cause to complain of fractions or unrepresented numbers. But the fractions of those three States amounted to the fractional number of one only of the seven States to which a member would be added. If no nearer approach could be made towards an exactly equal proportion, no just objection could be urged against the plan on the part of Rhode Island, Georgia, or Kentucky; for they would see the case could not be remedied. He then urged the equal operation of the plan between States having equal numbers, and contrasted the bill and the amendment which had been proposed in the House.

From the aggregate loss and gain on the two modes of apportionment in the foregoing statements, see the comparison more particularly between particular States, viz:

Virginia has 21 members. The loss, that is, the excess of her numbers over 30,000, is 546 Massachusetts has 15, New Hampshire 4, 1 to be added to each makes 21 members. The loss to these two States on 19 members is - - - - - 47,147 Or nearly as 90 to 1.

On the other hand, the gain on 21 members, or numbers short of 30,000 for a member, is, for New Hampshire and Massachusetts, only - - - 12,848 New York has 11 members. Loss, or excess of numbers over 30,000 for one member, is - - - - - 1,584 North Carolina 11 members. Loss - - - 23,552

Whereas the gain to North Carolina by adding a member will be only - - - 6,480 The difference between the loss and gain, or the balance against the bill, is - - - 17,072 Maryland has 9 members. Her lost numbers by the bill - - - - - 8,514 Connecticut has 7 members. Lost numbers by the bill are - - - 26,841 Vermont has two. Lost numbers by the bill are - - - 25,533

Difference against the bill is - - - 52,374 By adding a member to Connecticut and Vermont, the numbers gained will be - - - 6,027 Balance against the bill is - - - 37,733

The question is: Will the amendment, adding one member to Massachusetts and one to New Hampshire, cure the error? The answer appears, by the statement, that Virginia will be as fully represented according to numbers as those two States, saving a difference of 13,389, or within two-fifths of a member. In forty-two members, that fractional inequality is scarcely an error.

In like manner, by adding a member to North Carolina, the error or inequality compared with New York is equal to a fourth part the number for one member; whereas, by the bill, Massachusetts and New Hampshire will lose almost two members, and Virginia will gain two—a difference little short of four members.

Mr. Davton said that, if the vote which was about to be taken were merely to determine what should be the ratio of representation, he should have been contented to have remained in his seat and to have given a silent vote upon the occasion; but to him it appeared to involve in it a question and a principle of infinitely higher moment.

Two of the members from Virginia (Mr. D. observed) had candidly admitted the inequalities complained of in the apportionment prescribed by the bill sent up to the Senate, and had acknowledged the advantages to be given to their State over every other. They did not contradict the calculations nor combat the arguments which had been offered against it, but they boldly claimed and exacted those advantages as a right. This being the case, the question was, in reality, no longer whether 30,000 or 33,000 should be the rule of apportionment, but whether the Legislature of the Union were in future to frame their acts with a view to the particular and almost exclusive advantage of Virginia, and to bend and accommodate their laws to the interests and will of the people or Representatives of that State.

It was now also to be determined, Mr. D. further observed, whether Pennsylvania was hereafter destined to hold in her hands, as she had been in some measure used to do, the political balance of the States—to be the umpire in our disputes, and the centre of our Union. Judging from the votes upon record relating to this subject, and from some other circumstances, she was no longer intended or qualified to hold that important station. The ancient prophecy seemed to be verifying among a people for whom he had never considered it as intended. The Saviour of this country, the political Shiloh, was now among us, and universally known and acknowledged, and the sceptre was about to depart from Judah. These, (he added) were the well known preparatives to the summons which was soon to follow for their assembling at the New Jerusalem. He concluded with saying that not Pennsylvania alone, but far the greatest part of the Union, would have reason to repent the determination against the amendment of the Senate, and of adherence to the original bill. He, for his own part, believed that such a determination not only struck at the existence of the State sovereignties, but reached to the very vitals of the General Government, and that it must eventually produce either a general consolidation of the Union into one national mass, or an absolute separation of its members.

Mr. VENABLE supposed that a Virginian was possessed of equal rights with other men. If this be a Government of compact, he has equal rights with other men. But is it a reason, that, because Virginia has relinquished a part of her rights when this compact was forming, that she should not now hold what she has not resigned? The dispute on the ratio of representation does not affect Virginia; for, whatever ratio may be adopted, her representation must always be complete. Whether this be a consolidated or federal Government, Virginia will have her full proportion in every case except one—that is, in case she should be reduced to a less number than one member—so that, upon whatever grounds we take it, whether fractional or constitutional, the result will be nearly the same. Calculations, therefore, are out of the question; and, after all the arguments of Northern and Southern interests, of the differences between small States and large States, the comparison is brought to Virginia and Delaware, and the question to strike off seven members from the five large States and add to the seven smaller ones. Thus is one-sixteenth of the whole representation of the Union to be deducted unconstitutionally from one part and given away to another which has already more than a just proportion in the Government; for, although it is contended that we should not argue from the proportion the small States bear in the Senate, yet I hold it fair, in speaking of a Government of representation, to take the whole into view, and not to be governed by such partial comparisons. Under this consideration, I say that every man in Virginia, as represented in the two branches of the Legislature, is to a man in Delaware only as one to eleven and one-half, and in the election of a President only as one to one and one-half. This is an advantage enjoyed by individuals in the smaller States more than by those in the larger; and this advantage would be still increased by an adoption of the amendment of the Senate. Is it, therefore, just to increase this inequality? Is it fair that a man living in the neighborhood of another, with only the boundary line of a State between them, should be represented only in the proportion of one to eleven and one-half? I contend that the principle which comes the nearest to hold out equal rights to every man is the most proper one, and one that I will always contend for as a citizen of the United States and as a citizen of Virginia. I shall never wish to encroach upon the Constitution, but I will be equally against destroying the balance between the rights which the people have delegated and those they have retained.

Take the subject in any point of view, the five large States will send, suppose 81 members to the House of Representatives, and 10 to the Senate; while the nine smaller States will have 31 members in this House and 18 in the Senate—so that the majority of the representation in the one is overpowered in the other; and, taking the whole aggregate of the inhabitants of the United States, if divided into the majority contained in those five large States, and the minority in the nine smaller ones, it appears that the minority of the people can dictate to the majority in elections, &c. Government is formed by an association of the people upon principles of equality, and whilst we admit the argument of sovereignty retained to the States in Senate, let us not lose sight of justice, right, and equity. He concluded by declaring himself of the same opinion as formerly, in favor of the bill; and, as there were no reasons offered by the Senate, or for them, that could induce him to change, consequently, he could not recede from his opinion.

Mr. MADISON, after making a few prefatory observations, said he felt himself impelled to take some notice of the arguments that had been used this day on the subject before the House. He would not, however, attempt any reply to the gentleman from New Jersey, nor pretend to follow him in his flights of imagination respecting the New Jerusalem or the umirage of Pennsylvania, but leave it to those to whom such observations might have been addressed to draw their own conclusions. He was sorry that it almost always happened, whenever any question of general policy and advantage to the Union was before the House, when gentlemen found themselves at a loss for general arguments, they commonly resorted to local views; and at all times, as well as the present, when there was most occasion for members to act with the utmost coolness, when their judgments ought to be the least biased—it was to be regretted that at those times they suffered their feelings, passions, and prejudices, to govern their reason. Thus it is, that the most important points are embarrassed, the Northern and Southern interests are held up, every local circumstance comes into view, and every idea of liberality and candor is banished.

The gentleman from New York, (Mr. LARANCE,) when he introduced this subject at the commencement of the present session, did it on the most generous plan, and disavowed every principle of calculation so much, that he then declared he had not so much as made a single calculation of the different fractions which have since been introduced into the debate—his only object was to fix a rule on general principles, agreeably to the Constitution and to the preservation of the rights of the people; and this idea was approved by two of the gentlemen from New Jersey, who have since altered their opinions, although they then had no objections but as to the expense; the idea of fractions was not then contended for, but has since become the very essence of the Opposition; and we are called on to violate the Constitution by adopting a measure that will give Representatives for those separate and distinct fractions in the respective States; and afterwards are told, it is not to the fractional numbers in the States that they refer, but to the aggregate of the fractions in the United States. If this reasoning is good, why do the gentlemen stop at this boundary of a representation by States? Why not proceed to erect the whole of the United States into one district, without any division, in order to prevent the inequality they conceive to exist in respect to individual States?

He would not encroach upon the time of the House by protracting the debate, which had already swelled to an immoderate extent. Upon the whole, he said that this was a great question, wherein attention should be paid to the people, and a strict eye kept towards the public good, divested of prejudice; but he had heard with pain how much had been said to divert the House, by an attention to fractions, from the true object of general welfare; yet he hoped that the Government would be equally administered—that none of those predictions or threats thrown out in the course of the debate, that no mutilation of the Union, would take place; but, on the contrary, that harmony would guide the decision of this question free from every local consideration.

Mr. HILLHOUSE.—It has often been said this Government is a Government of confidence—and, taking this for granted, can it ever be supposed that a plan of representation, which is unequal and unjust, can excite this confidence? This ratio of thirty thousand throws an additional weight of seven Representatives into the scale of the large States. If this principle can be established on this occasion, it may be also extended to taxation. Northern and Southern interests have been mentioned. He was sorry the idea had ever been suggested, but as it had, there was no impropriety in adverting to it. Let a line, then, be drawn at any given place, and a ratio established which will do equal justice to the members on both sides of that line. A representation that will deviate from such a principle, it cannot be expected will give satisfaction, or be cheerfully submitted to by the people. The ratio of thirty-three thousand—figures will show it—will give a more equal representation than that of thirty thousand; and there has not, and, in his opinion, could not be any good reason assigned, why it should not be adopted.

Mr. BOUNDINOT said, he was pleased when gentlemen were desirous of appealing to candid and fair argument, in determining important questions. In the present case, he thought there was propriety in examining the principles of the bill and amendment, by the terms of the Constitution. It had been said by gentlemen, that the ratio, when adopted, must be applied to the number of citizens in the individual States, and that no regard was to be paid to the fractions occasioned thereby, because not regarded by the Constitution. This, he thought, was by no means conclusive. The House of Representatives was to consist of members chosen every second year, by the people of the several States; these members not to exceed the proportion of one to thirty thousand. It appeared to him, that the whole number of Representatives, to be chosen by the whole people of the Union, was the subject contemplated by the Constitution, as constituting this branch of the Legislature; while, by another part of the Constitution, it becomes the duty of Congress to apportion them, when so ascertained, among the several States, in proportion to their respective numbers. As an instance, suppose, for argument's sake, the aggregate number of the citizens of the United States to be exactly three millions; by applying the ratio of thirty thousand, the constitutional number of the House would be found one hundred: Congress should then proceed to apportion (for he could apply no other meaning to the word) the one hundred members among the States, as their respective numbers bore a proportion to the whole number of three millions. Thus, the Representatives from every State would bear an exact proportion to each other, according to the number of inhabitants in the State; and the whole representation would stand on principles of perfect equality. An equal representation appears to have been the desirable object of the framers of the Constitution—it is the very spirit of our Government. He insisted that this was the only mode of applying the ratio, and making the apportionment, that would hold good at all times, and under all circumstances. It cannot be said, with propriety, that the Constitution does not proceed on principles of perfect equality in this House, yet if the ratio be applied to the numbers in the individual States, it will always produce (as has been fully shown by several gentlemen) very great inequality, by large fractions being unavoidable: in one State we now find one of upwards of twenty-nine thousand. He acknowledged the amendment did not proceed on this principle any more than the bill, for which reason he fully approved of neither, but as the ratio of thirty-three thousand in the amendment produced a much greater equality, and came in effect nearer to his principle, (by reducing the fractions made by the bill nearly two-thirds,) he should prefer it, as he must vote for the one or the other.

It had been said that they were making distinctions between the North and the South—between the large and small States. He observed, in answer, that if gentlemen would introduce principles of inequality, that bore unconstitutionally hard on individual States, they ought not to take it amiss that the suffering States would complain of the injustice. The injured must complain, and the fault, if any, lies with the first framers of the principle.

If gentlemen wished for equality, let them adhere to the principles of the Constitution. Apply the ratio to the whole number of citizens, by which you find the number of Representatives to constitute this House; and then apportion those Representatives among the individual States, according to their respective numbers.

When gentlemen advert to the Senate, and say that the equal representation of the small States there, should be taken into the account, they do not consider the relative situation of the States, as represented in that House. There, the sovereignty of each State is represented, and not the individual citizen. Sovereignty is perfectly equal in every State; as sovereigns, there are none great or small; and if his information had been right, it was on that principle that the Senate was originally constituted—but that House was a representative of every individual citizen. On the whole, he was of opinion, that, by agreeing to the amendment of the Senate, they would secure the great principle of equality better than by the bill.

Mr. BOWDWIN thought the construction he had given the Constitution was a true one. It supported the spirit of the Confederation between the States, which was on the footing of perfect equality in proportion to numbers; it coincided with the spirit of our Government, which was equality; and although by it the number of members constituting the House was first ascertained from the whole people aggregately considered, without respect to the division of States in their political capacity, yet by the after apportionment among the respective States in that capacity, the wisdom of the Constitution appeared in thus providing a General Government for general purposes, and at the same time making each individual State (as a State) essential to the existence of that Government, thereby preventing, in the most effectual manner, an unnecessary entire consolidation of the Union.

Mr. B. said he had originally objected to the bill, on account of a too numerous and expensive representation, as well as of an unequal one, but chiefly relied on the last as unconstitutional, and therefore should still prefer a concurrence with the Senate.

Mr. GERRY observed, that it had been fashionable to speak of the ratio of thirty thousand as a Federal number. He did not know what name to give to the amendment of the Senate, unless it were called the fractional number. He then took notice of an argument which had been used to create suspicion that there was danger to be apprehended from a combination of the larger States; but this would appear a weak argument, when it was considered that the power and influence of the smaller States are equal in the Senate to those of the greater States. The thing is impossible, and if attempted it could not succeed.

He wished to know whether it was the opinion of gentlemen, that there was less judgment and less firmness in the House of Representatives than in the Senate? He hoped an equivoque would be preserved in the two branches, and that the balance would not be destroyed by constantly giving up the judgment of the House to every whim of the Senate. If a latitude be now admitted, that we may increase the ratio, before the expiration of the first ten years, the gentlemen in favor of the Senate's amendment may insist on a ratio of fifty or sixty thousand; but this is ground they know they cannot yet touch upon; and the same reason that should prevent us from adopting this extreme, operates against the amendment. The whole expense of Congress, from adopting the ratio in the bill, will not amount to two cents upon each citizen of the United States annually, and as population increases it will be lessened. Surely the gentlemen in favor of the amendment cannot object to this trifling expense. They speak of a liberal policy; I wish they would show us an example, by agreeing to the bill with a better grace than they seem to have exhibited hitherto.

Mr. MURRAY.—The subject has gone through a very ample discussion. When the question of representation first came on, the theory of the Government was ably resorted to by those who urged a large representation. Sir, I most heartily agreed in the principle on which, by a large majority, this House made thirty thousand the ratio. As I still am of that opinion, I shall be indulged by this House while I give my reasons for adhering with a firmness which may be deemed by some tenaciousness, to a rejection of the amendment of the Senate.

I voted for thirty thousand, because I saw in that ratio the constitutional wishes and expectations of the people. I deemed the largest possible ratio allowed by the Constitution to be the source of National Government, and its best security. Nothing, sir, which I have yet heard has convinced me to the contrary. It is unnecessary to recapitulate whatever has been said on this point. I must remark, however, that during the discussion, the members of this House who suggested that principle appeared to me to be convinced. They seemed to be masters of their own opinions, and to agree in this idea, without advert- ing to the doctrine of fractions, that the sole ques- tion was a point of theory rather than a measure of expedience; and they decided, by a very large majority, that in this House, immediately warm from the very bosom of the people, the ratio of thirty thousand was theoretically correct and practically useful. The bill was sent up to the Senate, who returned it with an amendment of thirty-three thousand as the ratio. I voted against that amendment, because it was an attack upon the principle of an enlarged representation; and because the idea of fractional representation aimed at by the amendment, was but a commutation of the evil of fractions from one State to another, from the Eastern to the Southern; and contained a surrender of the principle without an attainment of convenience.

Sir, it has been, in the course of debate, foretold, that that honorable body would be adverse to an enlarged representation here. Whatever has been argued, has been verified by experience; nor can any man be at a loss to see that the temper against large representation, though not openly avowed—for that would have been impolitic—has been covertly and successfully exerted under the semblance of equality of representation, by this doctrine of fractions. It was sent down into this House in the form of jealousy and suspicion, and it has produced its effects. It has roused the latent and local interests from their plans, and we have had debates entirely constructed on the tenets of Northern and Southern interests and influence.

A proposition was made by a member from New York, (Mr. BENTON,) and reiterated by the gentleman from Delaware. The object of this proposition was to sum up the fractions, and from the aggregate take seven members. Sir, if I was surprised, I confess I was delighted to see men who a few days before had opposed in theory the idea of a large representation, come down with moderation, and suggest this great principle even in a bad form. I imagined they were converted. I voted against this proposition, because I thought it first, unconstitutional, inasmuch as it could have been contemplated but in the consolidation of States; and because I thought it contained a solecism in politics. I deemed it unconstitutional, as the Constitution calls for a representation of the people of the respective States in a ratio of thirty thousand; and if this had obtained, it was to be done by collecting the fragments of constituents from States widely separate, and giving a representation of their fractions thus divided to that State which had the largest fraction. Thus, sir, the two from Delaware would be chosen by less than the Constitution contemplates, as there are not sixty thousand; and it is in vain to say that the member chosen by twenty-five thousand is elected by the addition of five thousand in any other State, in order to complete his proper number of constituents, for they do not elect him; and if it be said that he nevertheless does represent them as his constituents, it can only be by the idea of a consolidation having pre-existed, which no man has yet openly avowed to be the doctrine on this subject. The very first and most intelligible principle of representation in Government is, that the Representative is responsible to his constituents; but, sir, this, though an abstract truth, must be shown to the people, not in a fiction, but in a solid and palpable mode, congenial with their habits, and palatable to their understandings. In the adoption of this extraordinary proposition, the idea of virtual representation is the only one which at all protects it. No man, however, who knows the country, will tamper and trifle with so solid a part of Government as that of actual representation and actual responsibility. I never, sir, could consent to commute a known and practical measure of good, for a flimsy speculation, which could only have been invented to serve particular views, and was never thought of till it was discovered in what manner the fractions would affect particular States.

For these reasons, sir, I voted against that proposition. I shall now vote against the amendment of the Senate, because I find no cure, but a partial one, for the inconvenience of fractions; and even this is to be obtained at the expense of principle. Though this amendment may gratify some States, as New Jersey, that may have large fractions, it throws off the evil from them on other States. The fraction of Massachusetts may be smaller, but the State of Maryland loses a member, and will have a large fraction. Sir, I can find nothing in this amendment but the design to accomplish what I humbly conceive an unwhole- some end by improper means, and shall therefore vote against the proposed amendment.

Mr. FINDLEY said, from the various observations which had been made on the subject, it had become necessary that a vote should be given with due deliberation—such a vote as constitutional justice shall require—on the ground of constitutional justice; for as to general justice, it is entirely out of the question; and, indeed, general justice could not be done, on the principles of any Government under heaven. He adverted to the particular situation of the respective States, and said that this general justice was not attainable in any one of them. We are not to be moved by any threats; we act on principle, and we will in- trench ourselves in principle; and this principle of constitutional equality is all that we can pre- tend to. But it is objected that the ratio will produce fractions, and to get rid of this difficulty of fractions, we are to reduce the representation of the people, from the constitutional number of one to every thirty thousand; that is, we are to strike off one-sixteenth part of the whole representation of the Union. He urged that the representation on the ratio of thirty thousand would not be too great. He instanced the representation of Geneva and other foreign States. If there should arise any inconvenience from the present ratio of thirty thousand, Government were not obliged to wait for the expiration of ten years to remedy the defect; it was always in the power of Congress to order another census to be taken at any time. For his own part, he had not considered fractions as an obstacle to the bill; on the contrary, he was rejoiced that the population of the country increased so rapidly as to make those fractions always quickly increase to a whole number. To conclude, he was for going on general principles, which would certainly reflect the most honor on the proceedings of the Legislature.

Mr. W. SMITH said, he had hitherto voted uniformly in favor of a smaller representation than that which was contemplated in the bill, and in doing so he had acted from principle, without any reference to the doctrine of fractions. As the enumeration of his State was not yet known, it must be evident to every gentleman in the House that this was the case; but he now saw the necessity of changing his vote, since the bill had been returned from the Senate, where it seemed there was a disposition to modify every bill and every proceeding of this House just as they pleased. He thought it would have a very awkward appearance to the world, if the House should give way in all cases whatever, and more especially in the present instance, where the Senate had been equally divided, and the question was decided by the vote of a single member of that body—the Vice President. For these reasons, and the locality and fractions that had been introduced into the debate, he would vote for an adherence to the former decision of the House, in order to support that balance which should be preserved between the two branches of the Legislature.

Mr. BARNES said, that if this business is in future to be made a lottery, let us at once declare it; for if principle is entirely out of the question, it remains that we should declare explicitly the truth.

Mr. SEDGWICK said, that it was impossible for him to understand on what principle the gentleman from South Carolina and his colleague were to give their votes, (contrary to their former expressed opinion, excepting that they had discovered that the Senate concurred with them; which would not, he hoped, be generally considered as a good ground for changing, as it seemed to be embracing contradiction for the purpose of contradiction;) unless, as the gentleman had declared, that at the time he formed his opinion he did it on principle, by the abandonment of which he could acquire an undue weight to the district of country from which he came, by departing from a just equality in representation.

Gentlemen had seemed to wish to obscure the merits of the present controversy, by considering it as a contest between the larger and smaller States, and by supposing that the latter would be compensated for their loss of weight and influence in this House, which would result from an unequal apportionment of the representation, by the undue influence which they possessed in the Senate. He himself came from a very large and important State. Justice, however, obliged him to declare that this mode of conducting the argument, only tended to divert the judgment from the true merits of the question. What had the distribution of the powers of the Government—which, by the Constitution, was adjusted to the interests and sovereignty of the States—to do with the apportionment of representation, as it respected either its numbers or the various interests which were to be secured by equality of influence? Was it possible that any mind should be so weak as to discover that the constitutional organization of the Senate was not wholly irrelevant to those considerations which should influence in the decision of the present question?

In contemplating the subject before the House, he observed, that a vast variety of circumstances were entitled to deliberate consideration. Among others, the number of Representatives compared with the number of inhabitants of the United States; in determining which, the nature and objects of the Government were administering, its machinery, the distribution of its parts, the construction of the other branch of the Legislature, and many other objects, were to be considered; that we had not on any of these subjects, the aid of experience, and that the Government itself was a novel experiment. He need not, therefore, add that there were no data from which any certain conclusion could be drawn. All was uncertainty and conjecture. Was an apportionment of a ratio of thirty thousand eligible? As an abstract proposition, he was disposed to give it a preference to any other; but if he was asked wherefore, he could only answer, that it was rather an inclination of sentiment, than the result of rational reflection. He would not, therefore—because justice would not permit it—sacrifice to the effect of conjecture, which might be only the result of whim, the important and indispensable duty he owed to respect the claims of States to equality.

If an apportionment was made by a ratio of thirty thousand, the members would be seven more than if the amendment of the Senate were adopted. Whichever proposition was agreed to, would any one venture to affirm that the liberties of the people would be more or less secure, the House aggregate more or less wise, or the due balance between the two Houses better or worse adjusted? Considering thus the subject, does not the earnestness with which gentlemen contend for the proposition of the House, appear perfectly unaccountable? But in the progress of this business, it is discovered that an application of the principle of the House gives a balance of weight and influence to one part of the United States, to which it is not entitled by the equal apportionment contemplated by the Constitution. This, it is agreed by all, is demonstrated by figures. Nor can it be denied that equality is among the most essential principles of representation, and expressly provided for by the Constitution, as far as would consist with the state of our society, having a due regard to our particular circumstances. Yet, all important as this consideration is, it is to be sacrificed, with all the interests involved in it, to a fanciful idea of theory—theory unsanctioned by experience.

For his own part, he believed that wise policy would be found perfectly to coincide with, and reconcile the various interests of this extensive country. It could not, however, have escaped the observation of every gentleman, that there existed an opinion of every gentleman, that there existed the Northern and Southern States. The influence of this opinion had been felt in the discussion of every important question which had come under the consideration of the Legislature. The extreme anxiety of gentlemen on the present occasion, would render all other evidence superfluous on this subject. Such a belief, he said, however ill-founded, would, as long as it continued, have the same effect as if it existed in fact. Feeling the weight of this observation, and the influence it ought to have to give to every part of the United States, as nearly as might be, a due proportion of constitutional weight in the public councils, he was incapable of reconciling the conduct of members who were disposed to sacrifice the most important interests of their immediate constituents, to their strange ideas of conjectural perfection. It seemed to him that the gentlemen who came from the North, and on this occasion dissented from their neighbors, were disposed blindly to surrender all the important interests of their immediate constituents to the arbitration of those, the whole course of whose conduct had demonstrated that they thought those interests adverse to their own.

He concluded, by warning those who had hitherto composed a majority on this subject, to reflect on the danger that would result from a pertinacious adherence to a measure so productive of the sources of jealousy; and he called on their generosity, magnanimity, and justice, to respect the claims of the minority to an equal weight in the Government, on the principles of the Constitution.

Mr. GERRY made some reply to his colleague, Mr. SEDGWICK, respecting locality of interests, and declared that he never would agree to a reduction of the people's representation.

Mr. LAURANCE said, he had always advocated a large representation, without any reference to the part of the Union from which the members are to come. Thirty thousand will give the largest number that we can get; he could have wished it had been larger, but as it could not, he should vote against thirty-three thousand, which would diminish the number; and this was the principle he acted upon. If an equality is the object, is there not a number which will produce a still greater equality than that proposed by the Senate? If there is, there is no principle in the ratio of thirty-three thousand, for it ought to be carried to the full extent to make it perfectly equal. He was sorry that the discussion of the question had excited those disagreeable reflections which had been made, and that the discussion of general principles was dwindled into a debate on fractions, and on the interests of the Northern and Southern parts of the Union. He was persuaded this would not be the proper mode of obtaining the end, which ought to be in view, but would only tend to disturb the tranquility and harmony that ought to exist in investigating and determining this subject.

Mr. KITTEPA having at first voted for thirty thousand, he thought it proper to offer a few reasons for altering his opinion. He had voted for thirty thousand because it would give the largest representation, but finding its unjust and unequal operation, in respect to a majority of the States, he had determined to vote for the ratio of thirty-three thousand. He then noticed the remark of Mr. FINDLEY, that the injustice may be corrected by an enumeration at an earlier period than that proposed in the Constitution; he observed, that this was in effect saying, let us do injustice, and wait a number of years, and then justice shall be done. Why not do justice now, as far as is in our power? Mr. LAURANCE had said, why not adopt a ratio that would leave less fractions than thirty-three thousand? He said, this was in effect saying, we would not do it to any degree whatever. The superior degree of equality which would result from the amendment of the Senate, had been so fully demonstrated, that he should now vote to recede from the disagreement of the House to it.

The question being now put, that the House do recede from their disagreement to the said amendment, it passed in the negative—yeas 27, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Fisher Ames, Egbert Benson, Elias Boudinot, Shearjashub Bourne, Benj. Bourne, Abraham Clark, Jonathan Dayton, Thomas Fitzsimons, Nicholas Gilman, Benjamin Goodhue, James Gordon, Andrew Gregg, Thomas Hartley, James Hillhouse, Israel Jacobs, John W. Kittera, Amasa Learned, Samuel Livermore, Nathaniel Niles, Theodore Sedgwick, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, Jonathan Sturges, Peter Sylvester, George Thatcher, Jeremiah Wadsworth, and Artemas Ward.

NAYS.—Messrs. John Baptist Ashe, Abraham Baldwin, Robert Barnwell, John Brown, William Findley, Elbridge Gerry, William B. Giles, Samuel Griffin, William Barry Grove, Daniel Huger, Philip Key, John Laurence, Richard Bland Lee, Nath'l Macon, James Madison, Andrew Moore, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, William C. Schoonmaker, Joshua Seney, William Smith, John Steele, Samuel Sterrett, Thomas Sumpter, Thomas Tredwell, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Abraham Venable, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willis.

A motion was then made, and the question being put, that the House do adhere to their disagreement to the said amendment, it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 32, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. John Baptist Ashe, Abraham Baldwin, Robert Barnwell, John Brown, William Findley, Elbridge Gerry, William B. Giles, Samuel Griffin, William Barry Grove, Daniel Huger, Philip Key, John Laurence, Richard Bland Lee, Nath'l Macon, James Madison, Andrew Moore, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, William C. Schoonmaker, Joshua Seney, William Smith, John Steele, Samuel Sterrett, Thomas Sumpter, Thomas Tredwell, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Abraham Venable, Anthony Wayne, Alex'r White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willis.

NAYS.—Messrs. Fisher Ames, Egbert Benson, Elias Boudinot, Shearjashub Bourne, Benj. Bourne, Abraham Clark, Jonathan Dayton, Thomas Fitzsimons, Nicholas Gilman, Benjamin Goodhue, James Gordon, Andrew Gregg, Thomas Hartley, James Hillhouse, Israel Jacobs, John W. Kittera, Amasa Learned, Samuel Livermore, Nathaniel Niles, Theodore Sedgwick, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, Jonathan Sturges, Peter Sylvester, George Thatcher, Jeremiah Wadsworth, and Artemas Ward.

Ordered, That the Clerk of this House do acquaint the Senate therewith.

A message from the Senate informed the House that they have passed the bill, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792," with several amendments; to which they desire the concurrence of this House.

TUESDAY, December 20.

A Message was received from the President of the United States, with the copy of a Letter which he had received from the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and of sundry documents which accompanied it, relative to a contract for the purchase of a certain tract of land bounding on Lake Erie, together with a copy of a Report of the Secretary of State on the same subject.

The said Message was read, and, together with the papers accompanying it, ordered to be referred to Mr. MADISON, Mr. BANCROFT, and Mr. SPENCER, with instruction to prepare and bring in a bill or bills to make provision for carrying into effect the contract therein specified.

The House proceeded to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of Government for the year 1792," and the same being read were agreed to.

A message from the Senate informed the House that the Senate do adhere to their amendment to a disagreement to which this House has adhered, to the bill entitled "An act Apportioning Representatives among the People of the several States, according to the First Enumeration."

POST OFFICE BILL.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill for establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH moved an amendment, to withdraw the privilege of franking from the members of both Houses of Congress.

In support of this motion, it was said, that the grand security which the people of the United States have in their Representatives is, that those Representatives are subject to the same regulations as this was not the case.

Congress, in this case, assume to themselves a privilege, which they refuse to the people; they took money from their constituents, and paid none themselves.

The people viewed this privilege with a jealous eye, and could not be pleased to see it enjoyed by Congress, whilst neither the members of the State Assemblies, nor even the Governors were indulged in it.

Congress enjoys only chartered rights; and all rights not expressly mentioned in the charter, are of course excluded.

The Constitution is their charter; the Convention, who framed it, had, no doubt, well considered the whole subject of privileges, and accurately defined all such as they wished the Legislative body should enjoy distinct from their constituents.

In the enumeration of those privileges, there is not a syllable tending to exonerate them from their share of the common burden of postage; they have no constitutional claim to such an immunity, and if they assumed it, they would increase the burden on their constituents.

The post office, if unable to maintain itself, must derive its support from other sources of revenue. Already the members of both Houses send and receive, during their session, as many letters through the General Post Office as all the other inhabitants of Philadelphia; those letters, if paid at the usual rates, would amount to half the postage of the United States.

The number and bulk of the franked letters and packets excluded the newspapers from the mail, and thus prevented the circulation of intelligence; if the evil increased (and there was no probability of its being diminished, except by the utter abolition of the privilege) it would eventually prove the ruin of the post office. The example of Britain showed to what an enormous height the abuse of such a privilege may be carried; and though similar abuses may not as yet have taken place here, yet it could hardly be doubted that many unnecessary letters were daily sent by the post, which never would have been written if subject to postage; those letters are not only unproductive, but an actual expense to the post office, as the postmaster receives a certain per centage on these, as well as upon other letters. The privilege of franking is moreover unequal in its operation; while some members use it only for the purpose of transmitting political information to their constituents, others, absent perhaps during the whole session, use it for very different purposes: to men in trade it was a considerable advantage, amounting, probably, in some instances, to a hundred dollars a year. It would be better to take away the privilege entirely, and reduce the general rates of postage one half, or to allow the members, at the close of each session, to make a charge for all letters on public business, from their constituents, or to make them an allowance in gross to defray the expense of postage; better, even, if necessary, to make an addition to the compensation which the members receive for their services, if the present one be found incompetent to their honorable support.

On the other hand, it was observed, that the privilege of franking was not assumed by the members for their own private accommodation, but for the benefit of their constituents, to transmit to them every necessary information respecting the operations of the General Government, and to receive from them such information as they might have to communicate. Petitions are frequently enclosed to members; and if these were to be subject to the payment of postage, the privilege of petitioning the House, would be in a great measure destroyed. The diminution of revenue which the post office might in some instances suffer from the privilege of franking, ought not to be deemed a sufficient reason for abolishing that privilege; since it is allowed, that the object contemplated in the establishment was the general convenience, and an easy and speedy mode of disseminating public and private intelligence. Revenue was but a secondary consideration. Although the citizens who live at the Seat of Government, and have daily opportunities of learning from the newspapers what public measures are going forward, may not be materially affected by the abrogation of the privilege, yet the case would be widely different with those who live at a distance, especially when fiscal operations were on foot; those who are informed, will make a prey of those who are ignorant, and destructive speculation will enrich the few, at the expense of the many. In a Government of opinion (which is the Government of America) much greater reliance is to be placed on the confidence of the people than upon any other circumstance: that confidence can only be the result of the fullest information; but if the privilege of franking were taken away, the avenues of information would be in a great measure closed; for the members could not undertake, at their own private expense, to transmit intelligence to every part of the Union; yet the citizens have a right to expect information, not only of the acts of Government, but also the principles upon which they were grounded. The abuses of the privilege, that have prevailed in England, do not prevail here; and its abolition would give general dissatisfaction, particularly in the more distant parts of the Union, where information would be subject to a very high tax, if circulated through the post office, at the ordinary rates of postage. Of those bundles of letters received and despatched by members of Congress, many (though far from being unnecessary, as had been said) would perhaps never be written, if they were not to pass free of postage; and thus that free communication of sentiment between the Representative and constituent, which is so essential in a Government like this, would be in a great measure cut off; and the post office would gain little or nothing by it, as those packets of newspapers, bills, reports, &c., would either be sent by private hand, or not sent at all; even here an inequality would prevail, as the people who live near the Seat of Government, and all along the main road, could, from the greater frequency of opportunities, receive such packets with more ease and regularity, whilst those in more remote situations could seldom or never receive them, unless by the mail. The expense arising from the per centage to the postmaster on the free letters, is but trifling, as in such cases he receives no more for a packet of two ounces than for a single letter; and as to the idea of allowing the members to make a charge for their letters, this would be no better than receiving with one hand and paying away with the other. If, however, it were found absolutely necessary to take precautions against the abuses that were apprehended, this might be done by limiting the number or weight of letters that should go free by any one post, without entirely preventing the interchange of sentiments between the Representative and his constituents.

The Committee then rose, without taking the question on the amendment.

WEDNESDAY, December 21.

Mr. MADISON, from the committee appointed, presented a bill for carrying into effect a contract between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania; which was received, and read the first time.

THE POST OFFICE BILL.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole (Mr. W. SMITH in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the Post Office Bill. After having proceeded through all the remainder of the bill, except the eighth, the twenty-second, and twenty-third sections, (respecting the carriage of newspapers,) which were postponed for future consideration, the Committee rose and reported progress.

THURSDAY, December 22.

A bill for carrying into effect a contract between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania was read the second time, and committed.

A memorial and address of the people called Quakers, from their several religious societies in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia, was presented to the House and read, praying that Congress will adopt such measures as, in their wisdom, may be deemed salutary and effectual, for securing peace and friendship with the original holders of this land.

Ordered, That the said memorial and address do lie on the table.

Mr. GEARY, from the committee to whom were referred several motions for obtaining annual and regular statements of the receipts and expenditures of all public moneys, and for a due examination of such statements, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT, &c.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President, in case of vacancies in the offices, both of President and Vice President."

The bill was read by the Chairman, and being again read by the Chairman, Mr. TUCKER moved to amend this clause by striking out these words, "except in cases in which an extraordinary election of President and Vice President shall take place, as hereinafter specified." This motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER made some general observations on the great objects of the bill, and adverted to the term proposed for the choice of Electors of President and Vice President, observed that he had his doubts whether it would not be best to give a longer time. He enlarged on the disagreeable consequences which would probably ensue, in case there should not be a choice by the Electors; as the matter must then be determined by the House, voting according to the Constitution, by States. He descanted on the pernicious consequences which might result from the collision of parties, and the working of passions in the breasts of men whose ardor would probably be excited to the greatest degree on such an occasion; every reasonable measure should be adopted to prevent the evils which he deprecated; he therefore moved that the words "thirty days" should be struck out, in order to give the people a longer time to give in their votes for Electors.

Mr. WHITE objected to the motion. He conceived it was calculated to produce the very mischief the gentleman appeared to deprecate. If it had been possible, he could have wished that the Electors should meet and give in their votes on the very day of their being chosen; he wished as much as the gentleman to adopt measures to prevent the evils he mentioned; but did not think the motion would conduce to that object; he thought the time should rather be contracted than extended.

Mr. DAYTON also objected to the motion; he thought fourteen days would be a more proper time; it was the design of the Constitution, though it is not expressed, that the President should not know the characters to whom he is indebted for his election.

Mr. SEDGWICK observed, that the objections would be very proper was it certainly known that the Electors would always agree in a choice; but this he conceived, it was hardly possible should always be the case; and what will then take place? The election devolves on this House, and the Electors will then be known, and liable to all that intrigue and cabal which has prevailed in other countries. He left it to the consideration of the Committee to determine on the immense importance of providing in season against the evils of a contested election, in the case now before them.

Mr. BALDWIN objected to the motion; but said if it was struck out, he should then move to insert a clause which should assign different periods according to the circumstances of the several States, so that the Electors should meet as nearly as possible at the same time in all the States.

Mr. NILES objected to the motion; and the question being put it was negatived.

The clause which makes it the duty of the Executive of the several States to cause the names of the Electors to be certified, was objected to.

Mr. NILES observed, that no person could be called upon to discharge any duty on behalf of the United States, who had not accepted of an appointment under their authority. He thought that this was opening the door too wide, and involves a blending of the respective powers and duties of each, which are not warranted by the Constitution; and he observed that he should be sorry that the Government of the United States should attempt to exercise a power which they are not competent to carrying into execution.

He moved that the clause should be struck out.

Mr. SEDGWICK observed that if Congress were not authorized to call on the Executives of the several States, he could not conceive what description of persons they were empowered to call upon.

Mr. NILES said he considered this section as degrading to the Executive of the several States; and inquired what is to be done in case those Executives should refuse to comply with the requisition?

Mr. CLARK said, it appeared to him that the Committee was creating difficulties where none before existed. He observed that the choosing these Electors was a privilege conferred on the people, and that this was merely pointing out the mode of exercising this privilege; he thought the clause stood very well and would create no uneasiness whatever.

Mr. HULLHOUSE said, he considered the provision improper. It imposed a duty on the Supreme Executives of the several States, which they might, or might not execute; and thus the necessary certificates may not be made. He seconded the motion to strike out the clause, and proposed a substitute making it the duty of the Electors to procure for themselves the necessary certificates.

Mr. LIVERMORE spoke in favor of the clause; he did not consider it either as an undue assumption of power, or degrading to the Executives of the respective States.

Mr. BARNWELL said, a small addition to the clause would in his opinion obviate every difficulty; the words he proposed to insert were—"or such person as the Executive may appoint."

Mr. STURGES moved to strike out "Executive," and insert "the Legislature."

Mr. J. SMITH said, it appeared to him that the proposed alteration would amount to exactly the same thing; for the duty of giving the certificate would eventually devolve on the Executive.

The motion for striking out the clause was negatived.

The ninth section provides, that in case of vacancies in the offices of President and Vice President, the President of the Senate pro tem. or the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall act as President.

Mr. WHITE moved the section should be struck out. He said the House had formerly discussed the subject and could not agree; the first part of the bill is necessary; this is not of immediate importance to be attended to.

Mr. FRIZZIMONS said, he supposed the question must be determined some time or other, and he knew of no reason why it should not be decided at this time; to strike out the clause would, in effect, be to declare that the House could not agree.

Mr. WILLIAMSON was in favor of striking out. Mr. LIVERMORE objected to the motion; he said no two subjects could possibly be more intimately connected; and the provisions of the bill are such as to render the intermission, during which this agency was to take place, as short as possible; he hoped the clause would not be stricken out.

Mr. WHITE added some further objections to the section; he said it was distinct from the bill, and though a majority of the Committee were in favor of the characters nominated, yet he thought it would be best to make it the object of another bill, and of an independent discussion.

Mr. SEDGWICK said, he hoped the section would not be struck out, especially if there is a majority of the Committee in favor of it. He observed, that last session there was no decision in the case; he conceived it necessary that the business should be now decided on; and adverted to the particular characters named, he said they were as far removed from any influence of the Executive as any persons that could be possibly pointed out.

Mr. BARNWELL was in favor of going into a discussion of the subject at this time. He said there was a large number of the present House who had not heard the observations offered in the last Congress; he supposed the present as proper a time to consider the subject as any that could occur. If gentlemen who are opposed to the section will offer their objections, he should be glad to hear them; if they were conclusive, he should vote to strike out the section. If nothing was offered, he should vote against the motion.

Mr. STURGES mentioned several objections to the section, which in his opinion rendered it unconstitutional; he could not find that the Speaker of the House, or President of the Senate pro tem. were officers of the Government in the sense contemplated by the Constitution. The compensations of the President and Vice President are settled by the House; the Speaker would have to decide on those compensations; this he said rendered him evidently improper. He further observed that the consequence would be, caballing and electioneering in the choice of Speaker.

Mr. WHITE said, the Speaker was not a permanent officer, if he could be considered as one in any point of view; but he was of opinion, that he was no more an officer of Government than every other member of the House.

The question for striking out the section was negatived.

Mr. STURGES then moved to strike out the words, "the President of the Senate pro tem.," and the Speaker of the House of Representatives."

Mr. GILES stated the reasons which he conceived fully proved the unconstitutionality of the clause. The characters referred to he did not think were officers. If they had been considered as such, it is probable they would have been designated in the Constitution; the Constitution refers to some permanent officer to be created pursuant to the provisions therein contained. These persons are not permanent; a permanent officer was contemplated; the subject was not to be left to any casualty, if it could possibly be prevented.

Mr. SEDGWICK said, he did not know what officer could with propriety be said to be permanent; offices are held during good behaviour in some instances, and in others during pleasure; but it will be impossible to say that any officer is a permanent officer, for the expression is very extensive. He was surprised to hear the idea controverted, that the Speaker of the House, or the President of the Senate, pro tem., is not an officer. In common parlance he was sure there was no difficulty in the matter.

Mr. GERRY observed, that some gentlemen had said the Speaker is not an officer; but if he is not an officer, what is he? He then read a clause from the Constitution, which says that the House shall choose their Speaker and other officers. He hoped, however, that the Speaker of the House of Representatives would be struck out, in order to avoid blending the Legislative and Executive branches together. He considered this measure as a political stroke of the Senate; but he hoped that the House would never consent to making their Speaker an amphibious animal. He moved therefore that the words "Speaker of the House of Representatives" should be struck out.

Mr. HULLHOUSE objected to any officer appointed by the Executive being inserted. He said, if that should be the case, the appointments would in most cases be made with reference to that object; and hence important offices would often be filled with improper and incompetent persons. Besides, it was taking away the choice from the people, and thus violating the first principle of a free elective Government. The Senate are appointed by the people, or their Representatives, and hence, in his opinion, filling the vacancy would devolve with the greatest propriety on that body.

Mr. WILLIAMSON was in favor of the motion for striking out both the characters. He observed, that this extensive construction of the meaning of the word officer, would render it proper to point out any person in the United States, whether connected with the Government or not, as a proper person to fill the vacancy contemplated.

Before taking the question upon the amendment, the Committee rose.

FRIDAY, December 23.

On a motion made and seconded,

"That the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the petition of George Webb, be referred to a Select Committee, and that the Committee be instructed to prepare and bring in a bill allowing such of the Receivers of Continental Taxes in the several States, as continued in service after the end of the year 1782, a commission, as a compensation for their services and expenses, not exceeding the rate of — per centum upon the amount of moneys by them respectively received for Continental services subsequently to the time aforesaid."

Ordered, That the said motion and report be referred to Mr. LIVERMORE, Mr. GILES, Mr. CLARK, Mr. FRIZZIMONS, and Mr. BOURNE, of Rhode Island; that they do examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereupon, to the House.

A memorial and petition of sundry merchants of the city of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, engaged in commerce, previous to the late Revolution, was presented to the House and read, stating the peculiar hardships under which they labor, from the two-fold causes of the operation of the fourth article of the definitive Treaty of Peace, and of so much of the act of Congress for funding the public debt as redeems the old Continental money, at the rate of one hundred dollars thereof for one dollar specie, the former requiring them to pay their British debts in sterling money, with full interest to the present time, and the latter, depriving them of all hope of indemnity, from the effects of depreciation and tender laws to which they were exposed during the war, and praying relief.

Ordered, That the said memorial and petition do lie on the table.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, on the bill for carrying into effect the contract between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania; and, after some time spent therein, the Committee rose and reported the bill without amendment. It was ordered to be engrossed.

POST OFFICE BILL.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, on the bill for estab-blishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States.

Mr. FITZSIMONS offered a sketch of rates of postage, by way of amendment, different from that reported in the bill and the rates now paid. His plan was a general reduction of the rates.

Mr. GOODRICH said, he did not believe that the revenue from the Post Office, any more than that from the impost, would be increased by establishing a high rate of postage. He was pleased with the sketch offered, and wished it might be agreed to as an amendment; he had no doubt of its increasing the revenue of the Department.

Mr. LIVERMORE was in favor of the original rates reported in the bill. He conceived that the reduced rates would be so low, as materially to injure the income of the Department. He did not conceive why the rate of postage for one hundred miles, in one part of the United States, should be greater than for one hundred miles in another part; he referred to the diminished rates for great distances.

Mr. WILLIAMSON was in favor of reducing the rates. He observed, that though our experience in this business was not great, yet it was sufficient to show that a reduction of the rates of postage tended to increase the income of the Department. And the experience of European countries was incontrovertibly in favor of the idea of a reduction.

Mr. BALDWIN replied to Mr. LIVERMORE, and observed that the amendment recognised the same principle in respect to great distances, which is contained in the bill as reported.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMSON, the amendment was altered, so that the rate of postage for a single letter to the greatest distance, should not exceed twenty-five cents.

Mr. FITZSIMONS's amendment was then adopted. The section which makes it death for persons employed in the Post Office Department to rob the mail, occasioned considerable debate. The words "shall suffer death," were struck out, and it was then moved to insert imprisonment for life, or for a term which the Court may think proper. This motion occasioned further debate, on its being moved to amend it by striking out imprisonment for life.

Mr. MURRAY entered into a general consideration of the subject. He was clearly of opinion that if the punishment was not loss of life, it ought to be the next in point of severity. He enlarged on the enormity of the crime, and inferred that a person who was so depraved as to be guilty of it, ought to be forever deprived of the power of injuring society again. He adverted to the principles advanced by Montesquieu, Beccaria, and others, who had written so ably on crimes and punishments; but, with all their refinements, they were obliged to acknowledge that as there were grades in guilt, so there should be degrees of punishment. He adverted to the regulations of Pennsylvania; he said their jail was more properly a school of morality than a place of punishment. It may reform, but it will never deter the abandoned from the perpetration of crimes. It might answer the present state of society in the Commonwealth, but but he doubted whether it would not invite to the commission of crimes, and accelerate the period when they must have recourse to a more severe system of jurisprudence. He concluded by saying, that, as imprisonment for life was the next severest punishment to loss of life, he should vote against the last amendment.

Mr. HARTLEY defended the system of punishment and reformation adopted by Pennsylvania. Experience was in its favor. The gentleman has carried our ideas to European countries; but he thought that examples from our own country were more in point. He objected, generally, to sanguinary punishments; and the punishment now proposed he thought would be too severe, if generally incurred for the crime under consideration. The Committee now rose, and had leave to sit again.

MONDAY, December 26.

An engrossed bill for carrying into effect a contract between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania, was read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE BILL.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, on the bill for establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States.

On the subject of newspapers, Mr. WILLIAMSON suggested the propriety of their being so packed that they may be easily inspected by the postmasters; that there should be separate accounts, and a separate mail or portmanteau for them; and that the rate of postage should be in proportion to the distance they are carried; those sent one hundred and not exceeding two hundred miles, one-half cent; those above two hundred and not exceeding three hundred miles, one cent; those above three hundred and fifty miles, one cent and a quarter. He moved to strike out the 23d section, and to insert the above as a substitute.

Mr. CLARK proposed to amend the clause by a proviso, that the papers shall be dried.

Mr. FITZSIMONS doubted whether it would be proper to agree to the amendment. He was of opinion that the consequence would be, very few papers would be sent by the mail. He inquired who is to pay the postage? The printers will not pay it; they are sufficiently out of pocket by distant subscribers. Is it to be defrayed by the subscribers, weekly? There is no coin of the description mentioned. Difficulties will result from the mode which is necessarily adopted for great part of the year, of sending the mail on horseback. Should the papers increase, as is supposed, it would be impossible to send them. There were difficulties in the way. The printers had been called on to declare what would be convenient and agreeable to them; but there was so little concert among them, that they had not given any intimation to the Department of what would please them.

Mr. WILLIAMSON replied to Mr. FITZSIMONS, and obviated some of the difficulties he suggested. He observed that a certain weight ought to be specified, which the postmaster ought not to exceed, when the mail is sent on horseback.

Mr. CLARK said, he thought the most eligible method would be to make the printers accountable for the postage. This had been proposed by a printer, who issued a larger number of papers than any other printer in the United States. This would simplify the business, and prevent trouble in the different post offices.

Mr. BOURNE objected to different rates of postage for newspapers. He believed it was not customary with the post-riders. Newspapers contained general information, and ought to come to the subscribers in all parts of the Union on the same terms; the half cent would indemnify for the charge. He moved that such parts of the motion as proposed a different rate should be struck out.

Mr. BOURNE believed the gentleman was mistaken in respect to expense of carriage to a great distance. He further observed, that the rates being the same to all parts of the Union, would operate as a bounty to the printers at the Seat of Government; for it was well known that the printers at the Southward could not afford to sell their papers at the same rate with those at the Northward.

Mr. WILLIAMSON enlarged on these ideas. Mr. STEELE said, that the amendment of his colleague, instead of giving facility to the circulation of newspapers, tended only to give a douceur to the printers of particular States. He could have wished that the privilege of franking had been struck out, and the supposed amount thereof applied to defray the expense of transporting a larger number of newspapers; it would conduce to opening a larger channel of information, and would in an easy way bring intelligence to the door of every citizen in the United States. He preferred the bill without the amendment, as more competent to the great object.

Mr. PARKER observed that every law ought to be founded on a principle of equality; and, on this idea, supposed the postage ought to be augmented in some proportion according to the distance.

Mr. HILLHOUSE advocated an increase of the postage. He said the rates proposed were not competent to discharging the expense.

Mr. WILLIAMSON said, that the half cent for a great distance would not defray the expense; he had authority for the assertion; and if the rate is reduced, it will operate to discourage the private stages, and all communication on those roads supported by private subscriptions, will be cut off. Mr. HARTLEY was in favor of one rate. He observed that the rates demanded by private posts was so high, as to amount to an interdiction of the papers almost entirely.

Mr. BARNWELL was in favor of Mr. WILLIAMSON's motion; a half cent would not be sufficient to defray the expenses. He enlarged on the bad policy of giving a monopoly to the printers at the Seat of Government; country papers are important on many accounts, and ought to be encouraged. It is the opinion of the Postmaster General that a half cent is not a sufficient postage.

Mr. BOURNE's motion for striking out was negatived.

On motion of Mr. HILLHOUSE, the postage for one hundred miles was raised from a half to a whole cent, and one cent and a half for any greater distance.

Mr. CLARK moved to add this clause: "to be paid by the Printers sending the same, at the expiration of every three months." This was not carried. The section was further amended, by saying that the newspapers shall be under cover opened at one end; the postmasters to receive fifty per cent. of the postage.

The residue of Mr. WILLIAMSON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LIVERMORE moved that the proviso, which empowers the contractors to carry newspapers, should be struck out.

Mr. PAGE observed, that in disposing of this subject the utmost caution ought to be used, lest some infringement of the liberty of the press should be the consequence. We have subjected the printers of papers to a certain tax for sending their papers by the mail, and now it is proposed to cut them off from all opportunity of making their own contracts. He thought the business ought to be simplified as much as possible, and the printers left to themselves to dispose of their publications as they think proper, independent of the mail.

Mr. BARNWELL supported the motion: by retaining the clause, the post office would be subjected to innumerable impositions.

The proviso was struck out, and another proposed by Mr. BOURNE, to the same purpose, with an addition, subjecting papers sent by contract to the inspection of the postmasters.

This motion was objected to, as it would operate against the revenue of the post office.

Mr. BOURNE observed, that in forming the contracts, the contractors always agreed for a less consideration, on account of the advantage derived from carrying newspapers.

This motion was also disagreed to.

The Committee then rose, and reported the bill with amendments to the House.

TUESDAY, December 27.

THE POST OFFICE BILL.

The House then proceeded to consider the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole House yesterday, to the bill for establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States.

The several amendments agreed to by the Committee were read. The first section, as amended, after some further amendments, was agreed to; this section details the roads. Second amendment was to authorize the Postmaster General to form contracts for carrying the mail on cross roads; agreed to. In the eighth section, the rates of postage are established by an amendment, the lowest at six cents for a single letter, and the highest twenty-five cents for the greatest distance; agreed to. The substitution of "imprisonment for life," in lieu of the words "shall suffer death," for robbing the mail, was objected to by Mr. HARTLEY, who observed, that, for the protection of property, most countries have enacted penal laws. Those which have been the most sanguinary, have I think, not been the most successful. Those of a moderate complexion, have had a better effect, without sporting with the lives of men. While the English Government had its influence in America, the public mind in most of the Provinces was in favor of the former kind. Pennsylvania was among the first exceptions. The Quakers, who first settled Pennsylvania, were moderate in their manners and principles: their penal code remained till the late revolution. The Independence of America has led to great inquiry, and we have ventured to change our laws, and made them less sanguinary; this has happened in a greater or lesser degree in most of the States. Life is not sported with, and the idea of confinement and repentance strongly prevails. As I said the other day, said Mr. H., we have altered our laws with great success in Pennsylvania. What protection are we to have to this property? What danger is it subject to? The Postmaster General will doubtless take security from the deputies he appoints, and of those to whom the mail is intrusted. This is our security; and there is scarcely an instance where a man is punished with death for a mere breach of trust. Fines and imprisonment will be sufficient to punish the party, and deter others from committing the like offence. It is not like a robbery upon the person, taking his money. There it, in the latter, a complication of offences; personal security as well as property are involved, and the crime enhanced. Perhaps robbery should be punished with death; but I think fine and imprisonment sufficient for the crime now under consideration. The public mind would more approve of it than the punishment of death.

Mr. BOUNDNOT agreed in sentiment with Mr. HARTLEY. He said that extreme punishments of ten prevented a jury from convicting a criminal.

Mr. BARWELL was of opinion that a crime of so pernicious a nature as robbing the mail, ought to be punished with death.

Mr. LIVERMORE was also in favor of the original clause. He observed that a felon was never so secure as when he was hanged out of the way. In reply to Mr. HARTLEY's remarks respecting the salutary effects of the new system adopted in Pennsylvania, he did not think they were so apparent as had been represented; crimes were still committed in this city; for, since the meeting of Congress, several attempts had been made to set it on fire. He said that punishment, and capital ones, would always be found necessary.

Mr. SMITH, of New Hampshire, observed, that punishments ought to be proportioned to the offences committed; this is not done in the bill. He therefore was under the necessity of voting against the clause, in order to obtain some modification of it.

Mr. HILLHOUSE was in favor of the amendment as reported by the Committee.

Mr. HARTLEY moved an amendment to the amendment, by striking out the words "for life." This was seconded by Mr. FINDLEY, and supported by Mr. KITTEBA; who observed, that it was a principle in jurisprudence not to leave too much to the discretion of the judges. This amendment was carried. On the question to agree to the section as thus amended,

Mr. BALDWIN stated sundry particulars to show that the crimes and punishments referred to in this bill, were on a totally different principle from those mentioned in laws already passed by the Legislature of the United States. He should therefore vote against the amendment.

The question being divided, the first was on striking out the clause, "shall suffer death;"—it passed in the negative; so that the original clause remains.

The twentieth section, respecting franking, Mr. WADSWORTH moved should be stricken out.

Mr. WATTS observed, that he did not like the clause as it stands; but he was not for abolishing the privilege altogether. He read a clause which very much restricted the privilege, and which he should prefer to the section in the bill.

Mr. HILLHOUSE said, he had thought favorably of the motion; but on more mature consideration, and after hearing the arguments on the subject from gentlemen in favor of it, he was of opinion it would be best to retain the privilege.

Mr. WADSWORTH observed, that finding a great alteration had taken place in the sentiments of gentlemen on the subject, he had been induced to renew the motion. He observed, that the evils resulting from the practice, he had found on inquiry were much greater than he had supposed; but if the practice is retained, he should greatly prefer the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia. He doubted not that a revenue might be raised from the Post Office, and in a way which would be perfectly agreeable to the people, provided abuses were kept out of the Department, by franks and other means.

Mr. STURGES replied to Mr. WADSWORTH. He observed, that it was not to be considered as a privilege conferred on the members, but intended solely for the benefit of the people; it had not been complained of; was productive of the most salutary consequences; and he did not think the disadvantages counterbalanced the numerous benefits resulting from it. As to the abuses mentioned, he had greater confidence in the honor and integrity both of the present members, and those of any future National Legislature, than to suppose they would abuse the privilege. He was in favor of every necessary restriction, but still for retaining the substance of the clause.

Mr. GERRY replied to Mr. WADSWORTH. He observed, that the arguments offered for abolishing the privilege, were the most forcible in favor of retaining it.

Mr. KITTEBA said, that though the revenue of the Post Office might at first be affected, yet he was of opinion that the correspondences which would arise from those begun by franking, would eventually contribute to an increase of the revenue.

The further consideration of the amendments was postponed.

WEDNESDAY, December 28.

A memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire was presented to the House and read, representing the inequality and injustice of a late act of Congress for the assumption of the State debts, and praying that the inequalities thereby occasioned to the said State redressed in such other way as the wisdom of Congress shall deem expedient. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, for his information.

A Message from the President of the United States was received, accompanied with the copy of a Letter from the Attorney General, stating certain difficulties in the execution of his office. Laid on the table.

THE POST OFFICE BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the amendments, proposed by the Committee of the Whole on the Post Office bill.

The twentieth section, with the amendments, was agreed to. The privilege of franking to the members of both Houses, and conferred on the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and some other officers, being under consideration, the following debate took place:

Mr. WADSWORTH having mentioned certain abuses that had heretofore crept in under cover of the privilege of franking, said that, of a great number of petitions which had been transmitted to him, hardly one had come by post.

Mr. GERRY observed, that if gentlemen thought it necessary to restrain members from writing (free of postage) to their families, and on their own private business, he would consent to such a proposition; but to propositions of a visibly dangerous tendency, he never would give his assent; and such he deemed those which tended to prevent the members from taking the newspapers, or to burden the carriage of the papers with a tax. That wherever information is freely circulated, there slavery cannot exist; or if it does, it will vanish as soon as information has been generally diffused. The light of information has enabled the French to discover their rights, which so long lay concealed from their eyes, and has put them in possession of their present Constitution. However firmly liberty may be established in any country, it cannot long subsist if the channels of information be stopped; instead, therefore, of taking any steps that might tend to prevent the diffusion of political information, the House ought to adopt measures by which the information, contained in any one paper within the United States, might immediately spread from one extremity of the continent to the other; thus the whole body of the citizens will be enabled to see and guard against any evil that may threaten them. To take any measures of a contrary tendency, would be establishing a precedent that may hereafter be improved to the most dangerous consequences. It is impossible to foresee whether every future Legislature of the United States will be entirely free from despotic principles; and if such a disposition should at any time prevail in the Legislative body, the readiest way to effect their purposes, will be to stop the channels of political information; first, by preventing the members from taking the papers; in the next place, by preventing their sending them to their constituents; and lastly, by imposing a tax on the papers. This will be the surest mode of introducing a system of despotism into this country. The evils that are apprehended from the privilege of franking are but trifling, when compared with those evils of greater magnitude that may ensue from its abolition. A man might become a non-franking patriot on very cheap terms, indeed; but if gentlemen wished to establish their reputation for public spirit, this was not the proper mode.

It could hardly be supposed, he said, that any member would wish to retain the privilege of franking, merely for the sake of the trifling, contemptible advantage he would derive from franking his own letters. But if such an idea was entertained let a provision be made that no commercial letter, no letter on private business, nor any letters passing between a member and his family, shall be exempt from postage; and that no letters shall be franked but those relating to public business, enclosing petitions, or suing for redress of grievances.

Mr. WILLIAMSON observed, that if the burden of franks was made so heavy on the post office, as to destroy it, this would prevent, instead of promoting the diffusion of information, and thus the sooner pave the way for the introduction of despotism. From the per centage allowed to the postmaster on the free letters at New York during the last year, it appeared that, if they had been all charged with postage as single letters, they would have produced a revenue of two thousand two hundred and fifty-three dollars; but as a considerable proportion of them were triple and quadruple letters, and would thus have yielded four thousand five hundred and six dollars, a sum which, if applied to the extension of the posts to different parts of the Union, would furnish the means of diffusing more general information.

After further remarks, he observed, that the greatest charge contemplated for the conveyance of newspapers in the ordinary way, was to be only a cent and a half; whereas, if enclosed in franks, they would cost the public five cents each.

Mr. GILES did not consider the privilege of franking, as the cause of a general diffusion of information. The privilege he thought unnecessary, where public presses are established, the freedom of debate unrestrained, and the debates published in the newspapers. It is sufficient to leave every man at liberty to express his sentiments in the papers, and that the public are free to read them. Although the French nation, who before lived under an arbitrary Government, were now become free in consequence of the diffusion of information, yet he could not find that the National Assembly possessed the privilege of franking; even if they did, it could not be by means of that privilege the information had been diffused

H. or R.]

Post Office Bill.

[DECEMBER, 1791.]

It had been said, that this privilege was conferred on the members, not for their own private benefit, but for that of the public. Were this the case, he would consent to retain it; but it extends further, private letters being equally exempt from postage, as those of a public nature. Thus one individual is exonerated from a certain burden or duty, which another individual is obliged to bear; and by extending the principle, it would ultimately authorize an exemption from any contribution whatever. If the object was merely to diffuse information, he would suppose that every individual in the United States ought to enjoy the same privilege, and that the post office ought to be established for this particular purpose, so that all the citizens might be upon an equal footing. If it were said that postage is not a tax, because no man is obliged to send letters by the post, the same thing may be said of the impost; as no man is obliged to pay the duty, since he may purchase or not, as he pleases. The constituent body, however, would be justly alarmed, if Congress were to say that the members should be exempt from the duty, while their constituents pay it; and yet, in the article of postage, this is exactly the case, as every member who has private business to transact, makes use of the post office for that purpose, derives a benefit from it, and is free from a pecuniary duty, which his constituents suffer. The grand security in every Representative Government being, that the Representatives should themselves be subject to the same rules and regulations which they impose upon their constituents, he was of opinion that, if the privilege in question were not a direct infringement of this principle, even if it were but an indirect or collateral one, Congress would, nevertheless, act wisely in relinquishing it; nor would the diffusion of information be checked by its abolition.

The abuses attendant on this privilege, he had not himself examined into. He took them on the authority of other gentlemen, who had been at the pains of examining; but, since it was acknowledged that abuses already exist, he thought it but reasonable to conclude that they would increase in proportion to the increasing number of those who are to use the privilege; and as the House will, in a short time, contain above a hundred members, the abuses may be calculated accordingly. Moreover, the very duration of the privilege will tend to vitiate the use of it, as the example of other countries has sufficiently proved. Every gentleman on the floor must be sensible, that the abuses are already increasing, and are likely to increase still more. He had himself received two very heavy letters (one of them from an utter stranger) that were written merely for the purpose of enclosing letters to other persons, and thus avoiding the payment of postage.

After some further remarks, he concluded with a wish, that the clause might be either struck out, or so modified, as only to include letters of a public nature, beyond which he thought it dangerous to extend it.

Mr. LIVERMORE offered a few remarks, to show that the privilege is not confined to the members, but common to them and their constituents, who derive from it the advantage of communicating their sentiments to their Representatives, free from postage. Whence he concluded, that Representative and constituent are only on a footing of equality.

Mr. GILES denied the equality, since the constituent's exemption from postage is confined to those letters which he writes to the members, and does not include his letters to any of his fellow constituents.

Mr. LAURANCE expressed his unwillingness to relinquish any privilege attached to an official station, unless good reasons were alleged for such a step. If he thought that sufficient reasons could be given for resigning a privilege that was coeval with the Government itself, he would concur with gentlemen in divesting themselves of it; but he did not think the arguments adduced for striking out the clause possessed that weight which gentlemen supposed. The privilege in question, though perhaps sometimes abused, had, to him, ever appeared highly beneficial, as affording an easy communication between the members and their constituents, for useful information. Many subjects had occurred in the House, on which he had found himself incompetent to decide from his own judgment, and wished to obtain information from some of his well-informed constituents; other gentlemen, he supposed, were often in the same predicament; and in such cases, as their judgment was to be exercised, not for their own advantage, but for that of their constituents, he did not think they ought to procure the necessary information at their own private expense, but at the public charge. As there are some evident advantages resulting from the privilege, he thought it necessary to examine whether the arguments, offered for its abolition, were well grounded. It had been said that members had, under cover, received letters which ought not to have passed free; but the bill, in its present form, provides a remedy for that effect, by directing that all such letters shall be sent to the post office and charged with postage. When this regulation is made known throughout the United States, no more letters will be so inclosed; or if any should yet be transmitted in that clandestine manner, surely the honor of the members may be so far relied on, as to expect that they will, in compliance with their own law, hand them over to the postmaster. No gentleman will so far commit himself as to lay his character open to censure and obloquy, by conniving at such abuses; if they have hitherto existed, it may reasonably be hoped that they will not hereafter prevail so extensively.

It had been alleged that the privilege would produce a diminution in the revenue of the post office; but he was surprised to hear such an allegation; for, since it was well known that, during the last year, the post office had yielded a net surplus revenue of five thousand dollars, to be employed in erecting new posts, if the privilege (notwithstanding the many abuses charged to its account) has still left the post office so productive, it can hardly be supposed that, when the abuses

DECEMBER, 1791.]

Post Office Bill.

[H. or R.]

are corrected, it will operate more injuriously than heretofore.

The privilege of franking, he thought, more likely to increase than to diminish the revenue of the post office. Without it, fewer letters would be written by the members; whereas, those letters in which they communicate information respecting the different subjects which engage the attention of the Legislature generally produce other letters, a single one written to a commercial town, occasioning many others to other towns on the same subject.

The people, it had been said, would entertain a jealousy against their Representatives, on account of the privilege; and would be alarmed, lest this should open a door for an exemption from taxes in many other instances. But are the people jealous of the privilege by which the Constitution secures the persons of the members from arrest, during their attendance at the session, and on their way to and from it, whilst other citizens are liable to arrest at all times? They are not; and to suppose that because the members retain a privilege which has been constantly used since the first formation of the Government, they will also seek to exempt themselves from taxation, was, in his opinion, an unwarrantable supposition.

If the privilege were taken away, he did not think the members would be upon a footing of equality. It is well known that many members stand in a more particular relation to their constituents than others do. Those who come from commercial towns are subject to more numerous applications; and if they are, at their own expense, to defray the postage of all the letters they receive from their constituents, they will have to bear a heavier burden than other members, to whom applications are less frequently made.

The clause under consideration contemplates an exemption from postage for all official communications. Now, if gentlemen admit the principle, that the officers of Government, who are paid for their services, ought not to bear the expense of those communications, why should the members of the Legislative body be taxed for communications of a similar nature? If the members be obliged to pay postage, why should not the public officers pay it in like manner? If any distinction were made in this particular, there would be no equality in the application of the principle; and if, for the sake of equality, the whole clause were struck out, and the privilege taken away from all parties, then the public would have bills to pay for the postage of those officers who receive communications, or it would become necessary to increase their salaries; for it would be unreasonable and unjust, to expect that they should, at their own expense, defray the postage of letters on official business.

Mr. WILLIAMSON observed, that the bill contemplated the establishment of double the number of post offices that were before in existence; that many of the new ones do not promise to be very productive, some of them not being likely to pay five shillings in the pound. That the charge for the last year was twenty-five thousand dollars; and that, if the post office be not supported, the means will be wanting to aid the diffusion of information.

Mr. LAURANCE thought, that with moderate rates of postage, and a strict attention to the regulations established in the bill, there would be little danger of a deficiency of revenue to support the post office. He did not think the additional posts would so far exceed the revenue as the gentleman last up seemed to apprehend. Even if they did happen to exceed it, he was willing to go somewhat beyond the income of the post office, for the sake of a more extensive circulation of intelligence; and the additional sums that might be applied to this purpose, he would consider as money well expended. He did not, however, entertain any apprehensions on this head; but expected, that notwithstanding all the new posts, a surplus would still be found, instead of a deficiency.

Mr. BOWDISH observed, that the privilege of franking is both personal and official; and, in both points of view, perfectly justifiable. As an official privilege, he thought its propriety would not admit of a doubt; for if men in office be not exonerated from those expenses which the performance of their duty entails on them, their salaries must be raised to indemnify them, as they cannot be expected to serve the public for nothing. As a personal privilege, he also thought it necessary, in order to preserve equality between the members from the distant parts of the Union, and those who live near the seat of Government. It was wise, he observed, to apply proper remedies to every inconvenience resulting from the remoteness of situation; and a member who comes from the distance of five or six hundred miles, would by no means stand upon an equal footing with another whose place of residence is less remote, unless he received a compensation for the local disadvantages under which he labors. This circumstance had been attended to, when the traveling charges of the members were settled, and a greater allowance was made to those from the more distant States, than from the nearer ones. In the article of postage, a member from Georgia or New Hampshire, would be obliged to pay more than a member from New Jersey; and unless a compensation be allowed, adequate to the increase of expense, a visible inequality must prevail. Suppose the price of boarding were raised in Philadelphia to six dollars per day, could the compensations be then considered as equal, unless the members were, either by the privilege of franking, or by an extra allowance for their postage, exonerated from the expense of that necessary correspondence which they are obliged to maintain with their families and their constituents? The privilege eases the public from the payment of a higher compensation; it was known and used when the compensation was settled, and the sum was determined accordingly.

As to the abuses that had been mentioned, he acknowledged, that, according to his ideas on that subject, the privilege had been abused, though, as some other gentlemen understood the matter, no abuse had been committed; for some thought themselves entitled to use the privilege in favor of their friends. But when the law expressly prohibits the members to do so in future, can it be imagined that they will pay less regard to the moral obligation of obeying the laws of their country, than the other officers of Government? Gentlemen acknowledged that the latter ought to be allowed to retain the privilege, and seemed to confine all the abuses to the members of Congress; but if it could be guarded in the hands of others, it could be equally so in the hands of the members, from whom it was reasonable to expect as scrupulous an obedience to the laws, as would be paid by the public officers.

The calculation that had been made (by Mr. WILLIAMSON) of the revenue that would have accrued from the franked letters, if they had been charged at the usual rate, produced on his mind an effect very different from what was intended. The postage, it was said, from this city only to New York, would have amounted to near five thousand dollars in a single year; and would any gentleman wish to subject the members to so heavy a tax? If the letters were not written, the post office would gain nothing on them; if written and charged with postage, at the expense of the members, it would be impossible for any one but a man of fortune to come forward and represent his fellow-citizens on the floor of Congress. This circumstance would, in its consequences, abridge the liberty of the people in the choice of their Representatives, a choice which the citizens of America have a right to make at their pleasure, electing men of talents and integrity to represent them, whether possessed of fortunes, or without them.

If it was gentlemen's intention to abolish the privilege of franking altogether, without making an exception in favor of the deputy postmasters, the deputies in every part of the Union would resign their offices, and how could the business of the post office be carried on, without postmasters? If men of character cannot be found to fill the vacant places, the post office will be exposed to very great danger, and people will be afraid to intrust their valuable letters to men of bad character. Most of the present postmasters are men of reputable characters; and what is their inducement to accept the employment? Not, surely, the trifling consideration of a few dollars per annum, but the advantage of writing an occasional letter free from postage, and the convenience of having the post attending at their own houses once or twice a week. From the abolition of the privilege, the post office would suffer much greater injury than gentlemen seemed to be aware of. It was wrong to suppose that the same number of letters would be written if it were taken away; and if retained, the additional weight of letters would prove an inconvenience. In answer to the arguments drawn from the expense of the new roads, against the competency of the post office to support itself from its own revenue, he observed, that the additional expense will be only twelve thousand five hundred dollars; that the surplus of the last year had been five thousand; and if the old established roads continue equally productive, and the new ones produce even ten shillings in the pound, the post office will, on the whole, come so near defraying itself, that the trifling deficiency will not be an object worthy of attention.

Mr. WARREN observed, that if the section were retained in its present form, a member, who totally absented himself from Congress might, during the whole session, and twenty days before and twenty days after it, carry on a free correspondence to every part of the United States, on his own private business. This, he thought, by no means reasonable. He wished, therefore, to have the privilege limited to members actually attending their duty in Congress, and confined, moreover, to letters coming from, or written to, the State that each member represents; for he believed that very few gentlemen in the House correspond on public business with other States than their own.

Mr. MURRAY was decidedly of opinion, that all the officers of Government ought to have the privilege of sending and receiving letters on official business, free of postage; but he thought that the members of Congress ought not to enjoy the same advantage. When gentlemen argued this question, as relating to themselves, it appeared to him to be very little more than a competition between personal privilege and public utility. The abolition of the privilege would, in his opinion, prove highly advantageous to the post office, especially when the number of the members is increased.

Mr. HULLHOUSE observed, that the privilege was conferred on the public officers, for the purpose of enabling them to transact the public business; and it was for the same purpose, the members were to enjoy it. That there is no reason to suppose a greater degree of virtue in the public officers than in the members of Congress; and that abuses are as likely to arise from the former as from the latter. He thought it was placing the characters of the members on a very low footing, indeed, to say that the public officers will never abuse the privilege, but that the members will crush the post office under a heap of abuses. To make a member pay for letters on public business, would be taxing him merely because he is a member; for, if he were not so, he would receive none of those letters. Some of the State Governments had already subjected the officers of the General Government to a tax on their salaries; and if the present motion were carried, it might furnish them with a hint for proceeding a step further, and taxing the compensations of the members. If a member of Congress be subjected to impositions that will depreciate his compensation; if his privileges be so abridged as to leave it inadequate, a pecuniary addition will become necessary; otherwise, no man can occupy a seat in the House, except a man of large fortune—a circumstance that would be pregnant with the most calamitous consequences. Whereas, if the doors of Congress be left accessible to every citizen, proper characters will be elected, without respect to fortune. If the privilege were to be withdrawn from the members, he hoped it would be equally abolished in every other instance; and that no invidious distinctions would be made, attributing a greater or less degree of integrity either to the members or to the public officers.

Mr. MURRAY replied, that he meant no reflection on the characters of the members, when he put them in competition with the public officers. If the privilege were withdrawn from the former, the door would be still open for any gentleman to introduce a mode of communication, between the constituents and their Representatives, that would be less liable to abuses. Memorials, petitions, &c., might come enclosed to the Speaker, or to the Clerk of the House; and every person forwarding such papers might, by an endorsement, designate the particular member whom he would wish to take charge of them.

From the complexion of the debate, a stranger might have been tempted to imagine that the point in dispute was, whether or not the members should be permitted to hold correspondence with their friends and their constituents; whereas, in fact, the only question was, whether they would relinquish a privilege which they had unconsciously assumed; since the Constitution, in enumerating the several privileges conferred on the Legislative body, is totally silent on the subject of franking.

The nature of the Executive Department requires secrecy and despatch; and this was one reason why he wished the public officers should be allowed to retain the privilege of franking; but the same argument could not be urged in favor of continuing it to the members of Congress, whose operations are deliberate and open to the public eye; to diminish the number and bulk of their communications, by depriving them of this unconstitutional and unnecessary privilege, so far from impeding the diffusion of intelligence, would, on the contrary, promote it, by increasing the revenue of the post office, and thus facilitating the more extensive circulation of newspapers.

Mr. GILES wished the motion so modified, as to meet the idea of the gentleman last up. The chief danger of the privilege appearing to result from its being vested in the members. In the course of the debate, he had observed, that when the taxation of members of Congress was mentioned, an apprehension had been expressed, lest they should be subjected to any new burdens; but that tender regard for their privileges, which made gentlemen so cautious of giving up any one of them, would, he believed, inspire them with an equal degree of caution, if ever there should be question of taxing members of Congress.

A gentleman had declared himself unwilling to relinquish this privilege; but, previous to such a declaration, the possession of it ought to be clearly proved. The Constitution, from which Congress derive all their rights, does not where mention such a privilege. The privilege of freedom from arrest, does not, it was said, give umbrage to the constituent body; but the reason is evident, and that is, that the Constitution expressly grants it. Suppose, however, the members of Congress had the further privilege of not being obliged to pay their debts; this, in addition to the other privileges, would justly alarm their constituents. Here he saw an exemption from a pecuniary obligation—and the principle he considered as dangerous. On this ground, he wished the question might be taken on the privilege, merely as it respected the members; for, as to the Executive officers, he had not the same objection to their possessing it, since the mode in which they should use it is to be prescribed, not by themselves, but by the Legislature, who might safely be intrusted in conferring privileges on the officers of Government; but gentlemen were proceeding further, and going to determine what privileges they should themselves enjoy. The Representatives were not to be subject to the same duty that was imposed on their constituents, and this was what struck him as highly dangerous. He hoped other gentlemen would view the subject in the same point of light; and if it appeared equally serious to them, he trusted that no arguments of policy would be set up against the Constitution.

The use of the privilege, during the time past, had been given as an argument in favor of its future retention; but if the members had assumed an unjustifiable privilege, and used it, could that improper use furnish a sufficient reason for its continuance? The privilege in question is a personal advantage, not enjoyed by our constituents, and involves the violation of a most important principle.

He concluded, by reminding the House that the Constitution has conferred on the members every privilege which was thought necessary; and that if they swelled the catalogue, by the addition of any new privilege, it would, in fact, be adding a new clause to the Constitution. He hoped, therefore, that gentlemen would proceed with caution, especially when they were treading on what might be considered as at least doubtful ground.

The question being now called for, and passing in the negative, the section was retained.

The amendment to the twenty-third section was also agreed to, subjecting newspapers conveyed in the mail, to a postage of one cent for one hundred miles, and a cent and a half for any greater distance.

Section twenty-five, as amended and agreed to, authorizes the postmasters of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Boston, Providence, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Annapolis, and Charleston South Carolina, to send the letters to the houses of the persons to whom addressed, and to charge, for such conveyance, one cent on each letter, in addition to the postage.

Having proceeded through all the amendments, the House adjourned.

THURSDAY, December 29.

Ordered, That the written Message, of yesterday, from the President of the United States, together with the Letter of the Attorney General, therein referred to, be referred to the committee to whom was committed the Report of the Attorney General, on the Judiciary system of the United States.

Ordered, That the petition of James Rumney, by Joseph Barnes, his attorney in fact, which lay on the table, be referred to the committee appointed to prepare and bring in a bill or bills to amend the act, entitled "An act to promote the progress of useful arts."

The House proceeded to consider the bill, which lay on the table, for establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States, together with the amendments thereto; and the same being further amended, Ordered, That the seventeenth and eighteenth sections of the said bill be re-committed to Mr. SMITH, of New Hampshire, Mr. LAVERGNE, Mr. BALDWIN, and Mr. BOURNE, of Massachusetts.

FRIDAY, December 30.

The several petitions of Isaac Benjamin, James Bray, David Brown, John Caraghgan, Thomas Chandler, Philip Durk, and George Durk, Thomas Jones, John Kryster, William Miller, and Aaron Stratton, were presented to the House and read, respectively praying compensation or relief for supplies furnished, services rendered, wounds received, or injuries sustained, in the Army of the United States, during the late war. Referred to the Secretary of War, with instruction to examine the same, and report his opinion thereupon to the House.

A petition of Abraham Darlington was presented to the House and read, praying to receive payment for property impressed for the use of the Continental army, during the late war. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, with instruction to examine the same, and report his opinion thereupon to the House.

A memorial of John Churchman was presented to the House and read, praying the patronage of Government to enable him to undertake a voyage to Baffin's Bay, for the purpose of making discoveries to confirm his new theory of the variation of the magnetic needle: Also, that the penalties imposed by the act, entitled "An act to promote the progress of useful arts," may be increased. Ordered to lie on the table.

PETITION OF NORTHUMBERLAND CO., PA.

A petition of sundry inhabitants of the county of Northumberland, in the State of Pennsylvania, was presented to the House and read, praying that an act, passed last session, imposing duties on spirits distilled within the United States, may be repealed.

On motion to refer the petition to the Secretary of the Treasury—

Mr. GILES objected to such reference as improper. He thought the subject cognizable by the House only.

Mr. GERRY made some remarks, which were opposed to a more particular attention to this petition than to others on the same subject. He thought the petition improper, as it prays for a repeal of the law. He threw out some reflections on the people of the Western counties for their want of patriotism, in not paying taxes for the support of their State Government; and now, said he, they appear to wish to get rid of all contribution for the support of the General Government also.

Mr. FINDLEY observed, that it had been customary to refer the petitions to the Secretary of the Treasury. If this regulation had not been adopted, he should now be opposed to it. He replied to Mr. GERRY, and defended the character of the people of the Western counties; said they had paid their taxes for the support of the State Government with promptitude. Observations of a contrary kind, he knew, had got into the newspapers, which he thought were very uncandid and improper; but he was sorry to hear such observations from the members of this House. The present petition, however, is not from a Western county.

The motion for the reference was agreed to.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

The House again resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the bill to extend the time limited for the settlement of the accounts of the United States with the individual States; and, after some time spent therein, Mr. MUEHLBERG reported that the Committee had had the said bill under consideration, and made an amendment thereto; which was twice read and agreed to by the House.

The House proceeded to consider the report of the committee to whom were referred several motions for obtaining annual and regular statements of the receipts and expenditures of all public moneys, and for a due examination of such statements.

Mr. LIVERMORE rose for inquiry as to the designation of Legislative proceedings which this report was to receive, whether it was to be enacted into a law, or to be considered as a standing rule of the House.

Mr. GERRY replied. He said the object was to obtain such information, from time to time, as was necessary to forming a judgment respecting the propriety of additional taxes. The committee has taken such steps as they thought proper; the result is before the House, and it remains for them to dispose of it as they may think proper. He thought there would be a propriety in making it a standing rule of the House. It would be acting agreeably to the Constitution, which expressly says that such an account shall be exhibited.

Mr. LIVERMORE said he could not see any propriety in this mode of proceeding. He was in favor of as full an investigation into the expenditures of public money as any man; but he thought that no rule or standing order of the House could control the law. A law is already enacted for the regulation of the Treasury Department; if this law is defective, it may be amended; but he had no idea of doing business in this way. As the gentleman has observed, we have a right to call for such an account whenever we please, agreeably to the laws already enacted, and therefore the resolution seems to be superfluous. Besides, he doubted whether the power of this House extended to the making rules which shall bind any future Congress.

Mr. GILES undertook to show, from the Constitution, that one Congress had a right to prescribe rules for a subsequent Congress. He showed that several disadvantages would accrue from a contrary position, and in fact do already exist in consequence of the House having acted on the opposite supposition.

Mr. GERRY contended, that the regulation proposed was necessary, in order to securing this important object. The House had a right to call for this information; the Constitution has made it our duty to do so, and we have a right to say in what manner, and at what periods, this information shall be received.

Mr. BOURNE said, he conceived the resolutions were entirely superfluous, as the law was expressed on the subject. He called for the reading of the law; which was read.

Mr. BARNWELL spoke in favor of the resolutions.

Mr. LIVERMORE denied the right of one House to impose rules on another. The supposition, in his opinion, was contrary to several express provisions in the Constitution; to prove which, he referred to several parts of that instrument.

Mr. MURRAY was of opinion that the practice of the House justified the adoption of the resolutions now under consideration. He referred to the Secretary of the Treasury's report on Manufactures, which had been ordered by a former House, and received by the present.

Mr. GERRY, in reply to Mr. BOURNE, observed, that the article in the law just read, had respect only to the estimates of receipts and expenditures. An estimate, he supposed, was a very different thing from an account.

Mr. WILLIAMSON supported the resolutions. He said the present Congress had a right to make such rules and regulations respecting the Treasury as they thought proper; and to say that those rules shall be perpetual; still a future Congress may repeal them, and establish others which they may say shall be standing rules.

Mr. NILES wished some rules similar to those proposed should be adopted. He denied the right of one Congress, in its rules and regulations, to bind another. On this principle, the present House may choose a Speaker for a subsequent House. The question never has been for repealing the rules and regulations of a former House; but, whether they shall be adopted? He wished for a law on the subject, but was opposed to the inquiry in its present form.

Mr. CLARK was in favor of adopting some measures to obtain the information in question; but he thought the present House had no more right to bind a future House by a standing rule in this respect, than they have to say that the Speaker of the next House shall wear a tie-wig. He moved an amendment, by making the resolution to read, "that the return should be made on the fourth Monday of October next." This motion was seconded, but not agreed to.

One of the resolutions offered by the Committee tee, after some modification, was agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to lay before the House of Representatives, on the fourth Monday of October in each year, if Congress shall then be in session, or if not then in session, within the first week of the session next following the said fourth Monday of October, an accurate statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public moneys, down to the last day inclusively of the month of December immediately preceding the said fourth Monday of October, distinguishing the amount of the receipts in each State or District, and from each officer therein; in which statements shall also be distinguished the expenditures which fall under each head of appropriation, and shall be shown the sums, if any, which remain unexpended, and to be accounted for in the next statement, of each and every of such appropriation.

MONDAY, January 2, 1792.

An engrossed bill to extend the time limited for settling the Accounts of the United States with the individual States was read the third time and passed.

A Message was received from the President of the United States, communicating a statement of the disposition of the sums expended from the ten thousand dollars appropriated for contingent expenses of Government.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

The House then took up, in Committee of the Whole, the bill relative to the election of a President and Vice President, &c., Mr. MUEHLBERG in the Chair.

The ninth section being under consideration: a motion had been made to strike out "the President of the Senate pro tempore and Speaker of the House of Representatives," &c.

The question being divided, the vote on the President of the Senate pro tempore was put and negatived; that on the Speaker of the House of Representatives was also negatived. The tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth sections, were discussed and agreed to.

The Committee then rose and reported the bill with the amendments to the House. The House took the same into consideration. The first amendment was not adopted. The second amendment was to insert "Legislature" instead of "authority," which was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMSON, then renewed the motion to strike out of the ninth section the words "the President of the Senate pro tempore," and, in case there shall be no President of the Senate, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being."

A division of the said motion was called for.

Whereupon, The question being put for striking out the words "the President of the Senate pro tempore," it passed in the negative—yeas 24, nays 27, as follows:

H. OF R.]

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Post Office Bill.

JANUARY, 1792.]

Post Office Bill.

[H. OF R.]

Yates.—John Baptist Ashe, Abraham Baldwin, John Brown, William Findley, Thomas Fitzsimons, William B. Giles, Samuel Griffin, Israel Jacobs, Richard Bland Lee, Nathaniel Macon, James Madison, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, John Page, Josiah Parker, Joshua Seney, Samuel Sturges, Jonathan Surges, Thomas Sumpter, George Thatcher, Abraham Venable, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willis.

NAYS.—Fisher Ames, Robert Barnwell, Egbert Benson, Elias Boudinot, Shearjashub Bourne, Benjamin Bourne, Abraham Clark, Elbridge Gerry, Nicholas Gilman, Benjamin Goodhue, James Gordon, William Barry Grove, Daniel Heister, Philip Key, Amasa Learned, Samuel Livermore, William Van Murray, Nathaniel Niles, Cornelius C. Schoonmaker, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, William Smith, Peter Sylvester, Thomas Tredwell, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Jeremiah Wadsworth, and Artemas Ward.

And then the question being put for striking out the words "and in case there shall be no President of the Senate, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being," it was resolved in the affirmative—yeas 26, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. John Baptist Ashe, Abraham Baldwin, John Brown, William Findley, Thomas Fitzsimons, Elbridge Gerry, William B. Giles, Samuel Griffin, Israel Jacobs, Richard Bland Lee, Nathaniel Macon, James Madison, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, John Page, Josiah Parker, Joshua Seney, Samuel Sturges, Jonathan Surges, Thomas Sumpter, George Thatcher, Thomas Tredwell, Abraham Venable, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willis.

NAYS.—Messrs. Fisher Ames, Robert Barnwell, Egbert Benson, Elias Boudinot, Shearjashub Bourne, Benjamin Bourne, Abraham Clark, Benjamin Goodhue, James Gordon, William Barry Grove, Daniel Heister, Philip Key, Aaron Kitchell, Amasa Learned, Samuel Livermore, William Van Murray, Nathaniel Niles, Cornelius C. Schoonmaker, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, William Smith, Peter Sylvester, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Jeremiah Wadsworth, and Artemas Ward.

A clause was added to the bill, on motion of Mr. TUCKER, providing for the choice of a President of the Senate pro tempore, in case of vacancies in the offices of President and Vice President.

The bill was then laid on the table, and the House adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 3.

THE POST OFFICE BILL.

Mr. SMITH, of New Hampshire, from the committee to whom were re-committed the seventeenth and eighteenth sections of the bill for establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States, made a report: Whereupon, the amendments reported by the said committee, in lieu of the seventeenth and eighteenth sections, were, on the question put thereupon, agreed to by the House.

Several other amendments being proposed to the bill—

A motion was made by Mr. FITZSIMONS to ferry has been kept for a hundred years past in the most convenient place for crossing a river, give the post-rider authority to set up a new one beside it, and ruin the old establishment; they may say, that the person who carries the mail shall participate in every privilege that is now exclusively enjoyed by any man or body of men, and allege, as a reason for these encroachments, that they are only necessary encouragements to carry the mail of the United States. In short, the ingenuity of man cannot devise any new proposition so strange and inconsistent, as not to be reducible within the pale of the Constitution, by such a mode of construction. If this were once admitted, the Constitution would be an useless and dead letter; and it would be to no purpose, that the States, in Convention assembled, had framed that instrument to guide the steps of Congress: as well might they at once have said, "There shall be a Congress, who shall have full power and authority to make all laws, which to their wisdom shall seem meet and proper."

But the States will never submit to this new regulation; nor will the individuals concerned tamely suffer an invasion of those rights, which they enjoy under the State laws. A contest will undoubtedly ensue; and the present proprietors of the stages will not fail to stop any new stage-wagons that carry passengers along their roads, whether they carry the mail or not. It would be unwise in Congress to enter into a contest where the advantage is but trifling, and the risk much greater than they are aware of. It is easy to blow a small spark into an extensive flame; and prudence ought to caution them against raising a ferment, which may be productive of the most serious consequences.

In favor of the motion it was urged that the Constitution, in authorizing Congress to establish post offices and post roads, and to make all laws necessary for carrying into execution the several powers intrusted to them, has conferred on them ample powers respecting the point in question. If the post roads belong to the United States, then every citizen of the United States has as good a right to use them, under the regulations of Congress, as the citizens of any particular State, through which they happen to run. If they belong to the individual States, and are subject to their regulation, the same authority that limits the use of them to particular wagons, may also say that those wagons shall carry nothing else but passengers, and thus even the mail itself may be prevented from passing.

It was thought hard that a citizen of the United States should be prevented from traveling through an individual State in a stage-wagon, unless the wagon belonged to that State. If a right exists in the State Legislature to impose a tax in this instance, they may farm it out at a high rate, and make it amount to what they please: they may proceed further, and oblige every citizen of the United States who travels within their boundaries, to purchase a certificate to entitle him to pass.

If the House meant to establish the post office at all, and to have the roads free, it was thought necessary to make such a provision as the one under consideration. If not, the Postmaster General may be obliged to adopt the less convenient mode of having the mail carried every where on horse-back; even in this case, the State Legislatures may subject the post-horses to a tax, upon the same principle as the post-carriages.

The question, it was said, could not involve any controversy between the United States and the individual States. It was merely a judicial question, and determinable in a Court of Law, whether a State has a right to grant and support such a monopoly. Other monopolies had existed before the establishment of the General Government, but had been since done away; the duty of tonnage, for instance, which had been granted in some States for the improvement of navigation.

As to the infringement of contracts made before the adoption of the Constitution, if the different Conventions had agreed upon that ground, the Constitution itself would never have been adopted, as it abrogated not only several private contracts, but even certain parts of the State Constitutions themselves. But the evil, in the present case, would be great indeed, if the States were allowed a power of repealing or annulling the principles of the Constitution, under cover of acts that existed previous to its formation.

The laws of the United States must be general; they must operate equally throughout the Union, nor be clogged with any incumbrances or restrictions in any one State more than another. The power of barely establishing post roads would prove a mere nullity, unless accompanied with a power of making them useful. The stages are a public convenience to the citizens of the United States traveling along those roads; and if the State Legislatures exercise the power of stopping and taxing those carriages at their pleasure, the utility of this mode of conveyance, together with that of the roads themselves, will be in a great measure destroyed. If, to prevent this evil, and the better to accommodate the citizens of the United States, and to facilitate the conveyance of the public mail, Congress found it necessary to establish turnpike-roads from one end of the Continent to the other, the Constitution gave them full power to make such regulations and it hoped they would soon adopt the measure.

Without coming to a decision, the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, January 4.

Mr. LAURANCE, from the committee to whom was referred the memorial of Brigadier General Joseph Harmer, in behalf of the commissioned officers of the army, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island was presented to the House and read, representing the injuries they are subject to from the operation of an act of Congress relative to the assumption of the State debts, and praying a farther assumption of the debt of that State.

Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Speaker laid before the House a Letter

H. OF R.]

Post Office Bill.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

from the Secretary of War, accompanying his report on the memorial of Benjamin Lincoln, in behalf of himself, Cyrus Griffin, and David Humphreys, late Commissioners on the part of the United States for treating of peace with the Southern tribes of Indians. Whereupon, Ordered, That the said memorial and report be referred to Mr. AMES, Mr. BOUNDNOT, and Mr. STRELS; that they do examine the matter thereof, and report the same, with their opinion thereupon, to the House.

Mr. LIVERMORE, from the committee to whom was referred the petition of George Webb together with the report of the Secretary of the Treasury thereon, presented a bill granting farther compensation to certain receivers of Continental taxes; which was received, and read the first time.

THURSDAY, January 5.

A bill granting further compensation to certain receivers of Continental taxes was read the second time, and ordered to be committed.

THE POST OFFICE BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill, which lay on the table, for establishing the Post Office and Post Roads within the United States. Whereupon,

A motion was made and seconded further to amend the said bill, by inserting, after the section, the following clause:

"And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the carriage, by which the mail shall be conveyed, to receive passengers to or from any place or places, and through any State or States, upon all roads declared to be post roads, by the laws of the United States."

Mr. CLARK objected to the proposition. He thought it would give rise to a contest between the State and General Governments, which he conceived was unnecessary, and had better be avoided.

Mr. SENY also objected to it. Before such a clause was agreed to, it certainly was incumbent on the gentlemen in favor of it to show that the regulations in the several States which would be affected by it had or would obstruct the transportation of the mail. Except this was made to appear, it ought to be well considered how far the interference with those privileges would tend to disturb the tranquility of the Government.

Mr. LIVERMORE said he had no doubts on this subject. The right of Congress to send the mail in that way which will be most for the public advantage, cannot be controverted. Let gentlemen consider what would be the consequence, if similar monopolies existed in all the other States; it would entirely render nugatory the power of Congress to establish post offices and post roads. The consequences of this are easily to be conceived. It is said, that the persons vested with these exclusive privileges have contracted on as easy terms as the Postmaster General could have contracted with any other persons; but it does not follow that they will not extort in future—it certainly destroys all competition, and leaves the United States entirely in the power of these persons. He hoped that the House would not hesitate to adopt the proposition.

Mr. SENY replied to Mr. LIVERMORE, in a few remarks, in which he justified the States of Maryland and Virginia for granting the monopolies in question.

Mr. GERRY said he was in favor of the proposition. He asserted that the power to establish post roads was coeval with that of establishing post offices; if the former power is not in Congress, they have already proceeded too far in exercising the latter power. It has been said, that the States had a right to grant these monopolies—to this he conceded that they had, previous to the adoption of the Constitution; but, in consequence of that event, all such laws are null and void of course. It is become necessary for Congress to carry their power in this respect into execution; for he had been informed, from good authority, that the Postmaster General could not contract with these persons upon the same terms that he could with others. He instanced other inconveniences and disadvantages resulting from this situation of things, especially by an unnecessary detention of the mail for two days every week. Congress ought to define and declare their powers, that those States which have passed laws incompatible therewith may repeal them. With respect to the power of establishing post offices, none of the States claim a participation of that power; and as to the establishing post roads, if the States possess any power in that case, Congress certainly possesses concurrent power; and therefore this Government may certainly make the necessary regulations, where the States have either made improper regulations, or no regulations at all. He conceived that justice to individuals, and to the United States, rendered it absolutely necessary for Congress to exercise the power.

Mr. NILES inquired, what is the import of the present question? Is it not, sir, whether you may carry your mail through any of the States, on foot, on horseback, or in a stage coach? It is not contended that any law of any State can, constitutionally, prevent this. The States, by adopting the Constitution, have ceded their right to you, and of course divested themselves of all right to prevent you from exercising it. But, sir, the question is simply, whether Congress have a right to authorize the carrier of the mail to carry passengers, on hire, through those States where an exclusive right of carrying passengers for hire has been granted by the State Government, and still exists. You are empowered by the Constitution to establish post offices and post roads, and to do whatever may be necessary and proper to carry that power into effect. Now, sir, is it necessary, in order to the transportation of your mail, that you should erect stage-coaches for the purpose of transporting passengers? What has your mail to do with passengers transported for hire? Why, sir, nothing more than this—by granting to the carrier of your mail a right to carry passengers for hire, the carriage of the mail may be a little less expensive. Does this consideration render it necessary and proper for you to violate the laws of the States? If not, you will, by so doing, violate their rights, and overleap the bounds of your own. This matter may occasion a legal adjudication, in order to which the Judiciary must determine, whether you have a constitutional right to establish this regulation, and this will depend on the question whether it be necessary and proper. A curious discretionary law question! Such a one as I presume never entered the thought of the States when they adopted the Constitution. But, sir, if the trifling pecuniary saving proposed by this regulation, entitles it to the character of a necessary one, or, in the sense of the Constitution, a proper one, and so a constitutional one, what may not Congress do under the idea of propriety? It may be proper, for the sake of a more advantageous contract for carrying the mail, to authorize the carrier to erect ferry-boats, for the transportation both of the mail and of passengers—or to grant the right of driving herds of cattle over toll bridges and turnpike roads, toll free, in violation both of legal and prescriptive rights—to erect post-houses under peculiar regulations, and with exclusive right. What, sir, may not be construed as proper to be done by Congress? Under this idea, the whole powers vested in Congress by the Constitution will be found in the magic word proper; and the States might have spared, as nugatory, all their deliberations on the Constitution, and have constituted a Congress, with general authority to legislate on every subject, and in any manner it might think proper. What rights, then, remain to the States? None, sir, but the empty denomination of Republican Governments. I consider the proposition as an attack upon the rights of the States, and shall therefore give my vote against it.

JANUARY, 1792.]

Post Office Bill.

[H. OF R.]

Mr. BARNWELL said he had no doubt of the constitutionality of the proposition; but he was of opinion that the present was not the most eligible time to exercise the power. Still he was of opinion that Congress ought now to declare that it would exercise it at the expiration of the contracts which at present exist between particular States and individuals, and he moved a proviso to that effect, as follows:

"Provided, That whenever any exclusive privilege of conveying passengers for hire in stage carriages, on any of the roads established by this law, hath been heretofore granted by any of the States for a term of years, such exclusive privilege shall continue and be of full force and effect, agreeable to the conditions thereof, until such term shall expire."

Mr. LAURANCE was in sentiment with Mr. BARNWELL, and seconded his motion for adding a proviso, as above.

Mr. CLARK objected to the proviso; it was legislating on a subject of which the House was entirely ignorant. We do not know how long those contracts are to exist; why should we, then, interfere in a business which we ought not to do any thing about. We may set aside the law, or the State may abrogate it, but in either case the proprietors would be entitled to a full indemnification. For his part, he thought the House was getting into a maze—the bill has long been under consideration, and we seem to make no progress. I could wish that the whole bill was buried, and that we might hear no more of post offices and post roads.

Mr. VENABLE controverted the constitutionality of an interference on the part of Congress in respect to these monopolies. He observed, that the Constitution was totally silent on the subject of passengers; it simply relates to the transportation of letters. And he conceived that the operation of the proposition would be to create monopolies on the part of the United States.

[It was here contended that the proviso was not in order. The Speaker said it was not in order. An appeal was then made to the House, which voted that the proviso was in order, and it was then discussed.]

Mr. WADSWORTH said he was opposed to both the clause and the proviso; he conceived there was no occasion for either. The State of Connecticut has granted exclusive privileges to run stages in that State, but has reserved to itself the power to annihilate those contracts at pleasure; and, whenever the General Government shall make provision for transporting the mail on those roads, those exclusive privileges will cease; and he did not know but that this was the case in other States.

Mr. LIVERMORE said the proviso was the most extraordinary one he had ever heard in his life—we in the first place, in effect, abrogate certain laws of particular States, and then by a proviso confirm those very laws.

Mr. LAURANCE contended that, however extraordinary the proviso may appear, it was strictly proper. Contracts are not to be violated—once formed, they are sacred. The States had a right to form those contracts, and to grant those privileges, and therefore the persons enjoying them cannot be deprived of them; and though the General Government has undoubtedly a right to take the most eligible methods for the transportation of the mail, yet the rights of these people ought not to be violated.

Mr. GERRY opposed the proviso. It recognised the right of the respective States to pass such laws as the first part of the clause intends to abrogate, not only before, but subsequent to the adoption of the Constitution, which he conceived involved an absurdity. On the general subject, he said, that these monopolies were a tax, not only on the citizens of other States, but of every State in the Union. He conceived that no State possesses the power of taxing the people of the United States.

Mr. BENSON remarked, that the proviso was improper and unnecessary. Should any consequences result from agreeing to the first part of the clause, they will arise between the individual claiming the privileges and the State which granted them, and must be settled by a judicial decision.

Mr. STURGES said he should vote in favor of the proviso, though he conceived that Congress had a right to make such a law as would, in its operation, entirely supercede these contracts.

Mr. FINDLEY was opposed to the proviso, because it was legislating on improper principles, or rather no principles whatever; for we know nothing about those contracts.

On the question being put, to agree to the said proviso, by way of amendment to the said clause, it passed in the negative—Yeas 14, Nays 43, as follows:

YEAS.—Abraham Baldwin, Robert Barnwell, Samuel Griffin, Daniel Huger, John Laurence, James Madison, William Van Murray, Joshua Seney, William Smith, Samuel Sterrett, Jonathan Sturges, Thomas Sumpter, George Thatcher, and John Vining.

NAYS.—Fisher Ames, John Baptist Ashe, Egbert Benson, Elias Boudinot, Shearshub Bourne, Benjamin Bourne, John Brown, Abraham Clark, William Findley, Thomas Fitzsimons, Elbridge Gerry, William B. Giles, Nicholas Gilman, James Gordon, Andrew Gregg, William Barry Grove, Daniel Heister, Israel Jacobs, Philip Key, Aaron Kitchell, John W. Kittera, Amasa Learned, Richard Bland Lee, Samuel Livermore, Nathaniel Macon, Andrew Moore, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, Nathaniel Niles, John Page, Josiah Parker, Cornelius C. Schoonmaker, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, John Steele, Peter Sylvester, Thomas Tredwell, Abraham Venable, Jeremiah Wadsworth, Artemas Ward, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willis.

And then the question being put to agree to the said amendment first proposed, it passed in the negative—Yeas 25, Nays 33, as follows:

YEAS.—Fisher Ames, Egbert Benson, Shearshub Bourne, Benjamin Bourne, William Findley, Thomas Fitzsimons, Elbridge Gerry, Nicholas Gilman, James Gordon, Andrew Gregg, Daniel Huger, John W. Kittera, John Laurence, Amasa Learned, Samuel Livermore, Nathaniel Macon, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, William Smith, John Steele, Jonathan Sturges, Peter Sylvester, George Thatcher, John Vining, Jeremiah Wadsworth, and Artemas Ward.

NAYS.—John Baptist Ashe, Abraham Baldwin, Robert Barnwell, Elias Boudinot, John Brown, Abraham Clark, William B. Giles, Samuel Griffin, William Barry Grove, Daniel Heister, Israel Jacobs, Philip Key, Aaron Kitchell, Richard Bland Lee, James Madison, Andrew Moore, William Van Murray, Nathaniel Niles, John Page, Josiah Parker, Cornelius C. Schoonmaker, Joshua Seney, Jeremiah Smith, Israel Smith, Samuel Sterrett, Thomas Sumpter, Thomas Tredwell, Thomas Tudor Tucker, Abraham Venable, Anthony Wayne, Alexander White, Hugh Williamson, and Francis Willis.

And then the said bill being further amended, it was, together with the amendments thereto, ordered to be engrossed, and read the third time on Monday next.

Mr. AMES, from the committee to whom was referred the memorial of Benjamin Lincoln, in behalf of himself, Cyrus Griffin, and David Humphreys, late Commissioners on the part of the United States for treating of peace with the Southern tribes of Indians, made a report; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

A petition of Daniel Freer was presented to the House and read, praying the renewal of certain loan office certificates, which were destroyed by fire. Referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, to examine the same, and report thereon to the House.

plained by an hypothesis which has been called extravagant, as it supposed the earth a hollow shell, with a nucleus within, revolving freely, and carrying round it the four points which he supposed attracted the magnetic needle, and gave it its direction—no theory, except Mr. C.'s, has been offered to the world, which solves so many phenomena of the variation of the needle, and bids fair to be of real use. I assisted (by the invitation of one of the committee of the first Congress at New York, to whom Mr. C.'s memorial was referred) in the examination of his theory respecting the finding the longitude of any place whose latitude is known, and where the variation is known, and I put it to the test in this manner. I gave Cook's voyages to one of the committee, and desired him to tell me the latitude of any place and the variation found there, and I calculated what the longitude ought to be according to the theory, and constantly found it to be nearly that stated in the voyage. The committee compared Mr. C.'s calculations of the longitude which they demanded of him, with that given by Cook, and found a wonderful agreement; and I have since seen many of Mr. C.'s comparisons of this sort, which agree with observations so nearly, as to justify my assertion that the theory shows the ingenuity of Mr. C.; and I will add, that although it may not be generally applied to finding the longitude, because of the smallness of variation in some places, and other circumstances, yet it may be used in many places, if the truth of the theory be once established; and whatever can contribute to the discovery of longitude at sea must be worthy of encouragement. But granting that the variation of the needle could not be applied to the discovery of the longitude at sea, yet an easy and certain method of finding the variation is a most desirable thing, and of great consequence to geography, navigation, and surveying; and if Mr. C.'s theory be true, not only the variation, but the alteration of that variation, will be found by an easy calculation at any place whose longitude and latitude are known, and for any given time; and he puts the truth of his theory to the test, which few theorists have been willing to do, of a single experiment—a voyage to Baffin's Bay. The United States need not be ashamed to encourage the memorialist; the British Parliament encouraged voyages to ascertain the truth of Halley's theory; and, if I mistake not, when that was abandoned, it was supposed the poles of the earth influenced the needle; the Parliament offered twenty thousand pounds to any one who would go to the North pole, and at the expense of their Government the attempt has been made. But Mr. C. only requires that a voyage be made within fourteen degrees of that pole; and all I have asked is, that his memorial be referred to a committee to examine his theory, his calculations, and vouchers, respecting the probability of its truth, and the reasonableness of his petition. If the committee should think his theory worthy of the experiment, he proposes to establish its truth; and if this House should not think Congress authorized to grant money for that purpose, they may recommend Mr. C. and his theory to the patronage of the Legislatures of the sister States, whose authority and ability to enable the memorialist to prosecute his inquiries cannot be doubted, any more than their readiness to listen to a recommendation so worthy of Congress. On the other hand, should the committee be of opinion that Mr. C.'s is a wild project, and that his petition ought to be rejected, let the House, if satisfied with their report, confirm it by their unanimous vote. Where then is the danger of referring the memorial to the consideration of a committee? But if the House reject the motion for a reference, and the ingenious memorialist be obliged to apply to foreign countries, whose learned societies have already applauded his theory, and should there meet with encouragement, and be enabled to establish its truth, may we not be in danger of incurring the censure of the liberal and enlightened world?

Mr. CLARK made some observations on the subject. He said that the variation of the needle was already sufficiently understood by all land surveyors, otherwise they were not fit for their business; and with regard to any discoveries by sea, he had little hopes from them, after all the fruitless attempts which have been made by the ablest navigators and philosophers of Europe.

Mr. SENEY said, that there was a degree of attention due to all applications from men of genius, and as Mr. C.'s memorial comes supported by many respectable vouchers, it ought certainly to be referred to a committee; if Congress should not deem it proper to give him the aid he requires at present, perhaps it may be recommended to the next House to afford him encouragement.

Mr. WILLIAMSON said, it was the very same petition which had been before Congress the last session, when there were only three or four members who appeared to support it.

Mr. PAGE said it was not out of order to reconsider the subject; and to condemn it rashly, without a proper investigation, would be to render Congress ridiculous in the eyes of the world.

Mr. MURRAY hoped the House would appoint a committee. He was not in Congress when this subject was before decided against. This was a question on which he was incompetent to decide, but he could feel sufficiently for the literary reputation of the House, and the great interest of science, to believe, that to commit the matter to a committee would best comport with the dignity of the subject. Something more than was then submitted to the wisdom of Congress, is now brought forward; at least Mr. Churchman so alleges. Let those gentlemen who wish to have an opportunity of gratifying a laudable curiosity be indulged. When a man of science comes here with supposed discoveries in the active sciences, we owe it to the subject, to ourselves, and to human nature, to give his propositions fair play and mature consideration. We cannot do this without a reference to a committee. We ought to be cautious how we hastily decide on the views and experiments of philosophical applicants, and ought to take warning from the disgrace of other nations whom history has held up for their premature rejection of enterprises and schemes of science. Co-

LUMAS himself, to whom we owe our country, travelled about, a philosophical vagabond, through many Courts of Europe, and met with patronage at last out of his own country. There may be nothing solid in this projected scheme, but let gentlemen be indulged—it will be most decent.

The question for referring being taken, it was carried in the affirmative by a large majority, and a select committee appointed.

Mr. PAGE, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. WAYNE, were appointed said committee.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT, &c.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill sent from the Senate, entitled "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President, in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President: whereupon, Ordered, That the said bill, together with the amendments thereto, be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LAURANCE, from the committee appointed, presented, according to order, a bill to ascertain and regulate the claims to half-pay, and to invalid pensions; which was received and read twice and committed.

The House then proceeded to consider the report of the committee to whom was referred the memorial of Benjamin Lincoln, in behalf of himself, Cyrus Griffin, and David Humphreys, late Commissioners on the part of the United States for treating of peace with the Southern tribes of Indians, together with the report of the Secretary of War thereupon; and, after debate, an adjournment was called for and carried.

MONDAY, January 9.

THE POST OFFICE BILL.

The bill to establish Post Offices and Post Roads in the United States was read the third time. Mr. MURRAY moved to recommit the bill, in order to amend the section respecting newspapers, by reducing the postage on them to a half cent. Some opposition was made to this motion, and the question being put it was negatived.

The House then proceeded to fill up the blanks. The blank for the term of the contract was filled with "five years." Penalty for obstructing the transportation of the mail, $100. For negligence on the part of any ferryman, by which the mail may be delayed, $10 for every half hour. Advertisement for contract to be published twelve weeks. The blank for the Postmaster General's salary was filled with $2,000; that of the assistant, $1,000. The new rates of postage to commence the first day of March next. Penalty for exacting a greater rate of postage than that established by law, $100. Penalty for setting up posts for carrying letters, &c., in opposition to the General Post Office, $200; for continuing so to offend, $300 per week. For the deputy postmasters' neglect to account with the Postmaster General for way letters, $100. Penalty for unlawfully opening, detaining, or embezzling letters, packets, &c., by any person in the dered by General Greene to his country, must serve to give a keener sting to the regret, which ought ever to attend the necessity of a strict adherence to claims of public policy, in opposition to claims founded on useful acts of zeal for the public service, if no means of protecting from indigence and penury the family of that most meritorious officer shall, upon examination, be found admissible."

Mr. WAYNE rose and gave his reasons for supporting the petition, as follows:

Mr. Chairman: It may not be improper to mention the motives that impel me to wish a fortunate issue to the claim now under consideration of this Committee, which I must also offer as an apology for the part I have taken, or that I may eventually take, in support of the claim. From my first interview with General Greene until the moment of his dissolution, we always lived in the strictest habits of friendship and confidence. He was an officer with whom I had participated in almost every vicissitude of fortune, (in many a well-tried field,) from the frozen waters of the North to the burning sands of the South. He was a man whose virtues and talents I knew and revered; his noble soul would have revolted at the idea of imposition. He never would have offered in a claim to Congress, but upon the purest principles of honor and justice. I was a witness to the pressing necessity that compelled him to become the surety, for which indemnity is now claimed. He did what I would have done, (as second in command,) had he been absent at that trying crisis. The claim I know to be just, and I am decidedly of opinion that he was drawn into that security from the situation in which he was placed by Congress, as Commander-in-Chief of the Southern Department. Under these impressions, I beg leave to submit to the consideration of this Committee the resolutions now in my hand, and doubt not of their concurrent support.

"Resolved, as the opinion of this Committee, That the estate of the late Major General Nathaniel Greene ought to be indemnified for and on account of the engagements entered into by that General with certain persons in the State of South Carolina, for the purpose of obtaining supplies for the American Army, in the year 1783, and that — be granted to the Executors of the estate of the late Major General Nathaniel Greene, for that purpose."

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to bring in a bill in conformity to the foregoing resolution."

Mr. BOUNDNOT said, there was no greater friend to the memory of General Greene than he was, nor any person more anxious to have justice done to his widow and family; but he was apprehensive that the resolution proposed by the worthy gentleman who had first brought forward this subject was not drawn up in such a manner as to insure it a passage through both Houses of Congress. He wished, therefore, that it should be so expressed as to prevent any tedious discussion, and at the same time do ample justice. The Report of the Secretary of the Treasury puts the subject on the best footing. The motives which led him to make the contract were, first, the public good; and perhaps, secondly, to serve his friend,

Mr. Burnett, because he was his Aid-de-Camp, and he wished to put him in the way of being established in business after the war; but Mr. Burnett was never in any other way connected with General Greene than as a young man brought up in the family, whom he wished to patronize.

After a few other observations, Mr. BOUNDNOT moved to strike out the preamble of the resolution proposed by Mr. WAYNE, and to adopt words nearly in substance as follows:

"Resolved, That it is becoming the dignity of Congress to make compensation for the widow and orphans of the late Major General Greene, who so gloriously served his country; and that they be indemnified for the loss which his estate is likely to sustain by his having entered into certain bonds for supplying the Southern army with rations and clothing, at a time when they were threatening to disperse."

Mr. FINDLEY observed, that on the question as it is now stated, the Committee have a choice of three alternatives; the claim may be rejected, a pension or gratuity may be granted to the amount, or the claim of the petition may be granted as a matter of right, upon the footing of its own merits by a special law, as all authorized claims which Congress grant are given. Claims for which the standing laws are competent, do not come before us. I am in favor of the last alternative. I am against rejecting the petition; because, as the facts are stated in the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, General Greene putting himself in this situation of risk was from the most public-spirited motive: it was to support the public interest at a most important crisis, when the well-being, if not the existence of the Southern army was at stake, as well as the security of the inhabitants. If a Commander-in-Chief of an army may be ruined in his private affairs by making an unauthorized exertion to save his army or his country, the precedent may be dangerous; it may teach Commanders lessons of prudence, which may have ruinous effects. It is true, the necessity of the case must be such as will justify the unauthorized measure: from the Report, this appears to have been the case in the subject of the present debate. From the whole state of the facts before us, General Greene appears not to have had his own interest in view in this transaction, if the proof of this only lay between Banks and him. The established character of General Greene, not only as an officer, but as a man of integrity and public spirit, certainly cannot sink when laid in the balance with the secret insinuation of an unprincipled speculator. Such has been my own opinion of General Greene's character, that I would certainly require other proofs than this before I would even indulge suspicions; but it does not rest upon this. We have Banks's own testimony to the contrary, and his partner, and we know it would have been the interest of Banks & Co. to have made the contrary appear: nay, we have such a cloud of witnesses, all concurring to the same point, as appears sufficient to remove doubts from the most scrupulous mind. Unauthorized accounts are admitted in settlements between the United States and the individual States, upon the principles of equity. I consider this as a case of the same nature, and will vote for it agreeably to this precedent. I consider granting the prayer of the petition in this manner, as an act of justice, not only to his estate, but to the memory of his character. But I object to granting the relief in the indirect way of a pension; it is not so safe to the public, nor so honorable to the heirs of General Greene. To the public it is highly dangerous as a precedent; it will operate as an opening wedge to other claims without limitation. Few indeed can have an unauthorized though just claim as Commanders-in-Chief of an army reduced to such a dilemma as originated the present question: but merit and distress are not confined to Commanders alone; they are to be found in every rank of citizens. The struggles during the late Revolution produced abundance of merit: we cannot look around in this House, nor in any large collection of citizens, but our eye meets with those who have claims of merit. We can scarcely be acquainted in any neighborhood, but we must be acquainted with such as have been reduced to distress by their meritorious exertions, either in the camp, in the cabinet, or by granting supplies. How many who have aided the public with their substance, have been obliged to part with the evidences of their meritorious claims for a temporary relief. Many of the aged, many widows and orphans, to my knowledge, labor in penury, and mourn in secret, on the account of such meritorious aids not being recompensed when they ought to have been; though this was owing to the public misfortune, yet the merit and sufferings were not the less. I am very sensible of the great merit of General Greene; it is so well known, and so generally acknowledged, on all hands, as to render it improper for me to enlarge thereon. But, superior as his merit was, if we grant a pension or relief not founded on a just claim, merit of a lower order must be also admitted: there is no distinguishing the shades. I have heard of claims on the footing of merit brought before Congress, supported by such arguments as would induce a stranger to think that nearly all the merit of accomplishing the Revolution was centered in the claimant. If merit is to be rewarded by pensions, we shall soon have claimants in abundance. In the exercise of supreme command, difficulties often arise which render exertions necessary for which general rules cannot be provided; these have been generally treated as objects of indemnification. Many claims are now before Congress; they are various in their nature, and no doubt a number of them will be admitted; but from every view I have taken of the claim before us, I think the present as strongly addresses our justice and sympathy as any of them.

H. OF R.]

Petition of Catharine Greene.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Mr. WAYNE thought it necessary to make some observations upon what had fallen from the gentleman on his right, [Mr. BOURNOUT.] In order to place this subject in a proper point of view, he begged leave to mention certain circumstances previous to the evacuation of Charleston. Some of the first characters in South Carolina obtained a flag from General Greene, to meet a deputation of merchants and others under a flag from the British lines. Those merchants were anxious to remain after the army, for the purpose of disposing of their stock in trade, and wished for a reasonable time to transact that business; this indulgence was readily granted, for it was thought an object of consequence to retain supplies for the use of the country as well as for the army: and they were permitted to continue in the place for the space of twelve months after the abandonment should take effect. Assurances were also given them for the inviolable protection of their persons and property for that period. Thus sanctioned, they were probably induced to speculate upon such stores as the British army could spare, (for that army was redundantly supplied,) whilst the Americans were experiencing almost every possible distress for want of the common necessities of life. About this time, hopes were entertained of the speedy appearance of a superior marine force from the French West Indies, to that of the British; and the operating army under my command was advanced to the quarter-house, in a position to prevent the enemy from embarking with impunity, and to protect the town and its inhabitants from depredation and insult. This manœuvre had the desired effect: it created a jealousy in the British General for the safety of his rear, and General Leslie was, in a manner, compelled to come into a Convention, more resembling a capitulation than an abandonment, for he was under the necessity to "agree not to commit any insult upon the inhabitants, or depredation on their property, or damage to the city, at or after his embarkation." The word after caused some demur; but it was insisted upon and complied with, in consequence of the orders I had previously received from General Greene; a measure which at once afforded security to the inhabitants, and a flattering prospect of full supplies, as well for the citizens as for the army.

The gentleman [Mr. BOURNOUT] says—How are we to distinguish between the articles and necessities that were actually made use of by the army, and of the other goods purchased of the British merchants? This may be fully answered and explained by mentioning this fact: that those merchants took advantage of their situation, and would not dispose of any article suitable for the army, unless their whole stock were purchased together; having but twelve months to dispose of their goods and collect their debts. Nor could the necessary articles be obtained at the point of the bayonet, as the merchants were protected by a compact made under the sanction of a flag. Nor would they trust the contractor Banks with their property, unless General Greene became his security; by which act, in their opinion, the United States would be bound in honor to fulfil a contract made by their Commanding Officer; nor did General Greene come into the measure until compelled by dire necessity, to prevent a mutiny and dissolution of the army. And such was the exhausted situation of the country in the vicinity of Charleston, that the Executive and the Legislature found it expedient to send a distance into the country to obtain supplies for themselves and the refugee families who were returning to the city after the evacuation: in fact, we were under the necessity of taking part of these very provisions, to prevent an instantaneous revolt.

JANUARY, 1792.]

Petition of Catharine Greene.

[H. OF R.]

But the gentleman [Mr. BOURNOUT] says that General Greene's private friendship for Major Burnett, who had been his Aid-de-Camp, was a peculiar inducement for his entering into that security, and that Major Burnett had mortgaged an island to General Greene as a collateral security. This, indeed, was an act of private friendship; but it was a subsequent transaction, and no ways connected with the former, nor is it amongst the charges. This was a private purchase by Major Burnett from Mr. John M'Queen, a gentleman well known in South Carolina; and it was thought to be a very advantageous purchase for Major Burnett at the time it was made, (although it has turned out otherwise,) but it was necessary for him to obtain security, previous to receiving titles. He applied to General Greene to become his security upon that occasion, which was complied with; and in that act he certainly displayed a superior degree of private friendship, and such as has already been found extremely injurious to his family; but it is by no means connected with the claim now under consideration.

The danger of establishing a precedent in future, unsupported by previous authority obtained from Congress, is also mentioned as an objection. Mr. Chairman, there never can be any danger of drawing this circumstance into precedent; for the page of History never did before, nor I believe ever will again, produce a similar precedent, i. e. an army facing and surmounting every difficulty and danger through a long and bloody contest, badly clothed and worse paid, and frequently destitute of the common necessities of life. Sir, it is for the honor of General Greene that we contend; and I am warranted in asserting, that he was not interested in the contract of Mr. Banks, otherwise than from the pure and virtuous motives of serving and saving his country. I therefore feel myself interested, and bound in honor to support and defend the character of my departed friend, and to demand this claim as a matter of right, and not of grace; and I have a confidence that the candor and justice of this Committee will induce them to adopt the principles of the resolutions submitted to their consideration.

Mr. SUMPTER:—With respect to the resolution as it now stands, I feel myself obliged to oppose it. Nothing that has fallen from the gentleman over the way [Mr. WAYNE] has convinced me that the measure is proper or just. It is necessary to be cautious in the manner of discussing a matter of so much delicacy. I rise, not to make any pointed objections that can in any degree injure the reputation of the officer, whose abilities I respect, or to hurt the feelings of his family or connexions. I suppose that no gentleman will decide in favor of the resolution without examining the merits of the case. The Committee will have that information which they shall deem to be requisite on the occasion. I am sorry to differ in opinion with the gentleman from Georgia, and am therefore disposed to make sacrifices of my own feelings of past injuries, and will not suffer to decide in conformity with the opinions of the people of the State of South Carolina, and in particular of the district which I have the honor to represent. In going into the investigation of this matter, I will give my reasons why I do not think the country, although in extreme distress, was in that deplorable situation which has been represented; neither was its credit reduced so low but that relief might have been obtained, and that so small an army might have been accommodated, had a proper application been made in time to the Government. The gentleman must therefore be mistaken in stating those circumstances; for if the proper documents be examined, it will appear that the army received very ample supplies from the same source, some months previous to the contract made by Mr. Banks, which must have been in November, or early in December, and previous to the evacuation of Charleston. Whether it was better to adopt the means used by General Greene, or those within the power of the Government, I shall not pretend to determine; but I have no doubt that the Government possessed both the means and the inclination to find supplies. The contract was first made by Banks in November or December, and General Greene did not become the guarantee until the April following: whether there were any reasons for preferring this mode to that of an application to Government, will perhaps appear in the course of the investigation.

Mr. Chairman, this contract has been considered to have operated rather as a misfortune, although it may have afforded a temporary relief; it was the occasion of much complaint, vexation, and distrust, rather than of conciliation: and that this discontent ran through the army is within the knowledge of several officers whose names could be mentioned. It is therefore necessary to bring the matter into the full view of the Committee, and to have recourse to the files of the public offices, before we agree to the resolution on the table. At the same time, it is my sincere wish to render justice to the family of the deceased in every reasonable accommodation; but it does not appear to me that the family is reduced to that disagreeable situation which has been represented. The large grants that have been made by the States of Georgia, North and South Carolina, are still in the possession of the heirs of the deceased, and I have been informed that a gentleman offered $30,000 for that granted by North Carolina, so late as last summer; neither have I heard that any distress has been levied upon any of these estates, or that they are so much affected, in reality, but that the claims made against them are rather of a nominal and visionary nature. But, admitting that General Greene was security for the United States, and that the operation had been beneficial, (which I deny); does it appear that executions have been levied to any considerable amount, or to such an extent as to justify the present application? To me it does not appear that this has been the case, neither do I believe that the estate has been reduced in the manner represented; and, whilst I say it, I honestly and sincerely hope it: under which impression, I can never accede to the resolution on the table.

H. or R.]

Petition of Catharine Greene.

[JANUARY, 1792.]

Mr. WADSWORTH: The gentleman last up has said many things to me utterly unintelligible, and others which directly militate with what has been said by the gentleman from Georgia. He has, however, declared that no real or supposed personal injury shall influence him in giving his opinion or vote. I hope, sir, he will not now feel or resent those real or supposed injuries. I do believe they are not real; and from my long and intimate acquaintance with General Greene, I had good opportunity to know him: a better man I never did know. That he had enemies is not to be wondered at: the nature of his command to the Southward was important, critical, and difficult, and he might be constrained to do things that necessity only would justify. If he has injured any man, he has atoned for it: neither the tongue nor pen of malice have been able to affix a stigma on his character. If I ever knew a man whose heart was pure and without guile, it was General Greene. Yet he had enemies: no man deserved them so little. More honest fame is due to no man. And if his fortune is to be sacrificed, and his family beggared, it is a consolation that his good name will last forever. Being one of his executors, I know something of his affairs; but it was with reluctance I rose, as my attachments to him and concern for his family render it extremely difficult for me to enter on the subject. The gentleman from South Carolina has told us he is acquainted with the affairs of the estates in the Carolinas, and has said they are without any executions against them, the bonds on good credit, and the family in no danger of poverty, &c. I can hardly allow, sir, that he is acquainted with the affairs of General Greene, even in South Carolina and Georgia; but if he is, I will ask him if he does not know that all the negroes from the South Carolina estate are sold, and that the land is totally unproductive? that Mr. Rutledge has prevented executions from taking the Georgia estate by his personal interference? that all the estates in Rhode Island and New Jersey are sold? and that the hope of the justice we now ask for has delayed the sale of all the rest, to satisfy his creditors—his Southern creditors?

The proofs and documents alluded to by the gentleman [Mr. SUMPTER] have been before Congress for several years, and the friends and executors of General Greene have challenged his enemies, in every part of the Union, to disprove them; and I hope no delay will now take place. The subject is fully before Congress. I hope justice will be done to the widow and orphans of the late General Greene, and that the investigation will now be finished; his honest fame vindicated and established, and his family saved from the ruin that awaits them.

Mr. HARTLEY, in support of Mr. WAYNE's motion, observed, that he had paid some attention to the report and the documents referred to in it, as well as the objections made to the resolutions un-

